

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

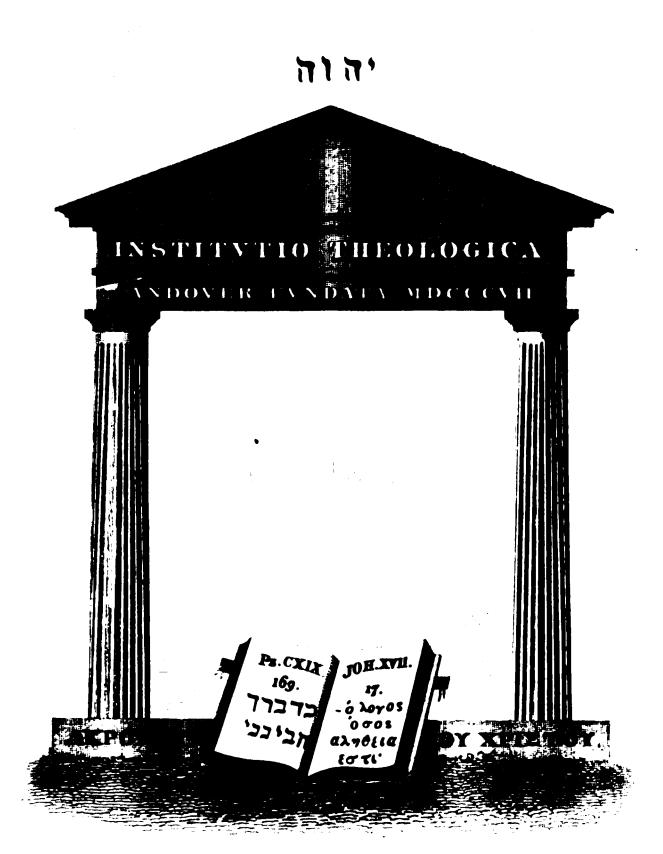

We also ask that you:

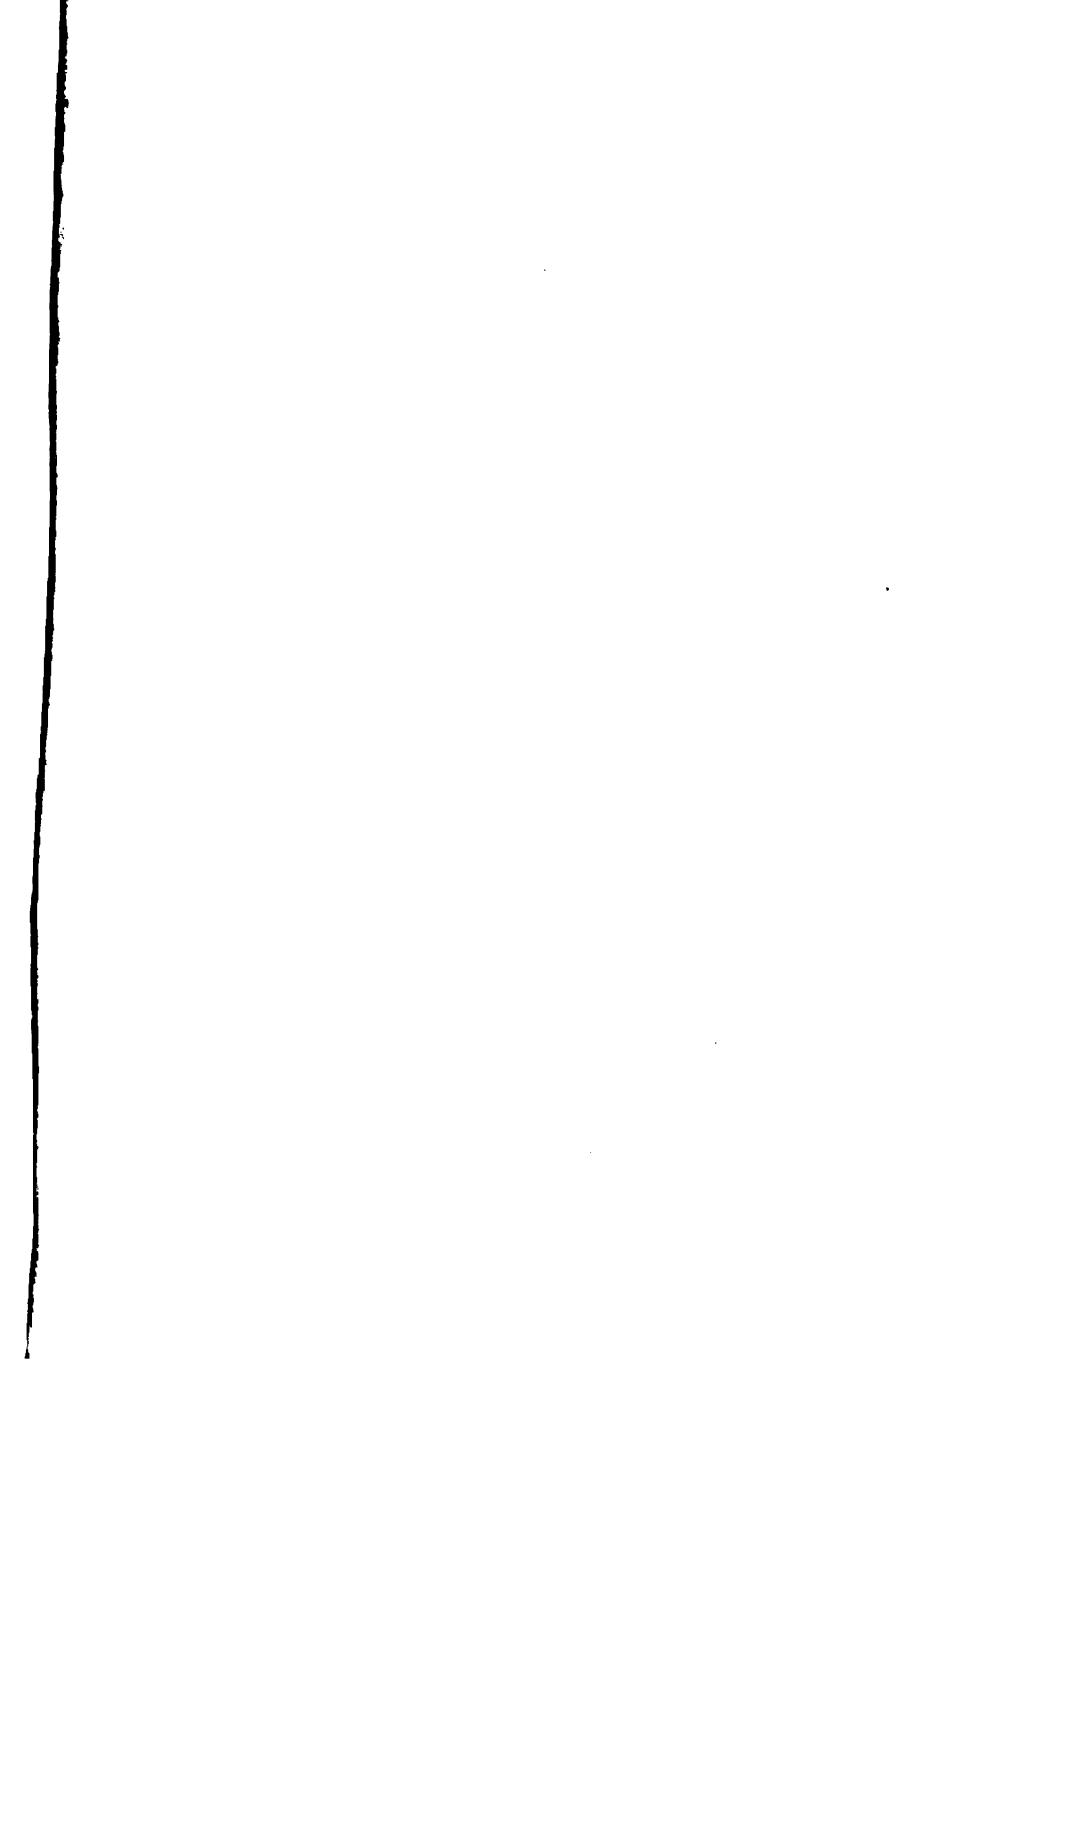

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

I. 1 In his first year, in spring, in the king's first month, the duke came to the [vacant] seat.

2 Chung-sun Meeh joined Lwan Yin of Tsin, Hwa Yuen of Sung, Ning Chih of Wei, an officer of Ts'aou, an officer of Keu, an officer of Choo, an officer of T'ang, and an officer of Seeh, in besieging P'ang-shing in Sung.

3 In summer, Han Keueh of Tsin led an army, and invaded Ch'ing. Chung-sun Mëeh joined Ts'uy Ch'oo of Ts'e, an officer of Ts'aou, an officer of Choo, and an officer of K'e, and halted, [with their forces], in Tsang.

4 In autumn, the Kung-tsze Jiu-foo of Ts'oo led a force, and made an incursion into Sung.

5 In the ninth month, on Sin-yew, the king [by] Heaven's [grace] died.

6 The viscount of Choo came to Loo on a court-visit.

7 In winter, the marquis of Wei sent the Kung-sun P'ëaou to Loo on a visit of friendly inquiries. So did the marquis of Tsin send Seun Ying.

Title of this Book.—爰公, 'Duke Sëang.' Duke Sëang's name was Woo (午). He was the son of duke Ching, and as we learn from the Chuen after IX. 6, at the time of his accession was only 4 years old. His mother was not the daughter of Ts'e, of whose marriage with Ching we have an account in his 14th year, but of a Sze (以), a lady of K'e, whose death appears in the 4th year. His posthumous title Sëang denotes—'Successful in his conduct of affairs (因事有功日衰).'

Sëang's 1st year synchronized with the 14th of king Këen (首王); the 1st of Taou (草) of Tsin; the 10th of Ling (氢) of Ts'e; the 5th of Hëen (意) of Wei; the 20th of King of Ts'ae; the 18th of Ch'ing (元) of Ch'ing; the 6th of Ch'ing (元) of Ts'aou; the 27th of Ch'ing of Ch'in; the 65th of Hwan of K'e; the 4th of Ping (子) of Sung; the 5th of King (异) of Ts'in; the 19th of Kung (#) of Ts'oo; and the 14th of Show-mung of Woo (吳壽夢). Par. 1. See on VIII. i. 1; et al.

Par. 2. The Chuen says:—'This year, in spring, on Ke-hae, there was the siege of Pangshing. It did not now belong to Sung;—the text calls it Sung's retrospectively. At this time [the States] were punishing Yu Shih for Sung, and therefore the city is called Sung's, and moreover the text would not sanction the exaltation of a rebel. The language has respect to the wishes of Sung [in the matter].

'P'ang-shing surrendered to Tsin, and the people of Tsin took the five great officers of Sung who were in it back with them, and placed them in Hoo-k'ew. The troops of Ts'e were not present at [the siege of] P'ang-shing, which Tsin thought was a ground for punishing [that State], and in the 2d month the eldest son of [the marquis of] Ta'e became a hostage in Tsin.'

According to Tso-she's own remarks in the above Chuen, the 宋 before 彭城 in this par. is Confucius' own,—an instance not of his pruning, but of his correcting pencil. But the reasons for his view are very shadowy. Ts'oo had not taken P'ang-shing from Sung, and appropriated it to itself. King Kung had indeed placed Yu Shih in it, as a thorn in the side of Sung, and had supplied him with a force to enable him to maintain his position, but he had not made him its ruler with the title of baron, or viscount, or any higher dignity. Nothing had occurred which should make the historiographers not speak of the city as Sung's.

Par. 8. Tsang was a city of Ching,—in the pres. Suy Chow, dep. Kwei-tih. It must not be confounded with the State of Tsang, V. xiv. 2; et al. For Kung-yang has H, and for

The Chuen says:—'In summer, in the 5th month, Han Keuch and Seun Yen of Tsin invaded Ching, with the forces of [several of] the States, and entered its outer suburbs. They defeated its infantry near the Wei. At this time the armies of the [other] States were halting at Tsang, waiting for the army of Tsin. When that came from Ching, it made a junction with them, and made an incursion into Tsëaou-e of Ts'oo, and into Ch'in. The marquis of Tsin and the marquis of Wei remained in Ts'eih, to render any aid that might be needed.'

Chaou P'ang-fei says on this paragraph:— 'Tsin, as chief among the States, invaded Ching many times. The reason why it thought it necessary to maintain its grasp of it with the forces of the other States was not the strength of Ching, but the fear of Ts'oo. Had there been no Ts'oo to come to the help of Ch'ing, Tsin might have penetrated to its outer suburbs with a small force. The manner in which it now took its measures in reference to Ching may be pronounced prudent and skilful. With Han Keuch alone attacking the capital of Ch'ing in front, and the soldiers of the five States ready to succour him in the rear, if the forces of Ts'oo did not come forth, the single Han Keuch was abundantly able to take the city; if they did come forth, the armies of the five States were sufficient to fight them without These arrangements showed the care with which Tsin made use of the other States, and did not lightly expose their people in bat-Therefore the sage by the terms "invaded" and "lialted" indicated his admiration of its measures in dealing with the offending Ch'ing. Expositors, regarding only the statement in the next paragraph, that an army of Ts'oo made an incursion into Sung, say that the States halted at Tsang to save Sung. But it was not till the autumn that Ts'oo made that incursion;—how should the States have halted here beforehand with a view to save Sung? Such a view shows no consideration of the order of the paragraphs. Moreover, Tsang was in the territory of Ch'ing; -- would they have halted in Ching to save Sung?

Par. 4. The Chuen says:—'In autumn, Tszesin of Ts'oo went to succour Ching, and made an incursion on Leu and Lew of Sung. Tsze-jen of Ching made an incursion into Sung, and took K'euen-k'ëw.'

Por. 5. This was king Keen (11). He was succeeded by his son, king Ling ().

Par. 6. Tso-she says this visit was 'proper,' -to congratulate, I suppose, the child-marquis on his accession.

Par. 7. The Chuen says:—'In winter Tszesliuh of Wei, and Che Woo-tsze of Tsin, came to Loo, with friendly inquiries; which was proper. On the accession of any prince, smaller States appeared [by their princes] at his court, and larger ones sent friendly missions;—for the continuance of their friendship, and cementing their good faith, to take counsel on affairs, and to repair deficiencies. These were the greatest of ceremonies.'

These courtesies to Loo, it must be supposed, were sent before the States had heard the news of the king's death, because after such an event there was an intermission for a time of those observances.

In the [duke's] second year, in spring, in the king's first II. month, there was the burial of king Këen.

An army of Ching invaded Sung. 2

In summer, in the fifth month, on Kang-yin, [duke Ch'ing's] wife, the lady Këang, died.

In the sixth month, on Kăng-shin, Kwăn, earl of Ch'ing, 4 died.

An army of Tsin, an army of Sung, and Ning Chih of Wei, 5 made an incursion into Ch'ing.

- In autumn, in the seventh month, Chung-sun Mëeh had a meeting with Sëun Ying of Tsin, Hwa Yuen of Sung, Sun Lin-foo of Wei, an officer of Ts'aou, and an officer of Choo, in Ts'eih.
- 7 On Ke-ch'ow, we buried our duchess, Ts'e Këang.

8 Shuh-sun P'aou went to Sung.

- In winter, Chung-sun Mëeh had a meeting with Seun Ying of Tsin, Ts'uy Ch'oo of Ts'e, Hwa Yuen of Sung, Sun Lin-foo of Wei, an officer of Ts'aou, an officer of Choo, an officer of T'ang, an officer of Sëeh, and an officer of Little Choo, in Ts'eih, when they proceeded to wall Hoo-laou.
- 10 Ts'oo put to death its great officer, the Kung-tsze Shin.

Par. 1. This burial, 5 months after death, was sooner than 'the rule' prescribed.

Par. 2. Acc. to Tso, this 'invasion' was merely 'an incursion,' at the command of Ts'oo.

[The Chuen appends here:—The marquis of Ts'e invaded Lae, the people of which sent Ching Yu-tsze to bribe Suh Sha-wei [Chief eunuch in Ts'e] with a hundred choice horses and as many oxen. On this the army of Ts'e returned. From this the superior man might know that duke Ling of Ts'e was indeed ling (A play on the meaning of the term as a post-humous epithet)].'

Par. 3. This was duke Ching's wife proper, called the 'wife-mother' ( )' of duke Sëang. The Chuen says:—'Before this, Muh Këang [Duke Ching's mother] had caused some fine këa trees to be chosen, to make for herself a coffin and a sung lute. Ke Wăn-tsze now took the coffin to bury Ts'e Këang in. The superior man will pronounce this proceeding contrary to propriety. Propriety admits of nothing unreasonable. A wife should nourish her mother-in-law;—nothing could be more unreasonable than to take from the mother-in-law to supply the wife. The ode (She, III. iii. ode II. 9.) says,

"There is indeed a wise man;—
I tell him good words,
And he yields to them the practice of docile virtue."

But Ke-sun in this showed himself not wise. And [Ts'e] Këang was the duke's mother. The ode (She, IV. i. Bk. ii. ode IV.), says,

"With spirits and sweet spirits,
To present to our deceased parents,
And in supply for all ceremonies;—
Very abundant is the blessing conferred upon us."

Par. 4. The Chuen says:—'Duke Ching of Ching was ill, and Tsze-sze begged him to ease his shoulder upon Tsin, but he said, "For the sake of Ching, the ruler of Ts'oo received an arrow in his eye. It was for me he underwent this, and for no other man. If I revolt from him, I cast away his efforts in our behalf and my own promise;—who in such a case would care for my friendship? It is for you, my officers, to save me from such a course." In autumn, in the 7th month, on Kang-shin, Kwan, earl of Ching, died.'

In this last sentence of the Chuen, Kängshin, the day of the earl's death, is said to have been in the 7th month, and not in the 6th as in the text. And the Chuen must be correct, for Käng-yin of par. 3 being in the 5th month, there cannot have been a Käng-shin day in the 6th. Acc. to Too's scheme of the calendar, Käng-shin was the 9th day of the 7th month.

There is no mention subsequently of the burial of the earl of Ch'ing; 'because,' acc. to K'aou K'ang, 'he had joined the party of Ts'oo, and the other States therefore did not observe the usual measures at his funeral.'

Par. 5. The Chuen says:—'At this time, Tsze-han [of Ch'ing] had charge of the State, Tsze-sze was chief minister, and Tsze-kwoh was minister of War. All the other great officers wished to give in the adhesion of the State to Tsin, but Tsze-sze said, "The charge to us officers is not yet changed."'

Tsin was now taking advantage of the death of the earl of Ch'ing to attack the State. The other officers wanted to submit to it, but Tszesze held that the charge of the deceased earl, that they should adhere to Ts'oo, was binding on them, till his successor should give them different instructions, and it was too early for him to have done so. To attack a State when suffering from the death of its ruler was contrary to the rule and practice of those times. The commentators have much to say on this point.

Par. 6. The Chuen says:—'This meeting at Ts'cih was to consult in reference to Ch'ing. Mang Hëen-taze (Mëeh) proposed that they should fortify Hoo-laou, to bring a pressure to bear on Ching. Che Woo-tsze said, "Good. At the meeting in Tsang (the year before), you [mentioned] some remarks of the minister Ts'uy which you had heard; and now he is not here. Neither have Tang, Seeh, and Little Choo come;—all in consequence of Ts'e's [disaffection], and to the grief of my ruler. I will report the thing to him, and we will ask Ts'e [to join in the fortification]. If it accede, and we give notice accordingly, the merit will be yours. If it do not accede, our business will lie in Ts'e. This proposal of yours is for the happiness of all the States. Not our ruler only is indebted to you for it."

Par. 7. The Chuen says:—'The marquis of Tse made the wives of all his great officers of his own surname come to Loo to attend the funeral. He sent for the viscount of Lae also to come; but he was not present. On this account Gan Joh walled Tung-yang to exert a pressure on Lae.'

Par. 8. Shuh-sun P'aou.—see the Chuen on VIII. xvi. 14. Tso says:—'This friendly mission of Muh-shuh (P'aou) to Sung was to open communications between it and the young marquis.'

Par. 9. Little Choo;—see V. vii. 2. The Chuen says:—'In winter there was a second meeting at Ts'eih, when Ts'uy Woo-tsze of Ts'e, and great officers of T'ang, Seeh, and little Choo were all present, in consequence of the words of Che Woo-tsze [at the former meeting]. They then proceeded to fortify Hoo-laou, and the people of Ch'ing tendered their submission [to Tsin].' Hoo-laou was a city which had belonged to Ch'ing, but was now held by Tsin. It was in the pres. dis. of Sze-shwuy, dept. K'ae-fung. The K'ang-he editors say that the fortifying of this city was 'grasping Ch'ing by the throat, so that it could not look towards the south.'

Par. 10. The Chuen says:—'The Kung-tsze Shin of Ts'oo was marshal of the right, and by means of the bribes which he received from many of the small States exercised a pressure on Tsze-chung and Tsze-sin till the people of Ts'oo put him to death. Hence the language of the text, "Ts'oo put to death its great officer, the Kung-tsze Shin."'

- III. 1 In the [duke's] third year, in spring, the Kung-tsze Ying-ts'e of Ts'oo led a force and invaded Woo.
  - 2 The duke went to Tsin.
  - 3 In summer, in the fourth month, on Jin-seuh, the duke and the marquis of Tsin made a covenant in Chang-ch'oo.
  - 4 The duke arrived from Tsin.
  - In the sixth month, the duke had a meeting with the viscount of Shen, the marquis of Tsin, the duke of Sung, the marquis of Wei, the earl of Ch'ing, the viscount of Keu, the viscount of Choo, and Kwang, heir-son of Ts'e; and on Ke-we they made a covenant together at Ke-tsih.

6 The marquis of Ch'in sent Yuen K'ëaou to be present at the meeting.

- 7 On Mow-yin, Shuh-sun P'aou, and the great officers of the various princes, made a covenant with Yuen K'ëaou of Ch'in.
- 8 In autumn, the duke arrived from the meeting.
- 9 In winter, Seun Ying of Tsin led a force, and invaded Heu.

Par. 1. We have here the commencement of those hostilities between Ts'00 and Woo, which did more than all the power of the northern States to repress the growth of Ts'00. Tsin had fostered the jealousy and ambition of Woo, until Ts'00 saw that the most prudent course for itself was to take the initiative in making war.

The Chuen says: - This spring, Tsze-chung of Ts'oo invaded Woo with an army selected for the purpose. He subdued Këw-tsze, and proceeded as far as mount Hang. Thence he sent Táng Lëaou to make an incursion into the country, with a force of 300 men, wearing buffcoats inequered as if made of strings, and 3,000, whose coats were covered with silk. The people of Woo intercepted and attacked him. Tang Lëaou himself was taken, and of the men whose buff-coats looked as if made of strings only 80 escaped, and of the others only 800. Tsze-chung had returned [to Ying]; and three days after he had drunk his arrival [in the ancestral temple], the people of Woo invaded Ts'oo, and took Këa. Këa was a good city, as Tang Lëaou was a good officer of Ts'oo. Superior men observed that what Tsze-chung gained in this expedition was not equal to what he lost. The people of Ts'00 on this account blamed Tsze-chung, who

Par. 1. We have here the commencement of was so much distressed, that he fell into mental tose hostilities between Ts'oo and Woo, which trouble, and died.'

Part. 2—4. Tso says that this court-visit was made as being proper on the duke's accession to the State. Of course the child was in the hands of his ministers, and did as they directed him. His guide at this time was Chung-sun Mëeh. As the duke had gone to the capital of Tsin, and the name of the place where the marquis and he covenanted is given, it is supposed by Too that the latter had courteously left the city, and met his young guest outside. Hence Yingtah says that Chang-ch'oo was a place near the wall of the capital of Tsin.

The Chuen says:—'At the covenant in Changch'oo, Mang Hëen-tsze directed the duke, who bowed with his head to the ground. Che Wootsze said, "The son of Heaven is alive; and for your ruler to bow his head to the ground before him makes my ruler afraid." Hëen-tsze replied, "Considering how our poor State stands there in the east, in proximity to our enemies, all our ruler's hope is in yours;—dare he but bow his head to the ground?"'

[The Chuen appends here:—'K'e He (see the Chuen after VIII. xviii. 3) asked leave to resign his office on account of age. The marquis of Tsin asked him about his successor, and he recommended Hëae Hoo, who was his enemy. Hoo, however, died, as he was about to be appointed, and the marquis consulted He again. He replied, "Woo (his own son) may do." About the same time Yang-sheh Chih died, and the marquis asked He who should take his place, when he replied, "Chih (Chih's son) will do." Accordingly K'e Woo was appointed tranquillizer of the army of the centre, and Yang-sheh Chih assistant to him.

The superior man will say that K'e He thus showed himself capable of putting forward good men. He recommended his enemy;—evidently no flatterer; he got his own son appointed;—but from no partiality; he advanced his subordinate;—but with no partizanship. One of the Books of Shang (Shoo, V. iv. 14) says,

"Without partiality, and without deflection, Broad and long is the royal path;"

—words which may be applied to K'e He. Hëae Hoo, was recommended; K'e Woo got his position; and Pih-hwa (Yang-sheh Ch'ih) got his office:—in the filling up of one office three things were accomplished. He was indeed able to put forward good men. Good himself, he could put forward those who were like him. The ode (She, II. vi. ode X. 4) says,

"They have the ability,
And right is it their actions should show it;"—

so was it with K'e He!']

Par. 5. Ke-tsih was in Tsin,—in the northeast of the pres. dep. of Kwang-ping, Chih-le. The Chaen says:—'In consequence of the submission of Ching, and wishing to cultivate the friendship of Woo, Tsin proposed to call a meeting of the States, and therefore [the marquis] sent Sze Kae to inform Ts'e, saying, "My ruler has sent me, because of the difficulties of every year, and the want of preparation against evils that may arise, [to say that] he wishes to have an interview with his brethren, to consult about the case of States that are not in harmony with us, and begs your lordship to come to it. He has sent me to beg a convenant with you." The marquis of Ts'e wanted to refuse, but felt the difficulty of appearing to be among the discordant, and made a covenant [with Kae], beyond the E. In the 6th month, the duke met duke King of Shen and the various princes; and on Ke-we they made a covenant together at Ketsih. The marquis of Tsin sent Seun Hwuy to meet the viscount of Woo on the Hwae, who, however, did not come [to the meeting].

Most of the critics condemn this covenant on the ground that it was derogatory to the king to associate his representative, the viscount of Shen, in it. Too, however, and others think the viscount may have been specially commissioned to take part in it, to establish the leadership of duke Taou among the States. The heir-son of Ts'e was a hostage in Tsin (see on i. 2), and was therefore present at the meeting.

Parr. 6, 7. Here is another proof that the power of Ts'oo had received a check, and that the States which had adhered to it were now seeking the alliance of Tsin. The Chuen says:

—'Tsze-sin of Ts'oo, being made chief minister of the State, was exorbitant in his desire [for bribes] from the small States. [In consequence], duke Ching of Ch'in sent Yuen K'ëaou to the meeting [of the States], to seek for reconciliation and peace. The marquis of Trin made Ho Tsoo-foo inform the princes of it. In the autumn, Shuh-sun P'aou and the great officers of the [other] States made a covenant with Yuen K'ëaou;—on Ch'in's thus begging to tender its submission.' No stress is to be laid on the two in p. 7, as Kuh and Kung would do.

The Chuen appends here:—'Yang-kan, a brother of the marquis of Tsin, having thrown the ranks into confusion at K'cuh-leang (near Ke-tsih), Wei Këang (marshal of the army of the centre) executed his charioteer. The marquis was angry, and said to Yang-sheh Chih. "We assembled the States for our glory, and now this execution has been done on Yang-kan: -the disgrace is extreme. You must put Wei Këang to death without fail." Chih replied, "Këang is not a man of double purpose. He will avoid no difficulty in the service of his ruler, and will evade no punishment due to any offence he may commit. He will be here to state his case; why should you send such an order about him?" When he had done, Wei Këang arrived, gave a written statement to one of the [marquis's] attendants, and was about to fall upon his sword, but was stopped by Sze Fang and Chang Laou. The marquis read the statement, which said, "Formerly, being in want of servants, you gave to me this office of marshal. I have heard that in a host submission to orders is the soldier's duty, and that when the business of the army may require the infliction of death, not to shrink from inflicting it is the officer's reverential duty. Your lordship had assembled the States, and I dared not but discharge my reverential duty. If your lordship's soldiers had failed in their duty, and your officers in theirs, the offence would have been extreme. I was afraid that the death which I should incur would also extend to Yang-kan: I do not dare to escape from the consequences of guilt, for I was unable to give the necessary instructions previously, and proceeded to use the axe. My offence is heavy, and I dare not shrink from accepting the duc, so as to enrage your mind. Allow me to return, and die at the hands of the minister of Crime."

The duke ran out barefoot, saying, "I spoke out of my love for my brother; you punished in accordance with military law. I was not able to instruct my brother, which made him violate your great orders;—that was my fault; do not you render it still heavier. Let me presume to request this of you." The marquis [now] considered that Wei Këang was able by his use of punishments to aid [in the govt. of] the people. When then they returned from the service, he gave him a feast of ceremony, and made him assistant-commander of the new army]. Chang Laou was made marshal of the army of the centre, and Sze Foo was made scout-master.'

There follows another brief notice:—'The Kung-tsze Ho-ke, minister of War of Ts'oo, made an incursion into Ch'in, because of the revolt of that State].'

Par. 9. The Chuen says:—'Duke Ling of Heu adhered to Ts'oo, and was not present at the meeting in Ke-tsih. In winter Che Wootsze of Tsin led a force, and invaded Heu.'

IV. 1 In the [duke's] fourth year, in spring, in the king's third month, Woo, marquis of Ch'in, died.

2 In summer, Shuh-sun P'aou went to Tsin.

3 In autumn, in the seventh month, on Mow-tsze, [duke Ch'ing's] wife, the lady Sze, died.

4 There was the burial of duke Ch'ing of Ch'in.

- 5 In the eighth month, on Sin-hae, we buried our duchess, Ting Sze.
- 6 In winter, the duke went to Tsin.
- 7 A body of men from Ch'in laid siege to the capital of Tun.

The Chuen says:__'This spring, the army of Ts'oo, in consequence of the revolt of Ch'in, was still in Fan-yang. Han Heen-tsze was troubled about it, and said in the court [of Tsin], "When king Wan led on the revolted States of Yin to serve Show, he knew the time. It is different now with our course. Alas!"
In the 3d month, duke Ching of Chin diel; and when the people of Tsoo, who were then about to invade Chin, heard of the event, they stayed their movement. Nevertheless, the people of Ch'in would not hearken to Ts'oo's commands. When Tsang Woo-chung heard of it, he said, "Ch'm, thus refusing to submit to Ts'oo, is sure to perish. When a great State behaves with courteous consideration, not to submit to it would be deemed blameworthy in [another] great State; how much more must it be deemed so in a small one!" In summer, Pang Ming of Ts'oo made an incursion into Ch'in, because of the want of propriety which Ch'in had mani-fested.' The K'ang-he editors are indignant at the remarks which Is'oo's persistence in attack-ing Ch'in elicited from the two statesmen of Tsin and Loo. Now, they think, was the time to have taken the field in force against Ts'oo.

Par. 2. Tso-she thinks this visit of P'aou to Tsin was in return for that of Seun Ying in the 1st year; but that courtesy of Tsin had been already more than responded to. We do not know what now took P'aou to Tsin.

The Chuen says:- 'Muh-shuh went to Tsin, in return for the friendly mission of Che Wootsze. The marquis gave him an entertainment; and when the bells gave the signal, [there were sung] three pieces of the Kac-hëa, but he made no bow in acknowledgment. The musicians then sang the first three pieces in the first Book of the Greater odes of the kingdom; but neither did he bow in acknowledgment of these. They sang finally the first three pieces in the 1st Book of the Minor odes, in acknowledgment of which he bowed three times. Han Heen-tsze sent the internuncius Tsze-yun to him, saying, "You have come by the command of your ruler to our poor State. We have received you with the ceremonies appointed by our former rulers, adding the accompaniment of music. Where the honour was the greatest, you overlooked it; and where it was the least, you acknowledged it:-I presume to ask by what rules of propriety you were guided." The envoy replied, The first three pieces were those proper to an occasion when the son of Heaven is entertaining a chief among the princes; I did not presume to seem as if I heard them. The second three were those proper to the music at an interview between two princes; I did not presume to appear as if I had to do with them. But in the first of the last three, your ruler was complimenting mine; -I could not but presume to acknowledge the compliment. In the second, your ruler was cheering me for the toil of my embassy;—I dared not decline deeply to acknowledge [his kindness]. In the third, your ruler was instructing me, and telling me to be prosecuting my inquiries among the good.

have heard that to inquire about goodness is [the proper] questioning; to inquire about relative duties is [the proper] seeking for information; to inquire about propriety is [the proper] deliberation; to inquire about governmental affairs is [the proper] consultation; to inquire about calamities is [the proper] devising:—thus I obtained five excellent instructions, and I dared not but deeply to acknowledge [the favour]."

Parr. 8, 5. Here Kung-yang makes the surname of the lady to have been and not to.

It is plain from the Chuen that she was the mother of duke Seang. The death of duke Ch'ing's wife—Ts'e Këang—appears in the second year. The Sze could only have been a concubine; yet she appears here as if she had been his wife, and was buried as such. The K'ang-he editors cannot help calling attention to this impropriety, and they suppose that the entries were made just to call attention to it! The whole thing is the more remarkable, as it appears from the Chuen that it was not thought necessary at first to bury Ting Sze with any dietinguished ceremonies at all. It says:—'In autumn, Ting Sze died, and [it was proposed] that her coffin should not be carried into the ancestral temple on occasion of her interment; that there should be no [double] coffin; and that the subsequent ceremony of lamentation should be omitted. The artificer K'ing said to Ke Wān-tsze, "You are our chief minister, and in making the funeral rites of the duchess thus incomplete, you are not doing your duty to our ruler. When he is grown un who will receive the blame?"

up, who will receive the blame?"

'Before this, Ke-sun had planted for himself six këa trees in the P'oo orchard outside the east gate. K'ing asked him for some trees [to make the coffin], and when he gave a half assent, the other used the këas in that orchard, without Ke-sun's forbidding him. The superior man will say, "Might not what we find in an [old] book, that he who is guilty of many breaches of propriety will find his conduct recoil upon himself, be spoken of Ke-sun?" The funeral must have been hurried on.

Par. 4. The State of Chin had revolted from Ts'00, and was now on the side of Tsin. Loò in consequence, as one of the northern party, now sent an officer to be present at the burial of the marquis.

Par. 6. The Chuen says:—'The duke now went to Tsin, to receive its orders (as to the services to be rendered to the leading State). The marquis of Tsin entertained him, and the duke requested that Tsäng might be attached to Loo. The marquis not agreeing to this, Mang Höentsze said, "Our ruler in Loo is in proximity to your adversaries, and wishes to serve your lordship firmly, without failing in any of the requirements of your officers. Tsäng contributes no levies to your minister of War. Your officers are continually laying their commands on our poor State, which being of small dimensions is liable to fail in discharging them, and may be charged with some offence. Our ruler therefore wished to borrow the assistance [of Tsang]." On this the marquis assented to the application.'

Par. 7. 'Tun,—see V. xxv. 5. It was one of the many small States acknowledging the supremacy of Ts'oo. The Chuen says:—'The people of Ts'oo made Tun watch for opportunities in Ch'in, and attack it or make inroads into it. In consequence, the people of Ch'in laid siege to its principal city.'

The Chuen gives here a long narrative about Tsin and the Jung. 'Këa-foo, viscount of Woochung (a tribe of the Hill Jung) sent Mang Loh to Tsin, and through Wei Chwang-tsze (Wei Këang) presented a number of tiger and leopard skins, begging that Tsin would agree to be in harmony with the various tribes of the Jung. The marquis said, "The Jung and Teih know nothing of affection or friendship, and are full of greed. The best plan is to attack them." Wei Këang said, "The States have only recently declared their submission to Tsin, and Ch'in has recently sought our friendship. They will all be watching our course. If that be one of kindly goodness, they will maintain their friendship with us; if it be not, they will fall off and separate from us. If we make a toilsome expedition against the Jung, and Ts'oo [in the mean time invade Ch'in, we shall not be able to relieve that State;—we shall be throwing Chin away. The States also will be sure to revolt from us;—shall we not be acting an impolitic course, if we lose the States, though we gain the Jung? And in the Book of Instructions of Hea (Shoo, III. iii. 2) mention is made of "E, prince of K'eung." The marquis said, "What about the prince E?" He replied, "Formerly, when the princes of Hëa were in a decaying State, prince E removed from Seu to K'ëung-shih, and took advantage of [the dissatisfaction of] the people to supersede the line of Hea. Relying [afterwards] on his archery, he neglected the business of the people, and abandoned himself to the pursuit of the beasts of the plains. He put away from him Woo Lo, Pih Yin, Hëung K'wan, and Mang Yu, and employed Tsuh of Han. This Tsuh was a slanderous scion of the House of Pih-ming, prince of Han, who cast him out. E, [prince of Këung], received him, trusted him, and made him his chief minister. Tsuh then fell to flattering all inside the palace, and gave bribes to all outside it. He cajoled the people, and encouraged E in his fondness for hunting. He plied more and more his deceit and wickedness to take from E his kingdom, until inside and outside the palace all were ready to acknowledge him. Still E made no change in his ways; and as he was [on one occasion] on his return from the field, his own servants killed him, boiled him, and gave his flesh to his sons to eat. They could not bear to eat it, and all died in the gate of K'ëung. Mei then fled to the State of Yëwkih. Tsuh took to himself E's wife, and by her had Këaou and He. Relying on his slanderous villanies and deceit, he displayed virtue in governing the people, and made Këaou with an army extinguish the States of Chin-kwan and Chin-sin. He then placed Kësou in Ko (), and He in Ko (大). [In the meantime], Mei went from Yëw-kih, and collected the remnant of the people of those two States, with whom he extinguished Tsuh, and raised Shaou-k'ang to the throne. Shaou-k'ang extinguished Kësou in Ko, and [his son], the sovereign Ch'oo, extinguished He in Ko. The princes of K'ëung thus perished because they had lost the people. Formerly, in the times of our own Chow, when Sin Këah was grand historiographer, he ordered each of the officers to write some lines reproving the king's defects. In the lines of the forester it was said,

'Wide and long Yu travelled about,
When the nine regions he laid out,
And through them led the nine-fold route.
The people then safe homes possessed;
Beasts ranged the grassy plains with zest.
For man and beast sweet rest was found,
And virtue reigned the empire round.
Then took E E the emperor's place,
His sole pursuit the wild beasts' chase.
The people's care he quite forgot.
Of does and stags alone he thought.
Wars and such pastimes kings should flee;
Soon passed the power of Hea from E.
A forester, these lines I pen,
And offer to my king's good men.'

Such were the lines of the forester;—is there not matter of admonition in them?" At this time the marquis of Tsin was fond of hunting. and therefore Wei Këang took the opportunity to touch on the subject. The marquis then said, "Well then, will it not be our best plan to be on good terms with the Jung?" Këang replied, "To be on good terms with the Jung has five advantages. The Jung and Teih are continually changing their residence, and are fond of exchanging land for goods. Their lands can be purchased;—this is the first advantage. Our borders will not be kept in apprehension. The people can labour on their fields, and the husbandmen complete their toils;—this is the second. When the Jung and Teth serve Tsin, our neighbours all round will be terrifled, and the States will be awed and cherish our friendship;—this is the third. Tranquillizing the Jung by our goodness, our armies will not be toiled, and weapons will not be broken;—this is the fourth. Taking warning from the sovereign E, and using only measures of virtue, the remote will come to us, and the near will be at rest;—this is the fifth." The marquis was pleased, and sent Wei Këang to make a covenant with all the Jung. He also attended to the business of the people, and hunted [only] at the proper seasons.'

There is another narrative regarding Loo and Choo:—'In winter, in the 10th month, a body of men from Choo and another from Keu invaded Tsäng. Tsäng-sun Heih succoured Tsäng, and made an incursion into Choo, when he was defeated at Hoo-t'ae. The people of the State went to meet the dead [who were being brought back], and all had their hair tied up with sack-cloth. It was now that this style commenced in Loo. The people sang these lines on the occasion:-

"The fox-fur robe of Tsang, Caused our loss at Hoo-t'ae.
Our ruler a child;
Our general a dwarf.
O dwarf, O dwarf,
You caused our defeat in Choo!"']

V. 1 In his fifth year, in spring, the duke arrived from Tsin.

In summer, the earl of Ching sent the Kung-tsze Fah to Loo on a mission of friendly inquiries.

3 Shuh-sun P'aou and Woo, heir-son of Tsang, went to Tsin.

4 Chung-sun Mëeh and Sun Lin-foo of Wei had a meeting with Woo at Shen-taou.

5 In autumn, there was a grand sacrifice for rain.

6 Ts'oo put to death its great officer, the Kung-tsze Jin-foo.

The duke had a meeting with the marquis of Tsin, the duke of Sung, the marquis of Ch'in, the marquis of Wei, the earl of Ch'ing, the earl of Ts'aou, the viscounts of Keu, Choo, and T'ang, the earl of Seeh, Kwang, heir-son of Ts'e, an officer of Woo, and an officer of Tsang, in Ts'eih.

8 The duke arrived from the meeting.

9 In winter, we went to guard Ch'in.

10 The Kung-tsze Ching of Ts'oo led a force, and invaded Ch'in.

The duke joined the marquis of Tsin, the duke of Sung, the marquis of Wei, the earls of Ch'ing and Ts'aou, and Kwang, heir-son of Ts'e, in relieving Ch'in.

12 In the twelfth month, the duke arrived from the relief of Ch'in.

13 On Sin-we, Ke-sun Hăng-foo died.

Par. 1. [The Chuen appends here:—'The king sent Wang-shuh Ch'in-sang to accuse the Jung to Tsin. The people of Tsin seized and held him prisoner, while Sze Fang went to the capital, to tell how Wang-shuh was playing double with the Jung.']

Par. 2. Tso-she says:—'This mission of Tsze-kwoh of Ching was to open communication between Loo and the new earl of Ching.' The new earl of Ching had succeeded to that State in the duke's 2d year; he might have sent a mission to Loo before this, but through Ching's long adherence to Ts'oo, its intercourse with the northern States had become irregular. Fah was son of duke Muh. and was styled Tsze-kwoh. He was the father of the famous Tsze-ch'an ( ).

Par. 3. The Chuen says:—'Muh-shuh (P'aou) procured an interview with [the marquis of] Tsin for the eldest son of [the viscount of] Tsang, in order to complete the attaching of Tsang [to Loo]. The style of the text, joining Shuh-sun P'aou and Woo of Tsang together, [without a conjunction between their names], exhibits the latter as a great officer of Loo.'

Par. 4. Shen-taou was in Woo. Kung and Kuh make the name A. It appears to have been in the pres. Sze-chow () ), dep. Fung-yang, Ngan-hwuy. The Chuen says:— 'The viscount of Woo sent Show-yueh to Tsin, to explain the reason of his not attending the meeting at Ke-tsih, and to ask for another opportunity of joining the alliance of the other States. The people of Tsin proposed on his account to assemble the States, and made Loo and Wei have a meeting with Woo beforehand, and convey to it the time of the [general] meeting. On this account Mang Hëen-tsze and Sun Wan-tsze had a meeting with Woo at Shen-taou.' The names of Chung-sun Mëeh and Sun Lin-foo are joined together like those of Shuh-sun Paou and the prince of Tsang in the previous par., because they went to Woo by orders of Tsin,—indeed, as its officers.

Par. 5. See on II. v. 7. Tso adds here that the sacrifice was offered because of a prevailing drought.

Par. 6. The Chuen says:—'The people of Ts'oo were inquiring into the cause of the revolt of Ch'in, and it was said, "It was in consequence of exorbitant demands upon it of our chief minister Tsze-sin;" and on this they put him to death. The words of the entry show that it was his covetousness [which brought his fate on Jin-foo]. The superior man will say that king Kung of Ts'oo here failed in his use of punishment. The ode (a lost ode) says;—

"The great way is level and straight; My mind is exact and discriminating. In deliberating on things which are not good,

We should collect the [wise] men to determine them."

He himself did not keep faith, and he put others to death to gratify his resentment;—was it not hard to have to do with him? One of the Books of Hëa (Shoo, II. ii. 14) says, "When one's good faith is established, he can accomplish his undertakings."'

Par. 7. The Chuen says:—'In the 9th month, on Ping-woo, there was a covenant at Ts'eih, the business being—the presence of Woo at the meeting, and giving charge [to the States] about the guarding of Ch'in. Muh-shuh, considering that to have Tsäng attached to Loo was not advantageous, made a great officer of Tsäng receive the charge [from Tsin] at the meeting.' This last sentence would seem to be added to explain the presence of a representative of Tsang at the meeting. As attached to Loo, that State could not be separately represented at such a time; but Muh-shuh thus publicly renounced the superiority which Loo had a short time obtained over it.

Par. 9. Not Loo alone sent forces to guard the territory of Chin; but the other States had also received orders from Tsin at Tsieh to do the same. There must have been a gathering of troops from several of them.

Parr. 10, 11. Between 曹伯 and 齊 the text of Kung and Kuh adds 苕子, 朱 子, 勝子,薛伯. The Chuen says:—'Tszenang became chief minister of Ts'oo, on which Fan Seuen-tsze said, 'We shall lose Ch'in. The people of Ts'oo, having found the cause of its disaffection and made Tsze-nang minister, are sure to change their ways with it. And they are rapid in their measures to punish. Chin is near to Ts'oo;—is it possible that the people, distressed morning and night, should not go to it? It is not ours to hold command of Chin. Let us let it go, as our best plan." In winter, the States commenced to guard the territory of Ch'in, and Tsze-nang invaded it. In the 11th month, on Këah-woo. [Isin and its allies, all] met at Shing-te to relieve it.'

Par. 13. The Chuen says:—'When Ke Wāntsze died, the great officers went to his coffining, and the marquis was present in his proper place. The steward had arranged the furniture of the house in preparation for the burial. There was not a concubine who wore silk, nor a horse which ate grain. There were no stores of money and gems, no valuable articles accumulated. The superior man hereby knows that Ke Wāntsze was loyal to the ducal House. He acted as chief minister to three dukes, and yet he had accumulated nothing for himself;—is he not to be pronounced loyal?

Wän-tsze was succeeded by his son Suh (百), known as Ke Woo-tsze (季章子).

VI. 1 In the [duke's] sixth year, in spring, in the king's third month, on Jin-woo, Koo-yung, earl of Ke, died.

In summer, Hwa Joh of Sung came a fugitive to Loo. 2

3 In autumn, there was the burial of duke Hwan of Ke.

The viscount of T'ang came to Loo on a court-visit.

The people of Keu extinguished Tsang.

In winter, Shuh-sun P'aou went to Choo.

Ke-sun Suh went to Tsin.

In the twelfth month, the marquis of Ts'e extinguished Lae.

Par. 1. Tso-she says:- 'When duke Hwan | of Ke died this spring, the announcement of his death was made with his name for the 1st time [on occasion of the death of a prince of Ke], the reason being that he and our dukes had covenanted together.' This canon is applicable in the case of the only previous notice which we have of the death of a prince of Ke, where no name is given;—see V. xxiii. 4. Generally, however, throughout the classic, it will not apply. E.g., in I. viii. 4, we have the name of the marquis of Ts'ae in the record of his death, though duke Yin had never covenanted with him. Again, in VIII. xiv. 7, we have the death of an earl of Ts'in without his name, tho' in ii. 10 there is the record of a covenant made by Loo with Ts'in.

Par. 2. The Chuen says:—'Hwa Joh of Sung (a grandson of Hwa Tsëaou, in the Chuen on VII. xii. 5) and Yoh Pe, were great companions sport together, and went on to revile one another. [Once], Tsze-tang (Yoh Pe), in a passion with the other, twisted his bow [-string] about his neck in the court. Duke Ping saw the thing, and said, "It would be strange if a minister of War, who is dealt with thus in the court, were equal to his office." He then drove Joh out of the State; and in summer he came, a fugitive, to Loo. Tsze-han, minister of Works, said, "To inflict different penalties on parties guilty of the same offence is improper punishment. What offence could be greater than [for Pe] to take it on himself [so] to disgrace [Joh] in the court?" [Accordingly he proposed] also to drive out Tsze-tang, who shot an arrow at his door, saying, "In a few days, shall you not be following me?"

Tsze-han then became friendly with him as before.'

Par. 3. Loo had not before this sent an officer to attend the burial of a prince of Ke. when young, and when grown up they made The State was small and at a distance. But duke Hwan had married a daughter of Loo, and Sze,—Ting-sze,—duke Sëang's mother, had been from Ke. These circumstances drew the States together more than had been the case before.

Par. 4. Tso says that this visit of duke Ching of Tang was the first on the part of Tang since duke Sëang's accession.

Par. 5. This calamity came upon Tsang, acc. to Tso-she, 'through its trusting in bribes,'—bribes which it had paid to Loo for its protection. Nothing could be plainer than the statement herethat Tsang was extinguished by Keu. Mention, however, is made, in the 4th year of duke Ch'aou, of Loo's taking Tsang, as if it had not been extinguished now. The language there can only be equivalent to 'Loo took from Keu what had formerly been Tsang.' Kung-yang, however, suggests another view of the 'extinguished' in the text;—that Keu now superseded the Sze line in Tsang by the son of a daughter of Tsang married to one of its scions. There is no necessity for this view, and no evidence of it.

Par. 6. Tso-she says:—'In winter, Muh-shuh went to Choo, with friendly inquiries, and to cultivate peace;'—after the battle of Foo-t'ae, in the end of last year.

Par. 7. Suh was the son of Häng-foo, and had succeeded to his father as chief minister of Loo. It would seem that it was necessary for him to get the sanction of the leading State to his appointment. The Chuen says:—'An officer of Tsin came to Loo to inquire about [the loss of] Tsang, and to reprove us for it, saying, "Why have you lost Tsang?" On this, Ke Woo-tsze went to Tsin to have an interview [with the marquis], and to hear his commands.'

The Chuen says:—'In the 11th Par. 8. month, the marquis of Ts'e extinguished Lac. through its reliance on the bribes [which it had offered to Ts'e], (see the Chuen after ii. 2). In the 4th month of the last year, when Tsze-kwoh of Ching came on his friendly mission to Loo (see v. 2), Ngan Joh fortifled Tung-yang, and proceeded to lay siege to the capital of Lae. On Këah-jin, he raised a mound round the wall, which was [gradually] brought close to the parapet. In the month [of this year] when duke Hwan of Ke died, on Yih-we, Wang Tsëaou (see the Chuen on VIII. xviii. 3), Ching Yu-tsze (see the Chuen after ii. 2), and the people of T'ang attacked the army of Ts'e, which inflicted on them a great defeat, and entered Lae on Ting-we. Fow-jow, duke Kung of Lae, fled to T'ang. Ching Yu-taze and Wang Tsëaou fled to Keu, where they were put to death. In the 4th month, Ch'in Woo-yu presented the most precious spoils of Lae in the temple of [duke] Seang. Ngan Joh laid siege to Tiang, and on Ping-shin, in the 11th month, he extinguished it. Lae was removed to E. Kaou How and Ts'uy Ch'oo superintended the laying out of its lands [anew].'

- VII. 1 In the [duke's] seventh year, in spring, the viscount of T'an came to Loo on a court-visit.
  - 2 In summer, in the fourth month, we divined a third time about the border sacrifice. The divination was adverse, and the victim was let go.

3 The viscount of Little Choo came to Loo on a court-visit.

4 We walled Pe.

5 In autumn, Ke-sun Suh went to Wei.

6 In the eighth month, there were locusts.

7 In winter, in the tenth month, the marquis of Wei sent Sun Lin-foo to Loo on a mission of friendly inquiries; and on Jin-sëuh [the duke] made a covenant with him.

3 The Kung-tsze Ching of Ts'oo led a force and besieged

[the capital of] Ch'in.

- In the twelfth month, the duke had a meeting with the marquis of Tsin, the duke of Sung, the marquis of Ch'in, the marquis of Wei, the earl of Ts'aou, and the viscounts of Keu and Choo, in Wei.
- 10 K'wăn-hwan earl of Ch'ing [set out] to go to the meeting; but before he had seen the [other] princes, on Pingseuh, he died at Ts'aou.
- The marquis of Ch'in stole away [from the meeting] to Ch'in.

Par. 1. See on p. 4 of last year.

Par. 2. See on V. xxxi. 3.5. There, however, the divination had been tried 4 times, while here the tortoise-shell was only consulted a 3d time; and it is understood that to divine thrice was in accordance with rule. But on this occasion, as we learn from the Chuen, the 3d divination was made after the equinox, when it was no longer proper to offer the border sacrifice. The Chuen says:—'On this occasion, Mang Hëen-tsze said, "From this time forth I know the virtue of the tortoise-shell and the milfoil. At this service we sacrifice to Howtseih, praying for a blessing on our husbandry. Hence the border sacrifice is offered at the season of K'e-chih (the emergence of insects from their burrows; see on II. v. 7), and afterwards the people do their ploughing. Now the ploughing is done, and still we divined about the border sacrifice. It was right the divinations should be adverse.

Par. 3. Like p. 1. See on p. 4 of last year. Par. 4. Pe was the city belonging to the Ke or Ke-sun clan;—its name remains in the district so called, dep. of E-chow. The old city was 20 le north-west from the pres. dis. city. Pe was granted originally by duke He to Ke Yëw, the founder of the Ke clan;—see the Chuen on V. i. 9. The Chuen says:—'Nan E was commandant of Pe, and Shuh-chung Ch'aoupili was superintendent of workmen. Wishing to be on good terms with Ke [Woo-tsze] and to flatter Nan E, he proposed to him to ask that Pe might be fortified, saying that he would allot a great number of workmen for the undertaking. On this the Head of the Ke clan fortified Pe.'

This event deserved record, as illustrating the gradual increase of the power of perhaps the most influential family in Loo.

Par. 5. Tso-she says this visit to Wei was in return for that of Tsze-shuh or Kung-sun P'ëaou in the duke's 1st year, to explain the delay that had taken place, and assure Wei that it was from no disaffection. Maou thinks it unreasonable to suppose that we have here the response to a visit seven years before; what really occasioned it, however, he cannot tell.

Par. 6. See II. v. 8; et al.

[The Chuen appends here:—'In winter, in the 10th month, Han Hëen-tsze announced his [wish to retire from duty on account of] age. [His son], Muh-tsze (Han Woo-ke; see the Chuen after VIII.xviii. 3), the Head of one of the branches of the ducal kindred, had an incurable disease; and when it was proposed to appoint him his father's successor, he declined [the office] saying, "The ode says (She, I. ii. ode VI. 1):—

'Might I not have been there in the early morning?

I said, "There is too much dew on the path."

And another says (She, II. iv. ode VII. 4):—

'Doing nothing personally and by himself, The people have no confidence in him.' I have not the ability [for the place]; may I not decline it in favour of another? I would ask that K'e (his younger brother) may be appointed. He associated much with T'ëen Soo, and may be pronounced a lover of virtue. The ode says (She, II. vi. ode III. v.):—

'Quietly fulfil the duties of your office, Loving the correct and upright. So shall the Spirits hearken to you, And increase your brilliant happiness.'

A compassionate attendance to the business of the people is goodness. The rectification of one's-self is real rectitude. The straightening of others crookedness is real correctness. These three things in harmony constitute virtue. To him who has such virtue, the Spirits will listen, and they will send down on him bright happiness. Would it not be well to appoint such an one?"

'On Kang-seuh, [Han Heen-tsze] made [his son], Seuen-tsze appear in court before the marquis, and then retired from office himself. The marquis, considering [also] that Han Wooke was possessed of high virtue, appointed him director of the Heads of all the branches of the ducal kindred].'

The Chuen says:—'Sun Wan-tsze Par. 7. came on a friendly mission; to acknowledge also the [satisfactory] language of Woo-tsze (on his mission to Wei in autumn); and to renew the covenant of Sun Hwan-tsze (in the third year of duke Ching; see VIII.iii. 18). When the duke was ascending the steps, he ascended them along with him, on which Shuh-sun Muhtaze (P'aou), who was directing the ceremonies, hurried forward, and said, "At meetings of the States, our ruler has never followed after yours; and now you do not follow after our ruler;—he does not know wherein he has erred. Be pleased, Sir, to be a little more leisurely." Sun-tsze made no reply, and did not change his deportment. Muh-shuh said, "Sun-tsze is sure to perish. For a minister to play the part of a ruler, to do wrong and not change one's conduct, are the first steps to ruin. The ode says (She, I. ii. ode VII.);

'They have retired to their meals from the court;

Easy are they and self-possessed.

It speaks of officers acting naturally as they ought to do; but he who assumes such an appearance of ease in a cross and unreasonable course is sure to be broken."

Parr. 8, 9. For Ex Kuh-leang has Ex. The place was in Ching. The Chuen says:— Tszenang of Ts'oo having laid siege to the capital of Chin, there was the meeting at Wei to succour it.' The meeting came to nothing, as we shall see, and thenceforth there was an end of any adherence to the northern States on the part of Chin.

Par. 10. For 髡顏 Kung and Kuh have 髡原; and for 鄵 they have 操. Ts'aou was in Ch'ing. The Chuen says:—' When duke He of Ching was [only his father's] eldest son, in the 16th year of duke Ching he went with Taze-han to Tain, and behaved improperly. He did the same in Ts'oo, to which he had gone with Tsze-fung. In his first year, when he went to the court of Tsin, Tsze-fung wished to accuse him to the marquis, and get him displaced, but Tsze-han stopped the attempt. When he was proceeding to the meeting at Wei, Tsze-sze was with him as director, and to him also he behaved with impropriety. His attendants remonstrated, but he did not listen to them. They repeated their remonstrance, and he put them to death. When they got to Ts'aou, Tsze-sze employed some ruffians to kill the duke, and sent word to the States that he had died of fever. [His son], duke Këen, though but 5 years old, was raised to be earl.'

Chaou K'wang and some other critics deny the account of the earl's murder which is given in the Chuen (and also by Kung and Kuh), and suppose from the language of the text, that he died a natural death. There can be no doubt, however, that the truth is to be found in the Chuen.

Par. 11. The Chuen says:—'The people of Ch'in were troubled by [the action of] Ts'oo; and [while the marquis was absent at Wei], K'ing Woo and K'ing Yin proposed to the commander of Ts'oo's army that they should send the Kung-tsze Hwang to it, to be held as a prisoner This was agreed to and acted on; and the two K'ing then sent to the marquis at the meeting, saying, "The people of Ts'oo have seized and hold your brother Hwang. If you do not at once come back, your ministers cannot bear to see the impending fate of our altars and ancestral temple. We fear there will be two plans [for the future in debate]." On this the marquis stole away back.'

VIII. 1 In his eighth year, in spring, in the king's first month, the duke went to Tsin.

2 In summer, there was the burial of duke He of Ch'ing.

A body of men from Ch'ing made an incursion into Ts'ae, and captured duke [Chwang's] son, Sëeh.

4 Ke-sun Suh had a meeting with the marquis of Tsin, the earl of Ch'ing, an officer of Ts'e, an officer of Wei, and an officer of Choo, in Hing-k'ëw.

5 The duke arrived from Tsin.

6 A body of men from Keu invaded our eastern borders.

In autumn, in the ninth month, there was a grand sacrifice for rain.

8 In winter, the Kung-tsze Ching of Ts'oo led a force, and invaded Ching.

9 The marquis of Tsin sent Sze Kae to Loo on a mission of friendly inquiries.

Par. 1. The duke was at the meeting of Wei the month before this, and now went on to Tsin, without first returning to Loo. He went to Tsin, says Tso-she, 'on a court-visit, and to hear how often such visits, and visits of friendly inquiry, should be paid.' From the Chuen after X.iii. 1, we learn that, when dukes Wan and Seang of Tsin led the States, the rule was that the other princes should appear in the court of Tsin once in 5 years, and send a friendly mission once in 3 years. This rule had ceased to be observed, and duke Taou was now encouraged by his strength and success to regulate anew the relations between his own and other States.

Par. 2. The K'ang-he editors observe that Par. 2. The K'ang-he editors observe that the classic, having given above the death of the earl of Ching as it had been announced to Loo, —a natural death, and not a murder,—was now bound to give his burial. I suppose the burial is recorded, because it took place, and was attended by an officer of Loo.

tended by an officer of Loo.

[The Chuen adds here:—'The sons of previous earls of Chring, in consequence of the death of duke Hc, were planning to take off Tsze-sze, when he anticipated their movement. On Kang-shin, in the 4th month, this summer, on some charge of guilt, he put to death Tsze-hoo, Tsze-he, Isze-how, and Tsze-ting. Sun Keih and Sun Goh (sons of Tsze-hoo) fied to Wei'].

Par. 8. Here and afterwards Kuh-leang has, for 境, 湿, which he interchanges with 湿.

The Chuen says: — 'On Käng-yin, Tsze-kwoh and Tsze-urli made an incursion into Ts'ae, and captured its minister of War, duke [Chwang's] son Sech. The people of Ching were all glad, with the single exception of Tsze-ch'an, who said, "There can be no greater misfortune to a small State than to have success in war while there is no virtue in its civil administration. When the people of Ts'oo come to punish us [for this exploit], we must yield to their demands. Yielding to Ts'oo, the army of Tsin is sure to come upon us. Both Tsin and Ts'00 will attack Ching, which, within 4 or 5 years, will have no quiet." Tsze-kwoh (his father) was angry, and said to him, "What do you know? The expedition was a great commission of the State, and conducted by its chief minister. If a boy like you talk about it so, you will get into disgrace."

Par. 4. Hing-k'ëw was in Tsin,—70 le to the south-east of the dis. city of Ho-nuy, dep. Hwaeking, Ho-nan. The Chuen says:—'In the 5th month, on Keah-shin, [the marquis of Tsin] held a meeting at Hing-k'ew; to give out his rules about the times for appearing at his court, and for friendly missions, when he made the great officers attend to receive his orders. [Our] Ke-sun Suh, Kaou How of Ts'e, Hëang Seuh of Sung, Ning Chih of Wei, and a great officer of Choo, were present. The earl of Chring presented the spoils [of Ts'ae] at the meeting, and so received the charge of Tsin in person. The names of the great officers are not given, in deference to the marquis of Tsin.' The Chuen on the 1st par. says that the duke went to Tsin to receive the instructions of that court about the relations between the States and it. He was not present, however, at Hing-k'ëw; and the earl of Ching was present only through his own forwardness, and wish to pay court to Tsin. The marquis of Tsin seems to have felt that, if he assembled the princes in person at Hing-kew, the proceedings would approximate too closely to a usurpation of kingly functions. Tso-she's cauon about the different has little value.

Par. 5. Tso says this invasion had reference to the defining the borders of the lands of Tsang. We can easily suppose that Loo had encroached, or was now endeavouring to encroach, on the west of what had been the territory of Tsang, supplying Keu with a casus belli. Par. 6. See on v. 5.

Par. 7. The Chuen says:—'In winter, Tszenang, of Ts'00 invaded Ch'ing, to punish it for its raid on Ts'ae. Tsze-sze, Tsze-kwoh, and Tsze-urh wished to follow Ts'00. Tsze-k'ung Tsze-këaou, and Tsze-chen, wished to [hold out, and] wait for Tsin. Tsze-sze said, "There is an ode (a lost ode) of Chow which says,

'If you wait till the Ho becomes clear,
The life of man is too short [for such a thing].'

There are the decisions of the tortoise-shell, and various opinions of our counsellors; this is like making a net with conflicting views. The great families have many different plans, and the people are much divided. It is more and more difficult to conduct our affairs successfully. The people are in distress; let us for the time give way to Ts'oo, to relieve our people. When the army of Tsin arrives, we can also follow it.

To wait the comer with reverent offerings of silks is the way for a small State. With cattle, gems, and silks, on our two borders, we can wait the approach of the stronger Power, and thus protect the people. The enemy will then do us no harm, and the people will not be distressed:

—is not this a course that can be followed?"

'Tsze-chen said, "It is by good faith that a small State can serve a great one. If the small one do not observe good faith, war and disorder will be constantly coming on it, and the day of its ruin will not be distant. We are bound to faith [with Tsin] by five meetings, and if we violate it, though Ts oo may help us, of what use will it be? With [Tsin] that would befriend us you do not seek peace; with ['I's'oo] that would make our State a border of its own you wish to [treat]:—this plan is not to be followed. We had better wait for Tsin. ruler is intelligent; its four armies are all complete; its eight commanders are all harmonious: —it will not abandon Ch'ing. The army of Ts'00 has come from far; its provisions will soon be exhausted; it must shortly retire: why be troubled about it? According to what I have heard, no support is like good faith. Let us firmly hold out, to tire Tsoo, and let us lean on good faith, awaiting Tsin:—is not this the course that should be followed? Tsze-sze replied, "The ode (She, II. v. ode I. 3) says,

'The counsellors are very many,
And so nothing is accomplished.
The words spoken fill the court,
But who will take the responsibility of decision?

We are as if we consulted [about a journey], without taking a step in advance, And therefore did not get on on the road.

Please let us follow Ts'on, and I will take the responsibility." Accordingly they made peace with Ts'oo, and sent the king's son, Pih-ping to inform [the marquis of] Tsin, saying, "Your lordship commanded our State to have its chariots in repair and its soldiers in readiness to punish the disorderly and remiss. The people of Ts'ac were disobedient, and our people did not dare to abide quietly [looking on]. We called out all our levies to punish Ts'ae, took captive Seeh its minister of war, and presented him to your lordship at Hing-k'ëw. And now Ts'oo has come to punish us, asking why we commenced hostilities with Ts'ae. It has burned all the stations on our borders; it has come insultingly up to our walls and suburbs. The multitudes of our people, husbands and wives. men and women, had no houses left in which to save one another. They have been destroyed with an utter overthrow, with no one to appeal to. If the fathers and elder brothers have not perished, the sons and younger brothers have done so. All were full of sorrow and distress, and there was none to protect them. Under the pressure of their destitution, they accepted a covenant with Ts'oo, which I and my ministers were not able to prevent. I dare not but now inform you of it." Che Woo-tsze made the internuncius Tsze-yun reply to Pili-ping, "Your ruler received such a message from Ts'oo, and at the same time did not send a single messenger to inform our ruler, but instantly sought for rest under Ts'vo:—it was your ruler's wish to do so; who would dare to oppose him? But our ruler will lead on the States and see him beneath his walls. Let your ruler take measures accordingly."

Par. 9. The Chuen says:—'Fan Seuen-tsze (Sze Kae) came to Luo, on a friendly mission, and also to acknowledge the duke's visit [to Tsin, in spring], and to give notice about taking the field against Ch'ing. The duke feasted him, on which occasion he sang the P'ëaou yëw mei (She, I. ii. ode IX.), and Ke Woo-tsze (Ke-sun Suh) rejoined, "Who will dare [not to obey your orders]? If you compare your ruler to a plum-tree, ours is to him as its fragrance, [a portion of the same plant]. Joyfully we receive your orders, and will obey them without regard to time." With this he sang the Këoh kung (She II. vii. ode IX.). When the guest was about to leave [the hall], Woo-tsze [also] sang the Tung kung (She, II. iii. ode I.), Senentsze said, "After the battle of Shing-puh, our former ruler, duke Wan, presented [the trophies of] his success in Hang-yung (see the Chuen on V. xxviii. 8), and received the red bow from king Sëang, to be preserved by his descendants. I have inherited the office held by my ancestor under that previous ruler, and dare not but receive your instructions?" The superior man considers that Seuen-tsze was acquainted with propriety.'

In the [duke's] ninth year, in spring, there was a fire in Sung.

In summer, Ke-sun Suh went to Tsin.

In the fifth month, on Sin-yëw, duke [Sëuen's] wife, Këang, died.

In autumn, in the eighth month, on Kwei-we, we buried 4

our duchess Muh Këang.

In winter, the duke joined the marquis of Tsin, the duke 5 of Sung, the marquis of Wei, the earl of Ts'aou, the viscounts of Këu, Choo, and T'ang, the earls of Sëeh and Ke, the viscount of Little Choo, and Kwang, heir-son of Ts'e, in invading Ch'ing. In the twelfth month, on Ke-hae, these princes made a covenant together in He.

The viscount of Ts'oo invaded Ch'ing.

Par. 1. Kung-yang has here K instead of , and we may doubt whether the canon of Tso-she, that denotes a calamity produced by Heaven is applicable to this passage. The Chuen makes it clear that the event thus briefly chronicled was a fire which desolated the capital of Sung. This is another instance of the record in the Ch'un Ts'ëw of the prodigies and calamities that occurred in Sung. Acc. to Kung and Kuh, such events in other States ought not to be mentioned in the Classic, but they make an exception in the case of Sung, as being entitled to preëminence among the other States, because its princes were the representatives of the line of Shang, or because Confucius was descended from a family of Sung! But calamities in other States are sometimes chronicled in the text;— Too is, no doubt, correct in e.g. X. xviii. 2. saying we have this record here, because an announcement of the event was sent from Sung to Loo.

The Chuen says:—'In the duke's 9th year, in spring, there was a fire in Sung. Yoh He (Tsze-han) was then minister of Works, and made in consequence [the following] regulations [for such an event]. He appointed the officer Pih to take charge of the streets where the fire had not reached. He was to remove small houses, and plaster over large ones. He was to set forth baskets and barrows for carrying earth; provide well-ropes and buckets; prepare water jars; have things arranged according to their weight; dam the water up in places where it was collected; have earth and mud stored up; go round the walls, and measure off the places where watch and ward should be kept; and signalize the line of the fire. He appointed Hwa Shin to have the public workmen in readiness, and to order the commandants outside the city to march their men from the borders and various stations to the place of the fire. He appointed Hwa Yueh to arrange that the officers of the right should be prepared for all they might be called on to do; and Hëang Sëuh to arrange similarly for the officers of the left. He appointed Yoh Ch'uen in the same way to prepare the various instruments of punishment. He appointed Hwang Yun to give orders to the master of the horse to bring out horses, and the chariot-master to bring out chariots, and to be prepared with buff-coats and weapons, in readiness for military guard. He appointed Se Ts'00-woo to look after the records kept in the different repositories. He ordered the superintendent and officers of the harem to maintain a careful watch in the palace. The masters of the right and left were to order the headmen of the 4 village-districts reverently to offer sacrifices. The great officer of religion was to sacrifice horses on the walls, and sacrifice to

'The marquis of Tsin asked Sze Joh what was the reason of a saying which he had heard, that from the fires of Sung it could be known there was a providence. "The ancient director of fire," replied Joh. " was sacrificed to either when the heart or the beak of the Bird culminated at sun-set, to regulate the kindling or the extinguishing of the people's fires. Hence the beak is the star Shun-ho, and the heart is Ta-ho. Now the director of fire under T'aou-t'ang (Yaou) was Oh-pih, who dwelt in Shang-k'ëw, and sacrificed to Ta-ho, by fire regulating the seasons. Seang-t'oo came after him, and hence Shang paid special regard to the star Ta-ho. The people of Shang, in calculating their disasters and calamities, discovered that they were sure to begin with fire, and hence came the saying about thereby knowing there was a providence." "Can the thing be certainly [known beforehand?" asked the marquis, to which Joh replied, "It depends on the ruler's course. When the disorders of a State have not evident indications, it cannot be known [beforehand]."

Par. 2. Tso says this visit of Ke Woo-tsze to Tsin was in return for that of Fan Seuen-tsze to Loo in the end of last year.

Par. 3. This lady was the grandmother of duke Scang. Her intrigue with Krenou-joo, and her threats to duke Ching, have appeared in different narratives of the Chuen. It would appear that she had been put under some restraint, and confined in the palace appropriate to the eldest son and heir-apparent of the State. The Chuen says:—'Muh Këang died in the eastern palace. When she first went into it, she consulted the milfoil, and got the second line of the diagram Kin (艮, 三重). The diviner said, 'This is what remains when Kin becomes Buy (清, 三). Suy is the symbol of getting out; your ladyship will soon get out from this." She replied, "No. Of this diagram it is said in the Chow Yih, 'Suy indicates being great, penetrating, beneficial, firmly correct, without blame.' Now that greatness is the lofty distinction of the person; that penetration is the assemblage of excellences; that beneficialness is the harmony of all righteousness; that firm correctness is the stem of all affairs. The person who is entirely virtuous is sufficient to take the presidency of others; admirable virtue is sufficient to secure an agreement with all propriety. Beneficialness to things is sufficient to effect a harmony of all righteousness. Firm correctness is sufficient to manage all affairs. But these things must not be in semblance merely. It is only thus that Suy could bring the assurance of blamelessness. Now I, a wonian, and associated with disorder, am here in the place of inferior rank. Chargeable moreover with a want of virtue, greatness cannot be predicated of me. Not having contributed to the quiet of the State, penetration cannot be predicated of me. Having brought harm to myself by my doings, beneficialness cannot be predicated of me. Having left my proper place for a bad intrigue, firm correctness cannot be To one who has those four predicated of me. virtues the diagram Suy belongs;—what have I to do with it, to whom none of them belongs? Having chosen evil, how can I be without blame? I shall die here; I shall never get out of this."'

[The Chuen appends here:—'Duke King of Ts'in sent Sze K'ëen to beg the assistance of an army from Ts'00, intending to invade Tsin. The viscount granted it, but Tsze-nang objected, saying," We cannot now maintain a struggle with Tsin. Its ruler employs officers according to their ability, and his appointments do justice to his choice. Every office is filled according to the regular rules. His ministers give way to others who are more able than themselves; his great officers discharge their duties; his scholars vigorously obey their instructions; his common people attend diligently to their husbandry; his merchants, mechanics, and inferior employés know nothing of changing their hereditary employments. Han Keuch having retired in consequence of age, Che Ying asks for his instructions in conducting the government. Fan Kae was younger than Chung-hang Yen, but Yen had him advanced and made assistantcommander of the army of the centre. Han K'e was younger than Lwan Yin, but Yin and Sze Fang had him advanced, and made assistant commander of the 1st army. Wei Këang had performed many services, but considering Chaou Woo superior to himself, he became assistant under him. With the ruler thus intelligent and his servants thus loyal, his high officers thus ready to yield their places, and the inferior officers thus vigorous, at this time Tsin cannot be resisted. Our proper course is to serve it; let your Majesty well consider the case." The king said, "I have granted the request of Ts'in. Though we are not a match for Tsin, we must send an army forth." In autumn, the viscount of Ts'oo took post with an army at Woo-shing, in order to afford support to Tsin. A body of men from Ts in made an incursion into Tsin, which was suffering from famine, and could not retaliste."

Par. 4. Here, as elsewhere, Kung-yang has for . The duchess was buried sooner than the rule required.

Par. 5. He was in Ch'ing. It was the same place which, in the Chuen on VIII. xvii. 2, is called He-t'ung (戲 童),—in the pres. dis. of Fan-shwuy () (), dep. K'ae-fung. Acc. to Too there was no Ke-hae day in the 12th month, and we should read 十有一instead of 十 The Chuen says:—'In winter, on the 10th month, the States invaded Ching. On Kang-woo, Ke Woo-tsze, Ts'uy Ch'oo of Ts'e, and Hwang Yun of Sung, followed Seun Ying and Sze Kae, and attacked the Chuen gate. Pih-kung Kwoh of Wei, an officer of Ts'aou, and an officer of Choo followed Scun Yen and Han K'e, and attacked [the gate] Sze-che-lëang. Officers of Tang and Seeh followed Lwan Yin and Sze Fang, and attacked the north gate. Officers of Ke and E followed Cliaou Woo and Wei Këang, and cut down the chesnut trees along the roads. On Këah-seuh, the armies collected in Fan, and orders were given to the States, saying, "Look to your weapons that they be ready for service; prepare dried and other provisions; send home the old and the young; place your sick in Hoo-laou; forgive those who have committed small faults:—we are going to lay siege to the capital of Ch'ing." On this the people of Ching became afraid, and wished to make peace. Chung-hang Hëen-taze (Seun Yen) said, "Let us hold the city in siege, and wait the arrival of the succours from Ts'oo, and then fight a battle with them. If we do not do so, we shall have accomplished nothing." Che Woo-tsze, however, said, "Let us grant Ching a covenant, and then withdraw our armies, in order to wear out the people of Ts'oo. We shall divide our 4 armies into 3, and [with one of them and the ardent troops of the States. meet the comers:—this will not be distressing to us, while Ts'oo will not be able to endure it. This is still better than fighting. A struggle is not to be maintained by whitening the plains with bones to gratify [our pride]. There is no end to such great labour. It is a rule of the former kings that superior men should labour with their minds, and smaller men labour with their strength."

'None of the States wished to fight; so they granted peace; and in the 11th month, on Kehae, they made a covenant together in He,—on the submission of Ching. When they were about to covenant, the six ministers of Ching, —the Kung-tszes, Fci (Tsze-sze), Falı (Tszekwoh), and Këa (Tsze-k'ung), and the Kungsuns, Cheh (Tsze-urh), Ch'ae (Tsze-këaou), and Shay-che (Tsze-chen), with the great officers and younger members of the ministerial clans, all attended the earl of Ching. Sze Chwangtsze made the words of the covenant to this effect, "After the covenant of to-day, if the State of Ching hear any commands but those of Tsin, and incline to any other, may there happen to it according to what is [imprecated] in this covenant!" The Kung-tsze Fei rushed forward at this, and said, "Heaven has dealt unfavourably with the State of Ch'ing, and given it its place midway between two great States, which do not bestow on it the marks of favour which could be appreciated, but demand its adherence by violence. Thus its Spirits cannot enjoy the sacrifices which should be presented to them, and its people cannot enjoy the advantages of its soil. Its husbands and wives are oppressed and straitened, full of misery, having none to appeal to. After this covenant of to-day, if the State of Ching follow any other but that which extends propriety to it and strength to protect its people, but dares to waver in its adherence, may there happen to it according to [the imprecations in] this covenant!" Seun Yen said, "Change [the conditions of] this covenant." Kung-sun Shay-che said, "These are solemn words in which we have appealed to the great Spirits. If we may change them, we may also revolt from your great State." Che Woo-tsze said to Hëen-tsze "We indeed have not virtue, and it is not proper to force men to covenant with us. Without propriety, how can we preside over covenants? Let us agree for the present to this covenant, and withdraw. When we come again, after having cultivated our virtue, and rested our armies, we shall in the end win Ching. Why must we determine to do so to-day? If we are without virtue, other people will cast us off, and not Ching only; if we can rest and be harmonious, they will come to us from a distance. Why need we rely upon Ching?" Accordingly they covenanted [as related above], and the forces of Tsin withdrew.

'The people of Tsin had thus not got their will with Ching, and they again invaded it with the armies of the States. In the 12th month, on Kwei-hae, they attacked the [same] three gates, and persevered for five days at each ( ) A ought to be A A. H. Then on Mow-yin, they crossed [the Weil at Yin-fan and over-ought to be fighthereof. The half of the Mei] at Yin-fan, and over-ran the country. After halting at Yin-k'ow, they withdrew. Tsze-k'ung proposed to attack the army of Tsin, saying that it was old and exhausted, and the soldiers were all bent on returning home, so that a great victory could be gained over it. Tsze-chen, however, refused to sanction such a movement.

[I'he Chuen here relates the capping of duke Seang:—'The duke accompanied the marquis of Tsin [back from Ching], and when they were at the Ho and he was with the marquis at a feast, the latter asked how old he was. Ke-Woo-tsze replied, "He was born in the year of the meeting at Sha-suy (see VIII. xvi. 8)." He is twelve then," said the marquis. "That is a full decade of years, the period of a revolution of Jupiter. The ruler of a State may have a son when he is fifteen. It is the rule that he should be capped before he begets a son. Your ruler may now be capped. Why should you not get everything necessary for the ceremony ready?" Woo-tsze replied, "The capping of our ruler must be done with the ceremonies of libation and offerings; its different stages must be defined by the music of the bell and the musical stone; it must take place in the temple of his first ancestor. Our ruler is now travelling, and those things cannot be provided. Let us get to a brother State, and borrow what is necessary to prepare for the ceremony." The marquis assented; so, when the duke had got as far as Wei on his return, he was capped in the temple of duke Ching. They borrowed the bell and musical stone of it for the purpose; —as was proper.'

This capping of duke Seang out of Loo was a strange proceeding, and was probably done in the wantonness of the marquis of Tsin, amusing himself with the child. Maou supposes that it is kept out of the text, to conceal the disgrace of it.]

Par. 6. Here Ts'oo is down again upon Ching, because of its making the covenant with The Chuen says:—'The viscount of Ts'oo invaded Ch'ing, and Tsze-sze proposed to make peace with him. Tsze-k'ung and Tszekëaou said, "We have just made a covenant with the [other] great State, and, while the blood of it is not dry on our mouths, may we break it?" Tsze-sze and Tsze-chen replied, "At that covenant we said that we would follow the strongest. Here now is the army of Ts'oo arrived, and Tsin does not come to save us, so that Ts'oo is the strongest;—we are not presuming to break the words of the covenant and oath. Moreover, at a forced covenant where there is no sincerity, the Spirits are not present. They are present only where there is good faith. Good faith is the gem of speech, the essential point of all goodness; and therefore the Spirits draw near to it. They in their intelligence do not require adherence to a forced covenant;—it may be broken." Accordingly they made peace with Ts'oo. The Kung-tsze P'e-jung entered the city to make a covenant, which was done in [the quarter] Chung-fun. [In the meantime], the widow of [king] Chwang of Ts'oo died, and [king] Kung returned [to Ying], without having been able to settle [the affairs of ] Ch'ing.'

The Chuen appends here a notice of the measures of internal reform in Tsin:—'When the marquis of Tsin returned to his capital, he consulted how he could give rest and prosperity Wei Këang begged that he to the people. would confer favours on them and grant remissions. On this all the accumulated stores of the State were given out in benefits. From the marquis downwards, all who had such stores brought them forth, till none were left unappropriated, and there was no one exposed to the endurance of want The marquis granted access to every source of advantage, and the people did not covet more than their proper share. In religious services they used offerings of silks instead of victims; guests were entertained with [the flesh of] a single animal; new articles of furniture and use were not made; only such chariots and robes were kept as sufficed for use. When this style had been practised for twelve months, a right method and order prevailed throughout the State. Then three expeditions were undertaken, and Ts'oo was not able to contend [any more] with Tsin].'

obliged to relax its efforts to hold Ch'ing. The phrase 'a meeting with Woo ( ),' without specifying the viscount himself or his representative on the occasion, has occasioned the critics a good deal of difficulty. The same style has occurred before, in VIII. xv. 10 and IX. v. 4, and we meet with it again, in xiv. 1. The most likely account that can be given of it is the remark, probably of Soo Ch'eh, that only the name of the State is given because [to get the help of] that State was the object of the meeting (

書會吳以吳爲會故也>

The Chuen says:—'The meeting at Cha was a meeting with Show-mung, viscount of Woo. In the 3d month, on Kwei-ch'ow, Kaou How of Ts'e came with his marquis's eldest son Kwang, and had a previous meeting with the princes in Chung-le (see VIII. xv. 10), when they behaved disrespectfully. Sze Chwang-tsze (Sze Joh) said, "Kaou-tsze, coming in attendance on his prince to a meeting of the States, ought to have in mind the protection of Ts'e's altars, and yet they both of them behave disrespectfully. They will not, I apprehend, escape an evil end." In summer, in the 4th month, on Mow-woo, there was the meeting at Cha.'

Par. 2. Peih-yang was a small State, whose lords were viscounts, with the surname of Yun It was under the jurisdiction of Ts'oo. Tsin now led on the forces of the States from the meeting at Cha to attack it. Its principal town is said to have been 30 le to the south of the dis. of Yih, dep. Yen-chow. The Chuen says:—'Seun Yen and Sze Kaë of Tsin asked leave to attack l'eih-yang, and that it should be conferred on Heang Seuh of Sung. Seun Ying said, "The city is small but strong. If you take it, it will be no great achievement; if you do not take it, you will be laughed at." They persisted in their request; and on Ping-yin they laid siege to it, but could not overcome it.

'Ts'in Kin-foo, the steward of the Mang family, drew after him a large waggon to the service. The people of Pcih-yang having opened one of their gates, the soldiers of the States attacked it, [and had passed within]. Just then, the portcullis gate was let down, when Heih of Tsow raised it up, and let out the stormers who had entered. Teil Sze-me carried the wheel of a large carriage, which he covered with hides and used as a buckler. Holding this in his left hand, and carrying a spear in his right, he took the place of a body of 100 men. Mang Heen-taze said, "To him we may apply the words of the ode (She, I. iii. ode XIII. 2), 'Strong as a tiger.'" The besieged hung strips of cloth over the wall, by one of which Kin-foo climbed up to the parapet, when they cut it. Down he fell, when they hung out another; and when he had revived, he seized it and mounted again. Thrice he performed this feat, and on the besieged declining to give him another opportunity he retired, taking with him the three cut pieces, which he showed all through the army for three

'The forces of the States were long detained at Peih-yang; and Seun Yen and Sze Kae went with a request to Seun Ying, saying, "The rains will soon fall and the pools gather, when we are afraid we shall not be able to return. We ask you to withdraw the troops." Che Pih (Seun Ying) became angry, and threw at them the stool on which he was leaning, which passed between the two. "You had determined," said he, "on two things, and then came and informed me of them. I was afraid of confusing your plans, and did not oppose you. You have inposed toil on our ruler; you have called out the forces of the States; you have dragged an old man like myself here. And now you have no prowess to show, but want to throw the blame on me, saying, that I ordered the retreat of the troops, and but for that you would have subdued the place. Can I, thus old and feeble, sustain such a heavy responsibility? If in 7 days you have not taken it, I shall take yourselves instead of it." On this, in the 5th month, on Kang-yin, Seun Yen and Sze Kae, led on their men to the attack of the city, themselves encountering [the shower] of arrows and stones.

On Keah-woo they extinguished it.

'The language of the text,—"They went on to extinguish Peih-yang," shows that they proceeded to attack it from the meeting [at Cha]. [The marquis of Tsin] would then have given Peih-yang to Hëang Seuh, but he declined it, saying, "If your lordship will still condescend to guard and comfort the State of Sung, and by the gift of Peih-yang distinguish my ruler and increase his territory, all his ministers will be at case;—what gift can be equal to this? If you insist on conferring it on me alone, then I shall have called out the States to procure a fief for myself,—than which there could not be a greater crime. Though I die, I must entreat you not to do so." Peih-yang accordingly was given to the duke of Sung.

'The duke entertained the marquis of Tsin in Ts'oo-k'ew, and asked leave to use, [on the occasion, the music of Sang-lin (the music which had been used by the sovereigns of Shang). Seun Ying declined it, but Seun Yen and Sze Kae said, "Among the States, it is [only] in Sung and Loo that we can see the ceremonies [of the kings]. Loo has the music of the grand triennial sacrifice, and uses it when entertaining guests and at sacrifices; is it not allowable that Sung should entertain our ruler with the Sang-lin?" The master of the pantomimes began indicating to them their places with the great flag, when the marquis became afraid, and withdrew to another apartment. When the flag was removed, he returned and fluished the entertainment. On his way back [from Sung], he fell ill at Choo-yung. They consulted the tortoise-shell [about his sickness], and [the Spirit of] Sang-lin appeared. Seun Yen and Sze Kae wanted to hurry [back to Sung], and to pray to it. Seun Ying, however, refused to allow them, and said, "I declined the ceremony. It was they who used it. If there indeed he this Spirit, let him visit the offence on them." The marquis got better, and took the viscount of Peih-yang back with him to Tain, and presented him in the temple of [duke] Woo, calling him an E captive. [The lords of] Peih-yang had the surname of Yun. [The marquis] made the historiographer of the Interior in Chow select one from the family of the [old] House to continue [its sacrifices], whom he placed in Hoh as its commandant;—which was proper.

'When our army returned, Mang Hen-tsze employed Ts'in Kin-foo as the spearman on the right of his chariot. He had a son, Ts'in Peters, who was a disciple of Chung no?

tsze, who was a disciple of Chung-ne.'

As Tso-she here mentions Confucius, it may be added that it was the sage's father, Shuh-lëang Heih, who performed the feat of strength with the portcullis of Peih-yang.

Par. 4. Sung had been rewarded for its allegiance to Tsin with Peih-yang, and now it has to pay the price to Ts'oo. The Chuen says:—'In the 6th month, Tsze-nang of Ts'oo and Tsze-urh of Ch'ing invaded Sung, taking post [first] at Tsze-moo. On Käng-woo they laid siege to the capital, and attacked the T'ung gate.'

Par. 5. The Chuch says:—Seun Ying of Tsin invaded Ts-in, to retaliate its incursion.' The incursion of Ts'in is related in the Chuen after p. 3 of last year. Tsin was then unable to retaliate in consequence of a famine, but its vengeance had not slumbered long. At this time Ts'in was in league with Ts'oo, and the alliance between the States was drawn closer through the wife of king Kung being a sister of duke King of Ts'in.

The Chuen gives here a narrative, which is the sequel of that on p. 4:—'The marquis of Wei went to succour Sung, and encamped with his forces at Sëang-nëw. Tsze-chen of Ch'ing said, "We must invade Wei. If we do not do so, we shall not be doing our part for Ts'oo. We have offended against Tsin, and if we also offend against Ts'00, what will be the consequence to our State?" Tsze-sze said, "It will distress the State;" but Tsze-chen replied, "If we offend against both the great States, we shall perish. We may be distressed, but is that not better than perishing?" The other great officers all agreed with him, and Hwang-urh accordingly led a force and made an incursion into Wei,— [having received] orders from Ts'oo.

'Sun Wan-tsze (Lin-foo) consulted the tortoise-shell about pursuing the enemy, and presented the indication he had obtained to Ting Këang (the mother of the marquis of Wei), who asked what the corresponding oracle "It is this," said Wan-tsze. 'The indication being like a hill, a party go forth on an expedition, and lose their leader." The lady observed, "The invaders lose their leader;—this is favourable for those who resist them. Do you take measures accordingly." The people of Wei then pursued the enemy, and Sun Kwae

There follows the account of an invasion of Loo by Ts.00, which ought to be given in the text. Too observes that, as it involved no disgrace to Loo, he cannot account for the silence about it.—'In autumn, in the 7th month, Tsze-nang of Ts'oo and Tsze-urh of Ch'ing invaded our western borders. On their return they laid siege to Sëaou (a city of Sung), and reduced it in the 8th month, on Ping-yin. In the 9th month, Tsze-urh of Ch'ing made an incursion on the northern border of Sung. Mang Heen-tsze said, "Calamity must be going to befall Ching." The aggressions of its armies are excessive. Even Chow could not endure such violent efforts, and how much less Ching! The calamity is likely to befall the three ministers who conduct its government!"]

Par. 6. The Chuen says:—'The people of Keu taking advantage of the States being occupied, invaded our eastern borders.' Wang Kih-kwan observes that this movement shows strikingly the daring of Keu, as its viscount had taken part in nearly all the covenants ordered by duke Taon of Tsin. It shows how incomplete the harmony was which the leading State sought to establish among the others which acknowledged its supremacy.

Par. 7. This was the first of the three expeditions of Tsin mentioned in the Chuen at the end of last year, by which that State wore out Tavo, and established its supremacy, for a time, over Ching. The Chuen says:—'The States invaded Ching. Ts'uy Ch'oo of Ts'e came with Kwang, the eldest son of the marquis, to the army early, and the prince therefore took precedence of Tiang. On Ke-yew, the whole army took post at New-show.' The proper place of the heir-son of Ts'e was after all the princes, as in p. 1. If he had received, indeed, the appointment of the king as his father's successor, and were administering for him the govt. of the State, he would have been entitled to rank as an earl, according to the rules of Chow. But he had not received such appointment, as we infer from the Chuen on the 19th year. The precedence now given to him was probably brought about as Tso-she says; but as we shall find that he continued to retain it, it is an instance of how the marquis of Tsin took it upon him to override the standing statutes of the kingdom.

We have here the fulfilment of the Par. 8. prognostication in the Chuen after p. 5. For Kung and Kuh have J. We have in this par. the first occurrence of in the text, which I have translated "ruffians." Too Yu observes that, as the paragraph commences with that term, the rank of the murdered could not be mentioned in it. They were all ministers or great officers, and if their death had been by order or management of the State, the text would have been 鄭殺, or 鄭人, 殺其大夫, 五云. If the murderers had been great officers, their names and rank, and those of their victims as well, would have been given. But being what they were in this case, their names were not admissible in the text, and consequently we have the persons murdered without any intimation of their rank. No stigma is fixed upon them by the omission, as Kuh-läng thought, and as Ching E, Hoo Ngan-kwoh, and many other critics have contended. The men may have deserved their fate, but no evidence

The Chuen says:—'Before this, Tsze-sze (the Kung-tsze Fei) had a quarrel with Wei Che, and when he was about to take the field against the army of the States, he reduced the number of the chariots [which Che wanted to contribute to the expedition. He had another quarrel with Che about the captives whom he had taken, and kept him down, saying his chariots had been beyond the number prescribed by rule, and would not allow him to present his spoils [be-

'Before this also, Tsze-sze, in laying out the ditches through the fields, had occasioned the loss of fields to the Sze, Too, How and Tsze-sze families; and these four, along with Wei Che, collected a number of dissatisfied individuals, and proceeded, with the adherents of the sons of the ruling House (killed in the 8th year by Tsze-sze; see the Chuen after viii. 2) to raise an insurrection. At this time the govt. was in the hands of Tsze-sze; Tsze-kwoh (the Kungtsze Fah) was minister of War; Tsze-urh (the Kung-sun Cheh) was minister of Works; and Tsze-kung was minister of Instruction. winter in the 10th month, on Mow-shin, Wei Che, Sze Chin, How Tsin, Too Joo-foo, and Tsze-sze Puh, led a band of ruffians into the palace, and early in the morning attacked the chief minister at the audience in the western palace. They killed Tsze-sze, Tsze-kwoh, and Tsze-urh, and carried off the earl to the northern palace. Trze-k'ung had known of their design, and so escaped death. The word 'ruffians' in the text indicates that none of them were great officers.

'Tsze-se, the son of Tsze-sze) hearing of the rufflans, left his house without taking any precautions, went to [his father's] corpse, and pursued them. When they had entered the northern palace, however, he returned, and began giving out their arms [to his followers]. Most of the servants and concubines had fled, and most of the articles of furniture and use were lost.

'Tsze-ch'an (the son of Tsze-kwoh), hearing of the ruffians, set a guard at his gate, got all his officers in readiness, shut up his storehouses, carefully secured his depositories, formed his men in ranks, and then went forth with 17 chariots of war. Having gone to [his father's] corpse, he proceeded to attack the ruffians, in the northern palace. Tsze-k'ëaou (the Kungsun Chae) led the people to his assistance, when they killed Wei Che and Tsze-sze Puh. The majority of their followers perished, but How Tsin fled to Tsin, and Too Joo-foo, Sze Shin, Wei Pëen, and Sze Ts'e fled to Sung.

'Tsze-k'ung (the Kung-tsze Köa) then took charge of the State, and made a covenant requiring that all in the various degrees of rank should receive the rules enacted by himself. The great officers, ministers, and younger members of the great families refusing obedience to this, he wished to take them off; but Tsze-ch'an stopped him, and begged that for their sakes he would burn the covenant. He objected to do so, saying, "I wrote what I did for the settlement of the State. If I burn it because they all are dissatisfied, then the government is in their hands;—will it not be difficult to administer the affairs of the State?" Tyze-ch'an replied, "It is difficult to go against the anger of them all; and it is difficult to secure the exclusive authority to yourself. If you insist on both these difficulties in order to quiet the State, it is the very way to endanger it. It is better to burn the writing, and so quiet all their minds. You will get what you wish, and they also will feel at ease;—will not this be well? By insisting on your exclusive authority, you will find it difficult to succeed; by going against the wishes of all, you will excite calamity:—you must follow my advice." On this Teze-kung, burned the writing of the covenant outside the Ts'ang gate, after which the minds of all the others became composed.'

Par. 9. Hoo-laou,—see ii. 9. The text would lead us to think that the keeping guard over Hoo-laou was the action of Loo, and of Loo alone; whereas Tsin had taken possession of that city, fortified it and now held it with the troops of its confederate States, as a strategical point against Ching and Tsioo. Loo sent troops to guard it; and this alone the text mentions, but other States did the same. Originally it belonged to Ching, but was not Ching's now. Yet the text says—'Hoo-laou of Ching.' Too Yu and others see in this the style of Confucius writing retrospectively, expressing himself according to his knowledge of the purpose of Tain to restore the place to Ching, when that State should really have broken with Ts'oo. Hoo Ngan-kwoh, again, has his followers in maintaining that Confucius here assigned it to Ching to mark his disapproval of Tsin's ever taking it. The probability is that neither the one view nor the other is correct. The place properly belonged to Ching; it was held against it by the confederates for a time; it was immediately restored to it:—what more natural than to mention it as 'Hoo-laou of Ching,' without any intention either 'to praise or to blame.' The Chuen says:—'The armies of the States fortified [afresh] Hoo-laou, and guarded the country about. The army of Tsin fortified Woo and Che; and Sze Fang and Wei Këang guarded them. The text speaks of Hoo-laou of Ch'ing, though it was not [now] Ch'ing's, indicating that it was to be restored to it. Ching [now] made peace with Tsin.

The Chuen says:—'Taze-nang of Par. 10. Ts'oo came to succour Ching. In the 11th month, the armies of the States made a circuit round Ching, and proceeded south to Yang-ling. Still the army of Ts'oo did not retire, [seeing which], Che Woo-tsze proposed that the confederates should withdraw, saying, "If we now make our escape from Ts'oo, it will become arrogant, and can be fought with when in that mood. Lwan Yin, said, "To evade Ts'oo will be a disgrace to Tsin. Our having assembled the States will increase the disgrace. We had better die. I will advance alone." On this the [whole] army advanced, and on Ke-hae it and the army of Ts'oo were opposed to each other with [only] the Ying between them. Këaou [of Ch'ing] said, "The [armies of the] States are prepared to march, and are sure not to fight. If we follow Tsin, they will retire; if we do not follow it, they will retire. Ts'oo is sure to besiege our city when they retire; but they will still do so. We had better follow Ts'00, and get its army to retire also." That night he crossed through the Ying, and made a covenant with Ts'oo. Lwan Yin wished to attack the army of Ching, but Seun Ying said, "No. We cannot keep back Is'oo, neither can we protect Ching. Of what offence is Ching guilty? Our best plan is to leave a grudge against it, and withdraw. If we now attack its army, Ts'oo will come to its help. If we fight, and do not conquer, the States will laugh at us. Victory cannot be commanded. We had better withdraw." Accordingly, on Ting-we the armies of the States withdrew, made an incursion into the northern borders of Chring, and returned. The forces of Ts'oo also withdrew.

Par. 11. The Chuen gives here a narrative about troubles at court:—'Wang-shuh Chinsang and Pih Yu had a quarrel about the govt. The king favoured Pih Yu, when the other fled from the capital in a rage. The king recalled him when he had got to the Ho. and put the historiographer Këaou to death to please him. He would not enter [the capital], however, and was allowed to remain [near the Ho]. The marquis of Tsin sent Sze Káe to pacify the royal House, when Wang-shuh and Pili Yu maintained each his cause. The steward of Wang-shub, and Hea Kin, the great officer of Pih Yu; pleaded in the court of the king, while Sze Kae listened to them. Wang-shuh's steward said, "When people who live in hovels, with wicker doors fitted to holes in the wall, insult their superiors, it is hard to be a man of superior rank." Hea Kin said, "When king Ping removed here to the east, there were seven families of us, who followed him, and on whom he was dependent for the victims which he used. He made a covenant with them over [the flesh of] a red bull, saying that from generation to generation they should hold their offices. If we had been people of such hovels, how could they have come to the east? and how could the king have been dependent on them? Now since Wang-shuh became chief minister, the govt. has been carried on by means of bribes, and punishments have been in the hands of his favourites.

His officers have become enormously rich, and it is not to be wondered at if we are reduced to such hovels. Let your great State consider the case. If the low cannot obtain right, where is what we call justice?" Fan Seuen-tsze said, "Whom the son of Heaven favours, my ruler also favours; whom he disapproves, my ruler also disapproves." He then made Wang-shuh and Pih Yu prepare a summary of their case; but Wang-shuh could bring forward no evidence, and fled to Tsin. There is no record of this in the text, because no announcement of it was made to Loo. Duke Tsing of Shen then became high minister, to act as director for the royal House.']

XI. 1 In the [duke's] eleventh year, in spring, in the king's first month, we formed three armies.

In summer, in the fourth month, we divined a fourth time about the border sacrifice. The result was unfavourable, and the sacrifice was not offered.

3 The Kung-sun Shay-che of Ch'ing led a force, and made an incursion into Sung.

The duke joined the marquis of Tsin, the duke of Sung, the marquis of Wei, the earl of Ts'aou, Kwang, heir-son of Ts'e, the viscounts of Keu, Choo, and T'ang, the earls of Seeh and Ke, and the viscount of Little Choo, in invading Ch'ing.

In autumn, in the seventh month, on Ke-we, [the above princes] made a covenant together on the north of Poh-shing.

6 The duke arrived from the invasion of Ch'ing.

7 The viscount of Ts'oo and the earl of Ch'ing invaded Sung.

The duke joined the marquis of Tsin, the duke of Sung, the marquis of Wei, the earl of Ts'aou, Kwang, heir-son of Ts'e, the viscounts of Keu, Choo, and T'ang, the earls of Seeh and Ke, and the viscount of Little Choo, in invading Ch'ing. There was a meeting in Seaou-yu.

9 The duke arrived from the meeting.

The people of Ts'oo seized and held Lëang Sëaou, the messenger of Ch'ing.

11 In winter, a body of men from Ts'in invaded Tsin.

Par. 1. 1 must be taken here as in VIII. 1. 4, indicating an arrangement either altogether new, or modifying in a most important manner existing arrangements on the subject to which it refers. The Chuen says:—'This spring, Ke Woo-tsze wished to form 3 armies, and told Shuh-sun Muh-tsze (P'aou) of his purpose, saying, "Let us make three armies, and each of us collect the revenue for the support of his army." Muh-tsze replied, "When the demands [of Tsin] come upon you, [according to this increased establishment], you will not be able [to meet them]." Woo-tsze, however, persisted in his request, till Muh-tsze said, "Well, let us make a covenant." They covenanted accordingly at the gate of [duke] He's temple, the imprecatory sentences being repeated in the street of Woo-foo." In the 1st month they proceeded to the formation of the 3 armies, [the three clans] dividing the ducal prerogative [as it were] into three, and each of them taking one part to The three chiefs broke up their own itself. [establishments of] chariots. The Ke appointed that those who brought their followers and the amount of the military contribution of their families to him, should pay nothing more [to the State], and those who did not so enter his ranks should pay a double contribution. The Mang employed one half the sons and younger brothers in his service. The Shuh-sun employed all the sons and younger brothers. They had said that], unless they acted thus, they would not alter the old arrangements. It is to be wished that Tso-she's narrative were more perspicuous and explicit;—see also the narrative under X. v. 1, when the new army, or that of the centre, was obliged to be discontinued. The arrangement for 3 armies which was now adopted was an important one, and marked an era in the history of Loo. It was originally a great State, and could furnish the B armies, which were assigned by the statutes of Chow to a great State;—see the Chow Le, Bk. XXVIII. par. 3. But its power had gradually decayed; and as Tsin rose to preëminence as the leading State of the kingdom, Loo sank to the class of the second-rate States (大人), which furnished only two armies. The change from 3 to 2 seems to have taken place under Wan or Seuen. In this way Loo escaped some of the exactions of Tsin, whose demands for military assistance were proportioned to the force which the States could furnish, and hence, in the Chuen, Shuh-sun Muh-tsze objects to the formation of 8 armies on the ground that they would then be unable to meet the requirements of Tsin. But up to this time, the armies of Loo, whether 3 or 2, had always belonged to the marquises, having been called forth by them as occasion required, and been commanded by their ministers according to their appointment. A great change now took place. The Heads of the three families, —the descendants of duke Hwan, now not only claimed the command of the armies, but they claimed the armies as their own. Taking advantage of the youth of duke Seang, their act was all but a parting of the State among themselves. They would henceforth be not only its ministers, but its lords, and the direct descendants of the duke of Chow would be puppets in their hands. I must repeat the wish that we had fuller details of the formation of the three armies, and of the proceedings of the three chiefs. Too says that they added one army,—that of the centre, to the two already existing; but that is a very imperfect description of their act. The chariots which they broke up would be those belonging to themselves, for which they would now have no separate occasion, and which would go therefore to the formation of the third army. The text relates the event, as if it had proceeded from the duke, or by his authority.

Par. 2. See on V. xxxi. 3.

Par. 3. The Chuen says:—'The people of Ching were troubled about [their relations with] Tsin and Ts'00, and all the great officers said, "Through our not following Tsin, the State is nearly ruined. Ts'oo is weaker than Tsin, but Tsin shows no eagerness in our behalf. If Tsin were eager in our behalf, Ts'oo would avoid it. What shall we do to make the army of Tain ready to encounter death for us? In that case Ts'oo will not venture to oppose it, and we can firmly adhere to it." Tsze-chen said, "Let us commence hostilities against Sung; the States are sure to come [to its help], when we will submit to them, and make a covenant. The army of Ts'00 will then come, and we shall do the same with it. This will make Tsin very angry. If it can then come quickly and resolutely [into the field], Ts'oo will not be able to do anything against it, and we shall firmly adhere to Tsin." The others were pleased with this proposal, and they made the officers of the borders commence a quarrel with Sung, Heang Seuh of which retaliated with an incursion into Ching, in which he took great spoil. Tszechen said, "We may now invade Sung with an army. If we attack Sung, the States are sure to attack us inmediately. We will then hearken to their commands, and at the same time send notice to Ts'oo. When its forces come, we shall further make a covenant with it; and by heavy bribes to the army of Tsin, we shall escape [the vengeance of them both]." Accordingly, in summer, Tsze-chen (Shay-che) made an incursion into Sung.'

Tsze-chen had formerly advocated the adherence of Ching in good faith to Tsin, while Tsze-sze had been for adhering now to Tsin and now to Tsioo, according to the pressure of the time. Tsze-sze was now dead; and the commentators find great fault with Tsze-chen for the crooked course which he took to bring about the accomplishment of his own policy.

Par. 4. This is the second of Tsin's great expeditions with the States of the north to break the power of Ts'oo. The Chuen says:-'In the fourth month, the States invaded Ching. On Ke-hae, Kwang, eldest son of [the marquis of ] Ts'e, and Hëang Seuh of Sung, came first to its capital, and attacked the east gate. In the evening of that day, Seun Ying of Tsin arrived in the western suburbs, from which he made an incursion to the old [capital of] Heu (see on VIII. xv. 11). Sun Lin-foo of Wei made an incursion on the northern borders of the State. In the 6th month, the States assembled at Pihlin, and encamped in Heang. Thence they took a circuit, and halted at So, after which they invested the capital, and made a [grand] display of their forces outside the south gate, and on the west crossed over the Tse-suy.'

Par. 5. Instead of E Kung and Kuh have

Poh-shing was in Ching, and, acc. to the K'ang-he editors, must have been in the pres. district of Yen-sze, dep. Ho-nan. This is very doubtful. Too and nearly all the critics explain the with reference to the presence of Ching, and its joining in the covenant. No previous instance where the term has occurred exactly corresponds to this; and perhaps Tan Tsoo is right in thinking that Ching was not The Chuen says:—'The people of Ching [now] became afraid, and sought terms of accommodation. In autumn, in the 7th month, they made a covenant together in Poh. Fan Sëuen-tsze said, "If we be not careful, we shall lose the States. Wearied as they have been by marching, and not [really] accomplishing anything, can they be but disaffected?" Accordingly, when they covenanted, the words were:— "All we who covenant together agree not to hoard up the produce of good years, not to shut one another out from advantages [that we possess], not to protect traitors, not to shelter criminals. We agree to aid one another in disasters and calamities, to have compassion on one another in seasons of misfortune and disorder, to cherish the same likings and dislikings, to support and encourage the royal House. Should any prince break these engagements, may He who watches over men's sincerity and He who watches over covenants, [the Spirits of] the famous hills and [of] the famous streams, the kings and dukes our predecessors, the whole host of Spirits, and all who are sacrificed to, the ancestors of our 12 (? 13) States with their 7 surnames:—may all these intelligent Spirits destroy him, so that he shall lose his people, his appointment pass from him, his family perish, and his State be utterly overthrown!"

Par. 7. The Chuen says:—'Tsze-nang of Two had asked the assistance of troops from Tsin; and Chen, Tsin's great officer of the right, led a force to follow the viscount of Tsioo, intending to invade Ching. [In the meantime], the earl of Ching met [the army of Tsioo], [made his submission], and on Ping-tsze invaded Sung [along with it].

This is the third and last of the great expeditions of Tsin against Ts'00. Sëaouyu was a place in Ching, to the south of its capital, in the pres. Heu Chow (言午 外). Chuen says:—'In the 9th month, the States, with all their armies, again invaded Ch'ing. They showed their forces outside the east gate of the city, on which the people of Ching made the king's son, Pih-p'ing, offer their submission. On Këah-seuh, Chaou Woo of Tsin entered the city, and made a covenant with the earl; and in winter, in the 10th month, on Ting-hae, Tszechen came out, and made a covenant with the marquis of Tsin. In the 12th month, on Mowyin, there was a meeting in Sëaou-yu. On Kang-shin, [the marquis of Tsin] released his Ch'ing prisoners, treated them all courteously, and sent them back. He [also] called in his scouting parties, and forbade raids and pillaging. [At the same time], he sent Shuh-heih to inform the [other] princes of these proceedings. The duke made Tsang-sun Heih return the following reply, "All we who have covenanted together [are here], because your great State found it necessary to punish a small one which had offended. Having obtained sufficient ground for your present course, you are ready to exercise forgiveness. My ruler has received your commands."

'The people of Ching presented to the marquis of Tsin the music-masters, Kwei, Ch'uh, and Keuen; fifteen, each, of wide chariots and guardchariots with the buff-coats and weapons for them complete, and other war-chariots amounting altogether to a hundred; two sets of musical bells, with the large bells and musical stones belonging to them; and sixteen female musicians. The marquis gave one half [of these two last gifts] to Wei Këang, saying, "It was you who taught me to harmonize the Jung and the Teih, so as secure the adherence of the great States (see the long Chuen at the end of the 4th year). In the space of 8 years, I have nine times asembled the States, and a harmony has prevailed among them like that of music. I beg to share the pleasure of these things with you.' Wei Këang declined the gifts, saying, "The harmonizing of the Jung and Teih was the happy destiny of the State. The assembling of the States nine times within the space of eight years, and the princes all virtuously adhering, is to be ascribed to your lordship's powerful influence, and the labours of your various servants. What did I contribute to those results? What your servant wishes is that your lordship may enjoy your present pleasure and think about the future. The ode (She, II. vii. ode VIII. 4) 88.YS,

'To be delighted in are those princes, The guardians of the country of the Son of Heaven!

To be delighted in are those princes; Around them all blessings collect. Discriminating and able are their attendants,

Who also have followed them hither!'

Now music helps the repose in virtue; righteousness is seen in the manner of occupying one's position; the rules of propriety are seen in one's practice; good faith maintains consistency; and benevolence makes one powerful in influencing others. When a prince has these qualities, then indeed he may be the guardian of the country, share in all blessings and enoluments, and attract people from a distance: this is called music indeed. The Shoo says (probably V. xv. 19 is intended), 'In a position of security, think of peril.' If you think thus, you will make preparation against the danger, and with the preparation there will be no calamity. I venture to offer you these admonitions." The marquis said, "Dare I but receive your commands in these instructions? But for you, however, I should not have known how to treat the Jung; I should not have been able to cross the Ho. To reward is a statute of the State, preserved in the repository of covenants; it may not be disused. Do you receive those things." It was thus that Wei Këang first had bells and musical stones;—and it was right he should thus receive them.'

Par. 9. The canon laid down for entries like this is that, when the duke has been absent on more than one affair, the last shall be stated in the record of his return. It is so here. The duke left Loo to take part in the invasion of Ching, which ended in the meeting at Sëaou-yu; and it is said he arrived 'from the meeting.' In par. 6, however, it is said that he arrived 'from the invasion of Ching,' though the event immediately preceding his return was the meeting and covenant at Poh. The commentators find 'praise and blame' in these variations of the style, but we may well believe that the historiographers made these entries, as the characters occurred to them, without regard to any different character of the transactions in which the duke had been engaged.

Par. 10. For Kuh-lëang has . The Chuen says:—'The people of Ching had sent Lëang Sësou, and the grand-superintendent Sheh Ch'oh, to Ts'oo, to give notice of their intended submission to Tsin in the words, [as from the earl], "Out of regard to my alters, I am not able to cherish your lordship [as my superior]. If your lordship with genns and silks will come to a good understanding with Tsin, or if by a display of prowess you will overawe it, this would be what I desire." The people of Ts'oo seized and held the two officers. The text speaks of "the messenger," intimating that [Lëang Sëaou] was an ambassador.'

Par. 11. The Chuen says:—'Two dignitaries of Ts'in, Paou and Woo, led a force and invaded Tsin, in order to succour Ch'ing. Paou first entered the territory of Tsin, and was met by Sze Fang, who slighted the forces of Ts'in, and did not make preparation against them. On Jin-woo, Woo crossed [the Ho] from Foo-she, and, joining Paou, went on with him into Tsin. On Ke-ch'ow the armies of the two States fought at Leih, when that of Tsin received a great defeat;—in consequence of making light of Ts'in.'

Twelfth year.

XII. 1 In the [duke's] twelfth year, in spring, in the king's third month, a body of men from Keu invaded our eastern borders, and laid siege to T'ae.

2 Ke-sun Suh led a force and relieved T'ae, after which he went on to enter Yun.

3 In summer, the marquis of Tsin sent Sze Fang to Loo on a mission of friendly inquiries.

4 In autumn, in the ninth month, Shing, viscount of Woo, died.

- 5 In winter, the Kung-tsze Ching of Ts'oo led a force, and made an incursion into Sung.
- 6 The duke went to Tsin.

Parr. 1, 2. The was a city belonging to Loo,—in the pres. dis. of Pe, dep. E-chow. Kuhleang has . Yun is the same place mentioned in VI. xii. 8, as then walled by duke Wan. In his time it belonged to Loo, but had subsequently been taken by Keu. Though Ke-sun Suh now entered it, it does not appear to have remained in the possession of Loo.

The Chuen says:—'This year, in spring, a body of men from Keu invaded our eastern borders, and laid siege to Tae. Ke Woo-tsze then relieved Tae, and went on to enter Yun, from which he took its bell to form a deep dish for the duke.' is used as heretofore, to denote the going on from the accomplishment of one thing to another not originally contemplated. Kung and Kuh, however, remark that it was not competent for any one to do this but the ruler of the State himself, and hence the is here condemnatory of Ke-sun Suh;—but see on III. xix. 3.

Par. 8. Tso says that the object of Fang in this mission was to convey the acknowledgments of the marquis of Tsin for the military services performed by Loo the previous year.

Par. 4. This viscount of Woo is better known by the name of Show-mung, which we find in the 1st Chuen on the 10th year. How he should have the two names of Show-mung and Shing is not easily explained. Fuh K'ëen (月) of the Han dynasty supposed that the double name of this and the other lords of Woo is merely an attempt to spell, or give the sound of, the native term, so that in reality and are but one and the same name.

The Chuen says:—'In autumn, Show-mung, viscount of Woo, died. The duke went to the Chow temple (that of king Wan) to wail for him;—which was according to rule. On occasion of the decease of any prince, if he were of a different surname from the duke, he was wailed for outside on the city wall. If he were of the same surname, the wailing took place in the ancestral (i.e., the Chow) temple; if he were descended from the same individual who bore that surname, in the temple of that [common] ancestor; if he were of some common branch family from that ancestor, in the paternal temple. Thus the princes of Loo mourned for the Kes generally in the Chow temple; but for the lords of Hing, Fan, Tsëang, Maou, Tsoo, and Chae, in the temple of the duke of Chow.' Here for the 1st time the Ch'un Ts'ëw records the death of a lord of Woo. But there is no record of the burial; not that an officer of Loo may not have been present at it, but because, as in the case of the lords of Ts'00, the usurped title of king must have been introduced.

Par. 5. The Chuen says:—'In winter, Tszenang of Ts'00, and Woo-te, one of the dignitaries of Ts'in, invaded Sung, and took post with their forces at Yang-leang;—in retaliation for Tsin's taking Ch'ing [from Ts'00].'

The Chuen here turns aside to a marriage negotiation on the part of the king:—'King Ling sought a queen from Ts'e. The marquis asked Gan Hwan-tsze how he should reply, and that officer answered, "In the language of ceremony, issued by the former kings, we find that when the king applies for a queen to the prince of any State, the prince replies, 'Of daughters by my proper wife, I have so many; and of daughters by concubines I have so many.' If he have no daughter of his own, but has sisters and aunts, he says, 'Of so and so, who preceded me in this flef, there are so many daughters.' The marquis of Ts'e agreed to the proposed marriage, and the king sent Yin Le to settle the engagement.']

Par. 6. Tso says, 'The duke went to Tsin, to appear at its court, and to express his acknowledgments for the visit of Sze Fang.' Fang's visit was that in p. 3.

[The Chuen here relates an incident, of which it is difficult to see the drift.—"A daughter of the House of Ts'in had been married to [the viscount of] Ts'oo. [This year], Tszekäng (a son of king Chwang, named Woo) minister of War to Ts'oo, paid a friendly visit to Ts'in, to inquire after her mother in the viscountess's behalf. This was according to rule."]

Thirteenth year.

- XIII. 1 In his thirteenth year, in spring, the duke arrived from Tsin.
  - 2 In summer, we took She.
  - 3 In autumn, in the ninth month, on Kang-shin, Shin, viscount of Ts'oo, died.
  - 4 In winter, we walled Fang.

Par. 1. The Chuch says:—'When the duke arrived from Tsin, Mang Heen-tsze caused a record of his successful services to be made in the ancestral temple; -- which was according to rule. See the Chuen on II. ii. 9 about the force of in such paragraphs as this. Too Yu goes at length into the matter here:—'Under the 2d year of duke Hwan, the Chuen says, "The duke arrived from Tang. and announced his doing so in the temple." Whenever the duke set out on a journey, he announced it in the ancestral temple. On his return, he drank in celebration of that in the temple; and when he put down the cup, he had his service recorded in the tablets:—this was the rule. In the 16th year of Hwan, it says, "The duke came from the invasion of Ching, and observed the ceremony of drinking on his arrival in the temple." It appears then (from those two passages and the present), that if any one of the three ceremonies,—the announcement in the temple, the drinking to celebrate the arrival, and the record in the tablets,—was observed, the notice of arrival was made; but if they were all neglected, there was no such notice.

Par. 2. For 新 Kung-yang has 詩. She was a small State, near Loo,—in the present Tsening (酒童) Chow, dep. Yen-chow. It was now incorporated with Loo. The Chuen says: - In summer, She was dismembered into three by disorders [which prevailed]. A force from Loo succoured She, and took the opportunity to take it.' Too observes on this, that, while the Chuen speaks of 'a force from Loo,' the text does not use that term, intimating that the troops employed did not really amount to a Em, or 2.500 men. Tso she subjoins his canons regarding the force of several terms: - "Taking (M)" is used, when the thing was done with ease; "extinguishing ()," when it required a large force; "entering ()," when the territory was not retained.' There is difficulty found, however, in the application of these canons; and some critics, as Lew Ch'ang, call them in question altogether.

The Chuen appends here a narrative about the affairs of Tsin:—'Seun Ying and Sze Fang died, and the marquis of Tsin assembled his troops in Meen-shang that he might order and regulate them. He appointed Sze Kae to the command of the army of the centre, but Kae declined, saying, "Pih-yëw (Seun Yen) is my senior. Formerly from my acquaintance with, and knowledge of, Che Pili, I was assistant-comniander under him; but I cannot [be regarded as] superior [to Yen]. I beg you to follow [my advice, and appoint] Pih-yew." Seun Yen was then made commander of the army of the centre, and Sze Kae was assistant-commander under him. [The marquis] appointed Han K'e to the command of the 1st army; but he wished to decline in favour of Chaou Woo. The marquis, however, offered the command to Lwan Yen, who also declined it, saying, "I am not equal to Han K'e, and as he wishes Chaou Woo to be above him, your lordship should hearken to him." Chaon Woo was then made commander of the 1st army, with Han K'e as assistant-commander. Lwan Yen was continued as commander of the 3d army, and Wei Keang was made assistantcommander of it. Neither commander nor assistant-commander was appointed to the new army; but the marquis, finding it difficult to meet with proper men, ordered the officers of tens to lead their footmen and chariot-men, and all the other officers, to follow the 3d army; which was right. On this, a great harmony prevailed among the people of Tsin, and the States cultivated their friendly relations with it.

'The superior man will say, "Modesty is an essential point in the proprieties. Fan Scuentsze (Kae) having declined the command [offered to him], those below him did the same, and even Lwan Yen, naturally forward, did not dare to act differently. The State of Tsin was thus made tranquil, and the effect extended through several generations:—such was the force of a good example! Is not this a thing to be carnestly sought,—the good example of one man, securing the quiet and harmony of the people? The language of the Shoo (V. xxvii. 13) is applicable to this;—'When the one man is good, all the people look to him as their dependence, and the repose of such a State will be perpetual.' Of the rise and prosperity of Chow, the ode (She, III. i. ode I. 7) says:—

'Take your pattern from king Wan, And the myriad regions will repose confidence in you:'

showing a pattern of excellence. But in the decline of Chow, the ode (She, II. vi. ode I. 2) says:—

'The great officers are unfair;

I am made to serve; I alone am deemed worthy; showing how [at that time] they would not yield to one another. In an age of good government, men in high stations prefer ability, and give place to those who are below them; and the lesser people labour vigorously at their husbandry to serve their superiors. In this way all the rules of propriety are observed both by high and low, and slanderers and evil men fall into disrepute and disappear. Such a state of things arises from their not quarrelling about superiority;—it is what we call a state of admirable virtue. But in an age of disorder, men in high stations proclaim their merit in order to impose their will on those who are below them, and the lesser people boast of their arts to encroach on their superiors. In this way the rules of propriety are observed by neither high nor low, and disorders and oppressions grow up together. Such a state of things arises from contentions about superiority; —it is what we call a state where virtue is allobscured. The ruin of a State is sure to result from it."'

Par. 3. This was king Kung(共干). He was succeeded by his son Ch'sou, known as king K'ang (康王昭). The Chuen says:—'The viscount of Ts'oo was ill, and addressed his great officers, saying, "I, the unworthy, was called when young to preside over the altars. At the age of ten, I lost my father, and the dignity of the State fell to my lot before I had been trained by the instructions of the tutor and guard-Thus it was that I lost my army at Yen (see VIII. xvi. 6), to the very great disgrace of our altars, and the very great sorrow of you. If by your influence I am able to preserve my head, and die a natural death, for the business of sacrifice and interment, whereby I shall take the place after my predecessors in the temple proper to me, I beg you will call me by such an epithet as Ling (憲) or Le (厲), according as They gave him no reply, you shall choose." till he had charged them five times, when they consented.

'In the autumn, he—king Kung—died, and Tsze-nang was consulting about the posthumous epithet for him, when the great officers said, "We have his own charge about it." Tszenang said, "His charge was marked by humble reverence. Why should we use any other epithet but that which is expressive of that quality? He came to the charge of this glorious State of Ts'oo; he tranquillized, and got the dominion of, the Man and the E; his expeditions went rapidly forth along the sea of the south; and he subjected the great States. And yet he knew his errors;—may he not be pronounced humbly reverent ( )? Let us call him by the epithet of Kung." The great officers agreed.

[The Chuen appends here:—'Woo made a raid upon Ts'oo. Yang Yëw-ke hurried away with a charge [to resist the enemy], followed by Tsze-käng with a [larger] force. Yang Shuh said, "Woo is taking advantage of the death of our king, thinking we shall not be able to take the field. They are sure to slight us, and not use proper caution. Do you place three ambushments, and wait for the result of my measures, giving me leave to decoy them." Tsze-käng having agreed to this, a battle was fought at Yung-poo, when the troops of Woo received a great defeat, and the Kung-tsze Tang was taken. The superior man will say, "Woo was unpitying;—[as] the ode (She, II.iv. ode VII. 6) saya,

'Great Heaven has no compassion,
And there is no end to the disorders.'"

Par. 4. Fang,—see I. ix. 6. The city was granted, probably about this time, to the Tsangsun family. The Chuen says:—'This text shows the seasonableness of the proceeding [from the state of other business]. They had wished to wall the city earlier, but Tsang Woo-chung begged to wait till the labours of husbandry were finished;—which was right.'

[The Chuen here takes up the narrative under xi. 10:- 'Lëang Sëaou of Ch'ing, and the grand-superintendent Shih Ch'oh, were still in Ts'oo. Shih Ch'oh said to Tsze-nang, "The ancient kings divined about their progresses for five years, year by year seeking for a favourable response. When they found that repeated so many times, then they set out. If such a response was not repeated, they cultivated their virtue with increased assiduity, and divined again. Now Ts'00 cannot maintain its struggle with Tsin; but what is the offence of [Ching's] messenger? You here detain one of its high ministers, relieving its court of the pressure [of its ministers on one another], making the others more harmonious and adhere firmly to Tsin, with a hatred of Ts'oo; what is the use of such a measure? If you send him back, and thus frustrate the object of his mission, he will resent the conduct of his ruler, and be at ennity with the great officers, so that they will begin to draw different ways; -- would not this be a better course?" On this the people of Ts'oo sent them both back].'

XIV. In the [duke's] fourteenth year, in spring, in the king's first month, Ke-sun Suh, and Shuh Laou, along with Sze Kae of Tsin, officers of Ts'e, Sung, and Wei, the Kung-sun Ch'ae of Ch'ing, and officers of Ts'aou, Keu, Choo, T'ang, Sëeh, Ke, and Little Choo, had a meeting with Woo in Hëang.

In the second month, on Yih-we, the first day of the 2

moon, the sun was eclipsed.

In summer, in the fourth month, Shuh-sun P'aou joined 3 Seun Yen of Tsin, officers of Ts'e and Sung, Pih-kung Kwoh of Wei, the Kung-sun Ch'ae of Ch'ing, and officers of Ts'aou, Keu, Ch'oo, T'ang, Seeh, Ke, and Little Choo, in invading Ts'in.

On Ke-we, the marquis of Wei left his State, and fled 4 to Ts'e.

5 A body of men from Keu made a raid upon our eastern borders.

- In autumn, the Kung-tsze Ching of Ts'oo led a force and 6 invaded Woo.
- In winter, Ke-sun Suh had a meeting with Sze Kae of 7 Tsin, Hwa Yueh of Sung, Sun Lin-foo of Wei, the Kung-sun Ch'ae of Ch'ing, and officers of Keu and Choo, in Ts'eih.

lated in the Chuen appended to par. 8 of last tion from Woo to Tsin for help; but, as Woo Ching has remarked, the text, where representatives of Tsin and the other States all go to meet Woo, would rather indicate that the meeting was called by Tsin for its own purposes, to make use of Woo, instead of giving help to it.

Here and below, Kung-yang has in for ...... At this meeting we have two officers, both ministers, present on the part of Loo;—Ke-sun Suh and Shuh Laou (a son of Kung-sun Yingta'e, and grandson of Shuh-heili, mentioned VII. xvii. 7). There were always two officers sent by the States to those meetings, a principal and an assistant (— I —  $\widehat{T}$ ), but the second was inferior in rank, and only the principal took part in conserence. Loo departed from the ordinary rule in this case probably to flatter Trin, and Trin accepted the adulation by admitting two envoys to the meeting.

The Chuen says:—'This spring, Woo annonnced to Tsin the defeat [which it had sustained from Ts'00], and a meeting was held at licang, to consult about measures against Par. 1. The defeat of Woo by Ts'oo is re- | Ts'oo, in the interest of Woo. Fan Seuen-tsze, however, pointed out Woo's act of misconyear. Tso-she supposes that this meeting at | duct, and sent away its representative. He Heang (the Heang in dis. of Hwae-yuen; see on [also] caused the Kung-tsze Woo-low of Keu I. ii. 2) was held in consequence of an application be seized, because of Keu's interchanging communications with Ts'oo. He wished [further] to seize Ken-che, viscount of the Jung, and accused him, himself, in the court [which had been established in Hëang], saying, "Come, you chief of the Këang Jung! Formerly, the people of Ts'in drove Woo-le, one of your ancestors, to Kwa-chow, when he came, clothed with rushes and forcing his way through briars and thorns, and threw himself on our ruler duke Hwuy, who cut off from Tsin some poor lands, and gave them to you to afford you a subsistence. The States do not now yield to our ruler the service which they formerly did, because of reports leaking [out from Tsin],—all through you. You must not be present at the business of to-morrow morning; if you are, I will cause you to be seized." The viscount replied, 'Formerly, the people of Ts'in, relying on their multitudes, and covetous of territory, drove out us Jung. Then [your] duke Hwuy displayed his great kindness; and considering that we Jung were the descendants of the schief of the four mountains (see the Shoo, I.11), and were not to be entirely cut off and abandoned; be gave us the lands on his southern border. The territory was one where jackals dwelt and wolves howled, but we Jung extirpated the briars and thorns from it, drove away the jackais and wolves, and considered ourselves his subjects, who should not make inroads on his State, nor rebel. Nor to the present day have we swerved from our allegiance. Formerly, when duke Wan and Tsin invaded Ching (see V. xxxv.), the people of Ts'in stealthily made a covenant with Ching, and left some troops as a guard in its territory, which led to the battle of Hëaou (V. xxxiii. 3). There Tsin met the enemy in front, and we Jung withstood him in the rear. That the army of Ts'in did not return to their State was owing to our services. As in the pursuit of a stag, the people of Tsin took Ts'in by the horns, and we took it by the feet, and along with Tsin, we laid it prostrate on the ground;—night we not expect to escape such a charge as you bring against us? From that time to the present, in all the expeditions of Tsin we Jung have taken part, one after another, as they occurred, following its leaders, without ever during to keep ourselves apart from them. And now when the troops of your officers have indeed committed some errors which are separating the States from you, you try to throw the blame on us. Our drink, our food, our clothes are all different from those of the Flowery States; we do not interchange silks or other articles of introduction with their courts; their language and ours do not admit of intercourse between us and them:—what evil is it possible for us to have done? Not to be present at the meeting will not be a grief to me." He then sang the Tsing ying (She, II. vii. ode VI.), and withdrew. Seuen-taze acknowledged his error, made the viscount be present at the business of the meeting, and proved himself "the gentle and harmonious superior" [of that ode].

'At this time Taze-shuh Ta'e-tsze (Shuh Laou) was the assistant of Ke Woo-tsze and attended the meeting. From this time Tsin made the contributions of Loo lighter, and gave more respect to its messengers.'

The above Chuen is interesting, as showing how the chiefs of the various ruder tribes might be present at the meetings of the States, though there be no record of such a thing in the text.

[The Chuen turns here to the affairs of Woo: -Choo-fan, viscount of Woo, when the mourning [for his father] was [so far] completed (see the death of the former viscount, xii. 4), wished to raise his younger brother Chah to be lord of the State; but Chah declined the dignity, saying, When duke Seuen of Ts'nou died (see VIII. xiii. 4, 6), the States and the people of Ts'aou, disapproving of the new ruler, wished to raise Tsze-tsang in Seuen's room. Tsze-tsang, however, left Ts'aou, and would not be [earl of it]. thus establishing the position of the [actual] ruler. Superior men say of him that he could maintain in purity his position. You are the rightful heir; who will dare to be false to you? I cannot possess the State in my position. Devoid as I am of ability, I wish rather to follow the example of Tsze-tsang, so as not to lose my purity." When the thing was still pressed upon him, he abandoned his house, and took to ploughing, on which his brother let him alone.']

Par. 2. This eclipse took place on the 8th of January, B.c. 558.

Par. 3. The Chuen says:—'In summer, the great officers of the States followed the marquis of Tsin to invade Ts'in, in return for the affair at Leih (see on xi. 11). The marquis waited on the borders of the State, and sent his six ministers forward with the forces of the States. When the armies reached the King, they were unwilling] to cross it; but Shuh-hëang (Yangsheh Heih; the Shuh-heih of the Chuen on xi. 8) having seen Shuh-sun Muh-taze (P'aou), the latter sang the P'aou yew k'oo yeh (She, L iii. ode IX), on which Shuh-hëang withdrew and prepared boats for crossing the stream. The men of Loo and Keu were the first to cross. Tszekëaou of Ching, seeing Pih-kung E-tsze of Wei, said to him, "If we take a side and do not adhere firmly to it, we shall bring on ourselves the greatest evils. What will be the consequences to our altars?" The other was pleased. and they united in advising the forces of the States to cross the King. This was done and the army then halted, but the people of Tsin had put poison into the stream higher up, in consequence of which many of the soldiers died. Tsze Këaou, minister of War of Ching, led its forces forward, and was followed by those of the other States to Yih-lin.

'[When they were there], they still did not succeed in bringing Ts'in to terms, and Seun Yen issued an order that at cock-crow they should yoke their chariots, fill up the wells, level their furnaces, and look only at his horses' heads, [and follow him]." Lwan Yen said, "Such an order as this was never given out by the State of Tsin. My horses' heads wish to go to the east;" and with this he turned back, followed by the third army. The historiographer of the Left said to Wei Chwang-tsze (Wei Këang), "Will you not wait for Chung-hang Pih (Seun Yen)?" but Chwang-tsze said, "He ordered us to follow our leaders. Lwan Pih is my leader: I will follow him, and in this way wait for the general." [On learning this], Pih-yëw (Seun Yen) said, "I committed an error, and repentance for it will not now avail. We shall leave many prisoners in the hands of Ts'in." On this he commanded a great retreat; and the people of Tsin called the whole affair "The campaign of changes and delays."

'Lwan Këen said, "This service was to repay the affair of Leih, and it proves itself to be a failure;—to the disgrace of Tsin. And there are two of us [he was a brother of Lwan Yen) in the expedition;—can I but feel the disgrace?" He then dashed with Sze Yang against the army of Ts'in and was killed, Sze Yang [escaping and] returning. Lwan Yen said to Sze Kae, "My brother did not wish to go forward, and your son invited him to do so. My brother died, while your son has returned. He is answerable for my brother's death, and if you do not drive him away, I will kill him." On this Sze

Yang fled to Tsin.

'Tsuy Ch'oo of Ts'e, and Hwa Yueh and Chung Këang of Sung, were engaged in this expedition, but their names do not appear in the text, because they were remiss. For the same reason they are not mentioned in the account of the meeting at Hëang. Pih-kung Kwoh of Wei does not appear at that meeting, but he is mend here, because he was here more attentive

he earl of Ts'in asked Sze Yang which of reat officers of Tsin would first go to ruin, was answered, "Probably the Lwan." "Beof their excessive arrogance?" asked the "Yes," was the reply. "The arrogance and nce of Lwan Yen are extreme, but still he escape an evil end. The thing will happen ng." "Why so?" pursued the earl. Yang ered, "The good offices of Woo-tsze (Yen's r) to the people [have made them think of j as the people of Chow thought of the of Shaou. If they loved the sweet pear [of the duke] (see the She, I. ii. ode v.), much more must the people now regard the of Woo-tsze]! When Lwan Yen dies, and codness of Ying does not extend to the peohe favours of Woo-tsze will be forgotten, the wrongs done by Yen will be clearly seen, then the doom will come." The earl was essed with the wisdom of his remarks, apd in his behalf to Tsin, and got him red to that State.' With this 'Expedition anges and delays' the strife between Tsin I's in came to a long intermission. The two s were about equally matched. The rees of Tsin were more fully developed, but did not exceed those of its neighbour to a degree as to enable it to maintain a perint superiority over Ts'in.

ou lays down canons about the names of officers which are in the text, just the ary of those laid down by Tso;—showing uncertain all such criticism is.

r. 4. Kung-yang has III, the marquis's of Weihad given an invitation to Sun Wän-Sun Lin-foo) and Ning Hwuy-tsze (Ning) to eat with him, and the two officers dressed selves, and went to court accordingly. The, however, had sent them no [subsequent] nons [to the feast], even when the day was ng late, but was shooting wild geese in the Thither they followed him, when he spoke em, without taking off his skin cap. They offended, and Wan-tsze repaired to [his of Ts'eih, from which he sent [his son] Sun to the court. The duke called for spirits nk with Kwae, and ordered the chief musicer to sing the last stanza of the K'ëaou She, II. v. ode IV.). That officer declined so, and his subordinate Ts'aou asked leave ig it. Before this, the duke had employed Is aou to teach a favourite concubine the and he had whipped the lady, which so enthe duke that he had given the musician plows. It was in consequence of this that u wished to sing the stanza, that he might by enrage Sun-tsze, and obtain his own reupon the duke. The duke ordered him g the words, and further to intimate his ing in them. Kwae was afraid, and told rhole thing to his father, who said, "The suspects me. If I do not take the initia-I shall die." On this he brought his son Ts'eih, and went [to the capital] to see Pih-yuh, and said to him, "You are well e of the cruel oppressions of our ruler; I very much afraid lest our altars be overvn:—what is to be done?" Pih yuh re-, "The ruler's authority is supreme; who will dare to oppose him? And though we should oppose him, do we know that we should find a better?" And after this interview he left the State by the nearest gate on the borders.

'The duke then sent Tsze-këaou, Tsze-pih, and Tsze-p'e to make a covenant in K'ëw-kung with Sun-taze, who put them all to death. In the 4th month, on Ke-we, Tsze-chen fled to Ts'e; and the duke went to Këuen, from which he sent Tsze-hang to Sun-tsze, who put him also to death. The duke then left the State, and fled towards Ts'e, pursued by the Sun, who defeated his followers at the marsh of O. The people of Keuen also took some of them prisoners. Yin-kung T'o and Yu-kung Ch'ae continued the pursuit of the duke. T'o had learned archery from Ch'ae, whose own instructor in the art had been the Kung-sun Ting. Ting was now driving the duke's chariot, and Tsze-yu (Yu-kung Ch'se) said, "If I shoot, I do violence to my instructor; and if I do not shoot, I shall be killed;—had I not beter shoot in ceremony only?" Accordingly he shot twice, [merely] hitting the yoke over the horses' necks, and returned. [By and by] Yin-kung T'o said, "He was your master, but I am farther removed from him," and thereon he turned again in pursuit. The Kung-sun Ting gave the reins to the duke, and sent an arrow through the upper part of T'o's arm.

'Tsze-sëen followed the duke, who sent the director of prayers back from the borders of the State to announce his flight [in the ancestral temple], and to announce that he was free from guilt. [His father's proper wife], Ting Keang said [on this], "If there be no Spirits, what is the use of such an announcement? If there be, they are not to be imposed upon;—guilty as he is, how can he announce that he is free from guilt? He neglected the great officers, and took counsel with his small officers;—that was one act of guilt. He treated with contempt the chief ministers of his father, who had been appointed tutor and guardian to him; that was a second. He was oppressive, as to a concubine, to me, who with towel and comb had served his father; that was a third. He might announce his flight; but nothing more; how could he announce that he was free from guilt?"

'The marquis [of Loo] sent How Ch'ing-shuh on a visit of condolence to Wei, who said, "My ruler has sent me (Tseih was Ch'ingtshuh's name), having heard that your ruler was no longer watching over your altars, but had crossed your borders into another State. In such circumstances, how could he but send his condolences? Considering how he had covenanted with your ruler, he has sent me privately to you, the officers of Wei, to say, 'Your ruler showed no sympathy, and his ministers were not earnest and intelligent. He did not forgive [their offences], and they did not perform their duties. His excesses were increased, and they gave vent to their resentments. What is to be done in such a case?" The people of Wei appointed Tae-shuh E to reply to him, who said, "We officers, in our want of ability, offended our ruler. He did not proceed to punish us, but in grief has left the State, causing sorrow to your ruler. Mindful of the friendship between the former princes of Wei and Loo, your ruler has condescended to send his condolences to us, and to show us his great pity. We venture to acknowledge the condescension of his message; we thank him deeply for his great gift." When How-sun returned, and reported the execution of his mission, he said to Tsang Woo-chung, "The ruler of Wei will yet return, I apprehend, to his State. There is Tae-shuh E to keep guard in it; there is his own brother Chuen (Taze-seen), who has left it with him. With the former watching over his interests in the State, and the latter to build him up out of it, is it possible he should not be restored?"

'The people of Ta'e assigned Lae to the marquis as his residence, and when he returned to Wei, he took with him the provisions that were in it. Kuh, commandant of the right, had followed the marquis on his flight, but afterwards stole away from him, and returned to Wei, where the people wished to put him to death. He pleaded, however, that he had not gone away at first with a good will, and that he might be compared to a robe of fox-skin with sleeves of lamb's fur. On this they forgave him, and raised P'ëaou, a grandson of duke Muh to the vacant seat. To him Sun Lin-foo and Ning Chih acted as chief ministers, awaiting his recognition by the States.

'While the marquis of Wei was in Lac, Tsang Heih went to Ts'e, and paid him a visit of condolence, when he spoke in so violent a way, that, when Heih retired, he said to his followers that the marquis would not be able to enter the "His words," said he, "are dirt. state again. His exile has wrought no change in him. How is it possible that he should return?' Tsze-chen and Tsze-seen heard this, and visited Heih, when their discourse was so marked by right principle, that he said to his people, "The ruler of Wei is sure to return to his State. With the one of these officers to pull him forward, and the other to keep him back, though he wished not to enter it, he could not keep from doing so."'

The Kang-he editors observe on this paragraph:—'In the account of the exit of the marquis of Wei, the Ch'un Ts'ëw does not mention the traitors who drove him out, but ascribes his flight to himself. In consequence of this, Too Yu and K'ung Ying-tab held that the style was condemnatory of the ruler, in which view they were followed by Hoo Gan-kwoh. But this is not the idea of the text. There is no greater crime than the expulsion of a ruler by a minister; and is it to be supposed that the sage would indicate his condemnation of the ruler only? Wang Ts'ësou and Yen K'e-lung have therefore This method of both disputed this view.' settling a point on the critic's a priori view of the author's character and intention will not pass current out of China. With the account in the text there has to be taken the statement of Ning Chih on his deathbed, as given in the Chuen at the end of the 20th year, that it was recorded in the tablets (策書), of the States, that 'Ning Chih drove out his ruler.' contends that there were, besides those tablets, others (簡書) in a different style, and that Confucius made his text from the latter. distinction of tablets again is vehemently controverted; and even if it were granted, the point of real interest in regard to the merits of Confucius as a historian would not be affected by it.—We look for truth as to the things which he relates, and we do not get it. It is to be observed, however, that only in the case of the murder of a ruler is the name of the traitor given in the Ch'un Ts'ëw, and even not always then. Records of expulsions are in the style of the text here, with the addition generally of the name of the fugitive prince,—as in II. xv. 4. The omission of the name in the text, however, is not to be considered important.

[The Chuen takes us now, in two narratives to Tain:_lst. 'When his armies returned from the invasion of Ts'in, the marquis of Tsin disbanded the new army;—which was according to rule. The armies of a large State could only be half those of the Son of Heaven. Chow had six armies, and the greatest of the States might have three. At this time, Che Soh ( ), belonging to a branch of the Seun or Chunghang clan) had died after the birth of [? his brother] Ying. Woo-taze, [their father], also died when Ying was only six years old. Che ing to the Fan or Sze clan) was also still young. Neither of them was competent for office. There was thus no leader for the new army, and it was given up.'

2d. 'The music-master Kwang being by the side of the marquis of Tsin, the marquis said to him, 'Have not the people of Wei done very wrong in expelling their ruler?" Kwang replied, "Perhaps the ruler had done very wrong. A good ruler will reward the virtuous and punish the vicious; he will nourish his people as his children, overshadowing them as heaven, and supporting them as the earth. Then the people will maintain their ruler, love him as a parent, look up to him as the sun and moon, revere him as they do spiritual Beings, and stand in awe of him as of thunder;—could such a ruler be expelled? Now, the ruler is the host of the spirits, and the hope of the people. If he make the life of the people to be straitened and the spirits to want their sacrifices (Read 若因 民之

生, 匱 神 之 祀), then the hope of the people is cut off, and the altars are without a host;—of what use is he, and what should they do but send him away? Heaven, in giving birth to the people, appointed for them rulers to act as their superintendents and pastors, so that they should not lose their proper nature. For the rulers there are assigned their assistants to act as tutors and guardians to them, so that they should not go beyond their proper limits. Therefore the son of Heaven has his dukes; princes of States have their high ministers; ministers have [the Heads of | their collateral families; great officers have the members of the secondary branches of their families; inferior officers have their friends; and the common people, mechanics, merchants, police runners, shepherds, and grooms, all have their relatives and acquaintances to aid and assist them. These stimulate and honour those [to whom they stand in such a relation], when they are good, and correct them when they do wrong. They rescue them in calamity, and try to put away their errors. From the king downwards, every one has his father, elder brothers, sons and younger brothers, to supply [the defects] and watch over [the character of] his government. The historiographers make their records; the blind make their poems; the musicians recite their satires and remonstrances; the great officers admonish and instruct, and inferior officers report to these what they hear; the common people utter their complaints; the merchants [display their wares] in the market places; the hundred artificers exhibit their skilful contrivances. Hence in one of the Books of Hëa (Shoo IIL iv. 3) it is said, "The herald with his wooden-tongued bell goes along the roads, proclaiming, "Ye officers, able to instruct, be prepared with your admonitions. Ye workmen engaged in mechanical affairs, remonstrate on the subject of your business." In the first month, at the beginning of spring, this was done.' It was done, lest remonstrances should not be regularly presented. Heaven's love for the people is very great;—would it allow the one man to take his will and way over them, so indulging his excessive desires and discarding the [kindly] nature of Heaven and Earth? Such a thing could not be."' The reader will not wonder that the K'ang-he editors should condemn these radical sentiments of the music-master.]

Par. 5. Too says this was in retaliation for Loo's capture of Yun, in the 12th year. It was only a continuation of the aggressions of Keu, in defiance not only of Loo, but also of Tsin.

Par. 6. Tso-she says this attack was ordered by the viscount of Ts'oo, in consequence of Woo's invasion of Ts'oo the previous year, which ended with the battle of Yung-poo (see the Chuen after xiii. 3); adding, 'Teze-nang took post with his army at Tsang, intending to attack Woo; and when Woo would not come forth, he withdrew. He brought up the rear himself, and did not take precautions, thinking Woo could do nothing. A body of men, however, advancing through the defile of Kaou-chow, intercepted and fell upon him where the troops of Ts'oo could not belp one another. They defeated Tsze-nang, and took the Kung-tsze E-kuh prisoner.'

[The Chuen appends here:—'The king sent duke Ting of Lew to deliver the following charge to the marquis of Ts'e.—" Formerly, our great kinsman (duke T'ae was father-in-law to king Woo; hence the 舅), [your ancestor], duke T'ae, aided our ancient kings, and was as a limb to the House of Chow, a tutor and guardian to the myriads of the people; and his | have respect to the faithfulness [of the officers services as the grand-tutor were recompensed | spoken of ].']

with the distinction conferred on him by the eastern sea, descending to his posterity. That the royal House was not overthrown was owing to him. Now I give charge to you Hwan to follow the rules of our [great] kinsman, and to continue the services of your ancestors, bringing no disgrace on them. Be reverent. Do not neglect my charge]!"'

Par. 7. Ts'eih,—see VI. i. 9. This meeting had relation to the affairs of Wei, and from the presence at it of Sun Lin-foo, we can understood how its councils were likely to incline.

The Chuen says:—'The marquis of Tsin consulted Chung-hang Hëen-tsze (Seun Yen) about the affairs of Wei, when that minister replied, "Our best plan is to accede to its present circumstances, and settle it accordingly. Wei has a ruler. If we attack it, we may not succeed as we should desire, and we shall be troubling the The historiographer Yih said, 'Add stability to the heavy.' Chung-hwuy said, 'Deal summarily with States that are going to ruin, and take their States from the disorderly. To overthrow the perishing and strengthen what is being preserved, is the way in which to administer a State.' Let your lordship now settle Wei, and wait the time [for a different course]. In winter a meeting was held at Ts'cih, to consult about the settlement of Wei. Fan Seuentsze borrowed from Ts'e its [banner with variegated] feathers and ox-tails, and did not return it; in consequence of which the people of Ts'e began to be disaffected.'

The Chuen appends here a short narrative about Ts'00:—'When Tsze-nang of Ts'00 returned from the invasion of Woo, he died. When he was about to die, he left word that Tsze-käng should fortify Ying. The superior man will say that Tsze-nang was [indeed a] faithful [minister]. When his ruler died, he did not forget to make him remembered by a good name (see on xiii. 3); when he was about to die himself, he did not forget to defend the altars [of the State]. Ought he not to be pronounced faithful? To the faithful the people look. The words of the ode (She, II. viii. ode I.1),

'If we could now go back to Chow, These would be admiringly looked to by all the people."

XV. 1 In the [duke's] fifteenth year, in spring, the duke of Sung sent Hëang Seuh to Loo on a mission of friendly inquiries; [and] in the second month, on Ke-hae, [the duke] made a covenant with him at Lëw.

2 Hëa of Lëw met the king's bride in Ts'e.

3 In summer, the marquis of Ts'e invaded our northern borders, and laid siege to Ch'ing. The duke went as far as Yu to relieve Ch'ing.

K'e-sun Suh and Shuh-sun P'aou led a force and walled round the suburbs of Ch'ing.

5 In autumn, in the eighth month, on Ting-sze, the sun was eclipsed.

6 A body of men from Choo invaded our southern borders.

7 In winter, in the eleventh month, on Kwei-hae, Chow, marquis of Tsin, died.

Par. 1. Too observes that this mission of Hëang Seuh was in return for that of Shuh-sun P'aou to Sung in the duke's 2d year, and to renew the covenant at Poh in the 11th year. He says nothing about the situation of Lew, from which Ying-tah infers that it was a place near the capital, though outside it. For the duke to covenant at all with the messenger was below his dignity; to go outside the city to do it was still more unbecoming. Wan Ch'ungtsung (萬充宗; of the pres. dyn.) ingeniously supposes that + are an addition to the text occasioned by the next paragraph's beginning with . The Chuen says:—'Hëang Seuh of Sung came on a friendly mission; and to renew the [existing] covenant. Visiting Mang Heen-tsze, he reproved him about his house, saying, "I did not expect that a man of your great reputation would have so beautiful a house." Hëen-tsze replied, "My elder brother did it, when I was in Tsin. To have taken it down again would have been a great labour, and I did not wish to find fault with him."'

Par. 2. The negotiation for the king's marriage with a princess of Ts'e is related in the Chuen appended to xii. 5. For the ceremonies in conveying a king's bride to Chow, see on II. viii. 6. Those ceremonies appear not to have been correctly observed on the occasion here spoken of. The Lew Hea of the text is no doubt, the 'duke Ting of Lew,' mentioned in the Chuen appended to par. 6 of last year. But his appearing by his name here shows, according to the rules for the use of titles, designations, and names, that he was not yet a high minister or duke of the court, and not even a great officer; yet here he is employed to receive the queen and convey her to Chow,—a duty for which only a high minister was competent. What Tso-she says on the subject is too brief to be intelligible:—'An officer, following duke Tsing of Shen, met the queen in Ts'e. That a minister did not go on this duty was contrary to rule.'

The Chuen gives two narratives here about the affairs of Ts'oo and of Ch'ing. 1st. 'The Kung-taze Woo of Ts'oo was made chief minister (in room of Tsze-nang); the Kung-tsze P'ejung, director of the Right; Wei Tsze-p'ing, grand marshal; the Kung-tsze Toh-sze, marshal of the Right; the Kung-tsze Ching, marshal of the Left; K'euh Taou, the Moh-gaou; the Kung-tszo Chuy-shoo, director of Remonstrances; K'euh Tang, joint-director; Yang Yëw-ke, director of the palace stables;—and thus the people of the State were composed. The superior man will say that Ts'00 was able to put the right men in the right offices. Such allotment of offices is an urgent necessity of a State; when it is done, the minds of the people have nothing more to desire. The words of the ode (She, I. i. ode Ш. 1), "Alas! I think of the men, Who can be placed in all the offices," refer to the subject of being able to give offices to proper men. "All the offices" there refers to the occupancy of their places by the king, the dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, knights, the lords of the Teen, the Ts'ae the Wei, and their great officers.'

2d. "After the insurrection of the Wei and Sze families in Ch'ing (see on x. 8), the rufflans who escaped [took refuge] in Sung, to which the people of Ch'ing, out of regard to Tsze-se, Pih-yëw, and Tsze-ch'an, sent a bribe of 160 horses, and the musicians Fei and Hwuy; and in the 3rd month, the Kung-sun Hih also went [to Sung] as a hostage. Tsze-han, [Sung's] minister of Works, on this, delivered up Chay (So is here, and should formerly have been, read) Joo-foo, Wei P'ëen, and Sze Ts'e; but thinking well of Sze Shin, he let him escape to the protection of Ke Woo-tsze [in Loo], who placed him in Péen. The people of Ch'ing reduced the other three men to pickle. The musician Hwuy was passing by the court of Sung, and wished to make his water, when his guide told him it was the court. "But," said Hwuy, "there is no man there." "It is the court," replied the other; "how should there be no man there?" "It is impossible," said Hwuy, "there should be any man. If there were, would he have preferred [two] blind masters of licentious music to [simply gratifying] the ministers of a State of a thousand chariots? This is a proof that there can be no man there." When Tsze-han heard this, he made an urgent request, and returned [the musicians].']

Parr. 3, 4. Ching,—see II. vi. 2. Yu was also in Loo, and the duke only advanced to it, fearing an encounter with Ta'e, which seems, however, to have withdrawn its troops, leaving to Suh and P'aou the opportunity of fortifying the place. He we have seen, denotes 'the outer suburbs' extending beyond the R. We must suppose that the wall now reared was between the limits of the two, outside the R. on the inside of the R. The Chuen says:—'In summer, the marquis of Ts'e laid siege to Ching, having become estranged from Tsin. On this we fortified the suburbs of Ching.' Ching was the city of the Mang-sun clan. That the Heads of the other two clans undertook to fortify it shows, it is understood, the alliance that existed

Par. 5. This eclipse took place May 23d, B.C. 557. The month is wrong;—it was really the 6th month intercalary. Even Too Yu saw that there was an error in the text.

Par. 6. The Chuen says:—'In autumn, a body of men from Choo invaded our southern borders, when we sent information of their doing so to Tsin. Tain purposed to call a meeting [of the States], to punish Choo and Keu, but the thing was stopped by the illness of the marquis. In winter duke Taou of Tain died, and no meeting [of the States] could be held.'

Par. 7. The marquis Chow, or duke Taou, of Tsin was a prince of great merit, though he is ranked as inferior to his predecessor, duke Wan, and to duke Hwan of Ts'e. He was succeeded by his sen Pēw ( ), known as duke Ping.

The Chuen adds here three short narratives: —lst. 'The Kung-sun Hea of Ching went to Tain, hurrying to the death-rites. Taze-keaou attended the funeral.' 2d. 'A man of Sung found a gem, and presented it to Tsze-han, who would not receive it. The man said, "I showed it to a lapidary, who considered it to be valuable, and therefore I ventured to offer it to you." Tare-han said, "What I consider valuable is not to be covetous; what you consider valuable is your gem. If you give it to me, we shall both lose what we consider to be valuable; we had better each keep his own." [The man] bowed his head to the earth, and said, " If a small man like me carry such a peia in his bosom, he cannot leave his village. I offer it as my means of asking [an escape from] death." Tszehan on this placed the man in the street where he lived himself, and made a lapidary cut the gem for him, who in this way became rich, and was sent afterwards back to his place." 3d. 'In the 12th month, the people of Ching took away his wife from Chay Kow, and sent her back to the Fan family [of Tain, to which she belonged.

In the third month, the duke had a meeting with the 2 [new] marquis of Tsin, the duke of Sung, the marquis of Wei, the earls of Ch'ing and Ts'aou, the viscounts of Choo and Keu, the earls of Sëeh and Ke, and the viscount of Little Choo, in Këih-lëang. On Mow-yin [their] great officers made a covenant.

3 The people of Tsin seized the viscounts of Keu and Choo, and carried them back [to Tsin].

4 The marquis of Ts'e invaded our northern borders.

5 In summer, the duke came from the meeting.

6 In the fifth month, on Këah-tsze, there was an earthquake.

- 7 Shuh Laou joined the earl of Ch'ing, Seun Yen of Ts'e, Ning Chih of Wei, and an officer of Sung, in invading Heu.
- 8 In autumn, the marquis of Ts'e invaded our northern borders, and laid siege to Ch'ing.

9 We had a grand sacrifice for rain.

10 In winter, Shuh-sun P'aou went to Tsin.

Par. 1. This interment was hurried on;—probably because of the urgency of public affairs, that the new marquis might be able to attend the meeting in the next par.

Parr. 2, 3. Keih-leang might be translated 'bridge or dam of Keih.' The place is referred to the present dis. of Tse-yuen ( ), dep. Hwae-king, near mount Yuen (原 山), on the Pili-këen river (白洞水). The Chuen says:—'On the burial of duke Taou, duke Ping took his place. Yang-sheh Heih (appears formerly as Shuh-hëang) was made [grand-] tutor; Chang Keun-chin (son of Chang Laou), marshal of the army of the centre; K'e He, Han Scang, Lwan Ying, and Sze Yang, great officers of the ducal kindred; and Yu K'ëw-shoo, charioteer to the duke, who changed his mourning, arranged all the offices, and offered the winter sacrifice in K'ëuh-yuh. Having carefully arranged for the keeping of the State, he descended [eastwards], and met the States at Keih-lëang. He ordered them to return the lands which they had taken from one another in their incursions; and on our account he seized duke Seuen of Choo and duke Le-pe of Keu, charging them moreover with maintaining a friendly intercourse with Ts'e and Ts'oo. The marquis feasted with the other princes in Wan, and made their great officers dance before them, telling them that the odes which they sang must be befitting the occasion. That sung by Kaou How of Ts'e was not so, which enraged Seun Yen, so that he said, "The States are cherishing a disaffected spirit," and proposed that all the great officers should make a covenant with Kaou How, who, however, stole away back to Ts'e. On this, Shuh-sun P'aou, Seun Yen of Tsin, Höang Seuh of Sung, Ning Chih of Wei, the Kung-sun Ch'ae of Ch'ing, and a great officer of Little Choo, made a covenant, engaging that they should together punish the State which did not appear at the court sof

Kung-yang and Kuh-lëang argue from the 2d par., where the princes meet but only the great officers covenant, that it supplies evidence of how the power of the States was being engrossed by the latter; and this view was followed by Hoo Gan-kwoh and Choo He. The Chuen, however, supplies a better ground for the covenanting in this case being confined to the great officers.

Par. 4. Ts'e would seem to have now determined to set Tsin at defiance.

Par. 7. Shuh Laou,—see xiv. 1. The Chuen says:—'The baron of Heu asked leave from Tsin to remove his capital (see VIII. xv. 11, where Heu moves its capital to be near Tsoo, while now it wants to move back towards Tsin). The States accordingly [assembled to] superintend the removal, which the great officers of Heu then refused to sanction. The commanders of Tsin sent the princes back to their States; but Tszekëaou of Ching, hearing that it was intended to invade Heu, kept in attendance on the earl, and followed the armies [which had been detained for the expedition]. Mult-shuh (Shuh-sun P'sou), however, went back to Loo with the duke, while Ts'e-tsze (Shuh Laou) joined Seun Yen of Tsin with a force. The text says that "he joined the earl of Ching," the earl's rank requiring this style, [though in reality Seun Yen commanded in the expedition]. In summer, in the 6th month, they halted at Yih-lin; and on Kang-yin they attacked [the capital of] Heu, halting at Han-she.

'[Then] Seun Yen and Lwan Yen of Tsin led a force and invaded Ts'oo, in return for the expedition [by Ts'oo] to Yang-lëang of Sung (see on xii. 5). The Kung-tsze Kih came with a force, and fought with that of Tsin at Chan-fan, where he received a great defeat. The army of Tsin then overran the country outside Ts'oo's barrier wall, and returned to the attack of Hen.

and thence back to Tsin.'

According to this Chuen, an invasion of Hen and an invasion of Ts'oo were confusedly mixed up together, though the text only speaks of the former. Many critics contend that Seun Yen should appear before the earl of Ching, as he, representing Tsin, was director of all the forces; and Maou contends that the order of the names proves that the invasion of Hen was really from Ching, and not from Tsin;—contrary to the Chuen.

Par. 8. Tso-she has fill for five. The Chuen says:—'In autumn, the marquis of Ts'e laid siege to Ch'ing, when Mang Suh, [styled] Yutsze, (a son of Mang Hëen-tsze) came suddenly upon him. "This," said the marquis, "is a man of daring; let us leave the place, and so make his name famous." Suh then shut up the ravine by the sea, and returned.'

Par. 10. The Chuen says:—'In winter, Muhshuh went to Tsin on a visit of friendly inquiries, and also to speak about Ts'e. The people of Tsin said, "[The reason of our inaction is] that our ruler has not yet offered the te sacrifice (See on IV. ii. 2), and that the people have not yet rested [from their toils against Ts'oo and Heu]. But for these things, we should not have dared to forget [your distress]." Muhshuh said, "Because the people of Ts'e morning and evening vent their indignation on our poor State, therefore we press our request [for help]. Such is the urgency of our distress, that in the morning we cannot be confident there will be the evening, and with necks outstretched we look to the west, and say, 'Perhaps [Tsin] is coming.' When your officers have leisure, I am afraid the help may be too late." When he saw Chung-hang Hëen-tsze (Seun Yen), he sang the K'e-foo (She, II. iv. ode I.); and Hëen-taze said, "I know my guilt. How dared I not to follow your officers, and along with them care for your altars, causing Loo to come to this distress?" When he saw Fan Seuen-tsze, he sang the last stanza of the Hung yen (She, II. iii. ode VII.) and Seuen-tsze said, "Here am I, Kae. Dare I allow the people of Loo to be scattered about?"

Seventeenth year.

- XVII. 1 In the [duke's] seventeenth year, in spring, in the king's second month, on Kang-woo, K'ang, viscount of Choo, died.
  - 2 A body of men from Sung invaded Ch'in.
  - 3 In summer, Shih Mae of Weiled a force, and invaded Ts'aou.
  - 4 In autumn, the marquis of Ts'e invaded our northern borders, and laid siege to T'aou. Kaou How of Ts'e invaded our northern borders, and laid siege to Fang.
  - 5 In the ninth month, there was a grand sacrifice for rain.

6 Hwa Shin of Sung fled from that State to Ch'in.

7 In winter, a body of men from Choo invaded our southern borders.

Psr. 1. This was duke Seuen (宣文). He had been carried as a prisoner to Tsin from the meeting at Keih-leang in the previous year, but must have been liberated and returned to Choo. He was succeeded by his son Hwa(華), known as

Par. 2. The marquis of Ch'in, it was seen, stole away from the meeting of the northern States at Wei, in the 7th year; and from that time Ch'in had kept aloof from the northern alliance, and been confederate with Ts'oo. It was this, no doubt, which led to the present action of Sung against it. The Chuen says:— 'This spring, Chwang Chaou of Sung invaded Ch'in, and took prisoner its minister of Instruction Gang;—through his making too light of [the force of] Sung.'

Par. 3. The Chuen says:— Sun Kwae (son of Sun Lin-foo) of Wei was hunting in Suy of Par. 3. The Chuen says:—'Sun Kwae (son of Sun Lin-foo) of Wei was hunting in Suy of Ts'aou, and, while giving his horses drink near Ch'ung-k'ëw, broke the pitcher [of the well]. The people of Ch'ung-k'ëw shut their gate against him, and reviled him, saying, "You drove out your ruler; your father is a devil. How is it that, without taking these things to heart, you occupy yourself with hunting?" In summer, Shih Mae of Wei and Sun Kwae invaded Ts'aou, and took Ch'ung-k'ëw. The people of Ts'aou complained to Tsin.'

city. The army of Ts'e then left the place, but they had taken Tsang Keen. The marquis of Ts'e sent Shuh-sha Wei to comfort him, and tell him that he should not die. Keen bowed his head to the ground, and said, "Thanks for the condescension of this message, but your ruler's gift is not complete. How is it that he sent his castrated minister (Wei was a eunuch) on a visit of courtesy to an officer?" On this he drove a stake into his wound, and died.'

Par. 6. The Chuen says:—'On the death of Hwa Yueh of Sung, [his brother] Hwa Shin, despising the weakness of [Yueh's son], Kaoup'e, employed some ruffians to kill his steward Hwa Woo. There were six of them, and they did the deed with a long spear near the Loo gate, behind the house of the master of the Left,—him of Hoh. The master of the Left was afraid, and said to them, "The old man has committed no crime;" but they replied that Kaou-p'e for some private reasons wanted to take Woo off. [Shin] then kept Woo's wife in confinement, and required her to give him her large peik. When the duke of Sung heard of these things, he said, "Shin is not only tyrannizing over the members of his own House, but he is throwing the government of the State into great confusion;—he must be driven out." The master of the Left, however, said, "But Shin is also a minister. If the great ministers are [seen to be thus] insubordinate, it will be a diagrace to the State. You had better cover the matter up." Shin accordingly was let alone; but the master of the Left made himself a short whip, and, whenever he passed Hwa Shin's gate, made his horses gallop. In the 11th month, the people were pursuing a mad dog, which ran into Shin's house. They followed it there, and Hwa Shin, in terror, left the State and fled to Ch'in.'

Par. 7. Tso-she says this movement of Choo was in the interest of Ts'e.

The Chuen adds here two narratives:—ist. 'In Sung, Hwang Kwoh-foo, being grand-administrator, was building a tower for duke Ping. As the work interfered with the labours of harvest, Tsze-han requested that it might be deferred till that was finished. The duke, however, refused the request, and the builders sang:--

> "The White of the Tsih gate Laid on us this task. The Black in the city's midst Would comfort our hearts."

Tsze-han, hearing of this, took a stick, and went round among them, and chastised those who were not diligent, saying, "We, the small people, all have our cottages where we can shut ourselves up, and escape the burning sun, and the wet, the cold and the heat. Now our ruler is building a single tower; if you do not quickly finish it, how can you be regarded as doing work?" On this the singers stopped. When some one asked Tszehan the reason of his conduct, he said, "The State of Sung is very small. To have them blessing one in it and cursing another, would lead to calamity." 2d. 'When Gan Hwan-tsze of Ts'e died, [his son] Gan Ying had his unhemmed mourning clothes of coarse sack-cloth. head-band and girdle were still coarser; he carried a bamboo stick for a staff; and wore grass shoes. He lived on congee, and occupied the mourning shed, sleeping on rushes, with a pillow of grass. His old servant said to him, "These are not the observances proper to a great officer;" but he replied, "Only a minister should do as the great officers [now do]."'

XVIII. 1 In the [duke's] eighteenth year, in spring, [a representative of] the White Tëih came to Loo.

2 In summer, the people of Tsin seized Shih Mae, the messenger of Wei.

3 In autumn, an army of Ts'e invaded our northern borders.

In winter, in the tenth month, the duke joined the marquis of Tsin, the duke of Sung, the marquis of Wei, the earls of Ch'ing and Ts'aou, the viscounts of Keu, Choo, and T'ang, the earls of Sëeh and Ke, and the viscount of Little Choo, and laid siege with them to [the capital] of Ts'e.

5 Foo-ts'oo, earl of Ts'aou, died in the army.

6 The Kung-tsze Woo of Ts'oo led a force and invaded Ch'ing.

Par. 1. The White Teih,—see on VII. viii.
6. This was the first time, acc. to Tso-she, that they sought any intercourse with Loo; nor are they again mentioned in the classic. It is not said they came to the court of Loo(), because they knew nothing of the ceremonies current among the States of China. Comp. the language in V. xxix. 5.

Par. 2. It would appear that Shih Mae and Sun Kwae, who led the attack on Ts'aou in the past year (see on xvii. 8), had now been sent on some commission to Tsin; hence the name 77. Acc. to Tso-she, they were both seized by Tsin, but only Sheh Mae appears in the text, it being a rule of the Ch'un Ts'ëw not to mention assistant commissioners at meetings, &c.:—see on xiv. 1. The Chuen says:—'In summer, the people of Tsin seized Shih Mae, the messenger of Wei, at Chang-tsze, and they seized Sun Kwae at Tun-lëw;—both on account of [their invasion of] Ts'aou.'

Par. 3. For Kuh-lëang has kuhthis par. are occurs many times, but not 同園 nor 同伐. The 同 must show here the special interest which Loo had in the expedition. The Chuen says:- 'In autumn, the marquis of Ts'e having invaded our northern border, Chung-hang Hëen-tsze prepared to invade Ts'e. [Just then], he dreamt that he was maintaining a suit with duke Le (see on VIII. xviii. 2. Heen-tsze had taken a principal part in the murder of duke Le), in which the case was going against him, when the duke struck him with a spear on his head, which fell down before him. He took his head up, put it on his shoulders, and ran off, when he saw the wizard Kaou of Kang-yang. A day or two after, it happened that he did see this Kaou on the road, and told him his dream, and the wizard, who had had the same dream, said to him, "Your death is to happen about this time; but if you have business in the east, you will there be successful [first]." Heen-taze accepted this interpretation.

"When the marquis was proceeding to invade Ts'e, and was about to cross the Ho, Hëen-tsze bound two pairs of gems together with a thread of red silk, and offered the following prayer, "Hwan of Ts'e, relying on his defiles and trusting in his multitudes, has cast away the bonds of friendship, broken his covenants, and treated cruelly [the people,—] the lords of the Spirits. Your servant Pëw is about to lead the States to punish him, and before Pëw and behind Pëw it is the business of me his officer to go. If the enterprise be crowned with success, there will then be no disgrace to you, O Spirits, and I, Yen, will not presume to recross this river. Do ye, O Spirits, decide in this case." He then dropt the gems into the river, and crossed it.

'In winter, in the 10th month, there was a meeting on the Loo side of the Tse, when [the States] renewed their engagement at Keihleang, and undertook together to invade Ts'e. The marquis of that State withstood them at P'ing-yin, where there was a dyke with a gate, in front of which he dug a moat a k wide. Shuh-sha Wei said to him, "If you cannot fight, our best plan will be to [abandom this, and] guard our defiles;" but the marquis would not listen to him. The soldiers of the States attacked the defences, and many of the men of Ts'e were killed. Fan Säuen-tsze told Seih Wän-tsze (an officer of Ts'e), saying, "I know you, and will not keep back the truth from you. Loo and Keu have asked to enter your State from their own territories with a thousand chariots, and liberty has been given to them to do so. If they enter, your ruler is sure to lose his State. You had better consult for the emergency." Tsze-këa (the above Seih Wän-tsze) reported this to the marquis, who was frightened at the intelligence. When Gan Ying heard of this, he said, "Our ruler before had no courage, and now he has got this news;—he cannot long hold out."

'The marquis of Ts'e ascended mount Woo to look at the army of Tsin. The commanders of it had made the marshals examine all the difficult places in the hills and marshes, and set up flags in them at some distance from one another, even though there were no troops occupying them. They also sent forward their chariots with flags, only the man on the left being real, and the one on the right a figure. These were followed by carts, dragging branches after them. When the marquis saw all this, he was awed by the multitude, and returned, with all his insignia taken down.

'On Ping-yin, the last day of the moon, the my of Ta'e withdrew during the night. The army of Ta'e withdrew during the night. music-master Kwang told the marquis of Tsin of it, saying, "The crows are cawing joyfully.
The army of Ts'e must have retreated." Hing Pih told Chung-hang Pih of it, saying, "I hear the neighing of horses retreating. The army of Ts'e must be withdrawing." Shuh hëang announced to the marquis, saying, "There are crows on the wall. The army of Tse must have retreated." On Ting-maou, the 1st day of the month, the army of Tsin entered Pingyin, and went on in pursuit of the army of Ts e. Suh-sha Wei placed several large carriages together to stop up a defile, and wished to bring up the rear; but Chih Ch'oh and Kwoh Tsuy said to him, 'For you to bring up the rear of the army would be a disgrace to Ts'e. Please go on in front." Accordingly they took his place in the rear; and Wei killed a number of horses in the narrowest part of the way to shut it up [against theal]. [Soon after], Chow Ch'oh of Tsin came up, and shot Chih Ch'oh in the shoulder, two arrows lodging, one on each side of his neck, crying out, "Stop, and you shall be kept a prisoner in the army. If you do not stop, I will shoot you through your heart." The other looked round, and said to him, "Make me an oath [to that effect]." "I swear to you by the sun," replied Chow Ch'oh, and with this he unstrung his bow, and bound his hands behind him him-self. His spearman Keu Ping also laid aside his weapon, and bound Kwoh Tsuy. Both of them were bound in the same way with their buff-coats on, and sat down at the foot of the drum of the army of the centre. The men of Tsin wanted to pursue the fugitives who were making for the capitals, while Loo and Wei asked leave to attack the [various] defiles.

'On Ke-maou, Seun Yen and Sze Kae, with the army of the centre, reduced King-tsze. On Yih-yëw, Wei Këang and Lwan Ying, with the third army, reduced She. Chaou Woo and Han K'e, with the first army, invested Leu, and could not take it; but in the 12th month, on Mow-seuh, they arrived at Tsin-chow, and cut down the [fields of] southernwood about the Yung gate [of the capital]. Fan Yang made an attack on that gate, and his charioteer, Chuy He, killed a dog in it with a spear, while Mang Chwang-tsze hewed down the ch'wa trees about it, to make lutes for our duke. On Ke-has they burned the Yung gate, with the western and southern suburbs. Lew Nan and Sze Joh led the armies of the States, and burned down the bamboos and other trees about the Shin pond. On Jin-yin they burned the eastern and northern suburbs, while Fan Yang attacked the Yang gate, and Chih Ch'oh that on the east. There his outside horse on the left turned

leaves of the gate.'

'The marquis of Ts'e had the horses put to his chariot, intending to flee to Yëw-t'ang, when his eldest son and Kwoh Yung laid hold of them, saying, "The haste and vehemence of the enemy only show in what a hurry they are. They will [soon] retire. What have you to fear? And moreover, as the lord of the altars, you should not be lightly moved. If you are, the multitudes will fall off from you. You must remain here, and await the result." The marquis was notwithstanding going to drive on, when his eldest son drew his sword, and cut the traces, on which he stopped. On Këah-shin, the allies made an incursion eastwards to the south of the Wei and to the E.'

Par. 5. 'In the army;'—i.e., during the expedition against Ts'e. Kung and Kulı foolishly suppose that the notice indicates the author's pity;—it is simply a record of the event.

Par. 6. The Chuen says:—'Tsze-k'ung (the Kung-tsze Këa) wanted to remove all the great officers. Intending to revolt from Tsin, and that he might raise an army of Ts'oo, and so remove them, he sent and informed Tsze-kang (the Kung-tsze Woo, chief minister of Ts'oo), who, however, declined to move in the affair. The viscount of Ts'oo heard of it, and sent E, the commandant of Yang-t'un, with this message to Taze-kang, "The people say that I, occupying my position as lord of the altars, and not going out to war, will die without following the rules [of our former kings]. It is now 5 years since I succeeded to my father, and during that time our troops have not [once] gone forth. People may well suppose that I am indulging myself, and forgetful of the inheritance of my fathers. Do you take the case into consideration, and consider what should be done." Taze-kang sighed, and said to himself, "Does the king think that I am seeking my own case? I acted as I did for the benefit of the State." He then saw the messenger, bowed himself to the ground and said, "The States are now in friendly harmony with Tsin, but I will make trial of their feeling. If I find an attempt feasible, the king can follow me. If I do not, I will withdraw with the army. In this way no harm will be incurred, and the king will have no disgrace."

'Accordingly, Tsze-käng led out an army, and marshalled it at Fan. At this time Taze Këaou, Pih-yëw, and Tsze-chang were in attendance on the earl of Ching in the invasion of Tsie, while Tsze-k'ung, Tsze-chen, and Tsze-se, had charge of the State. These two other officers were aware of the scheme of Tsze-k'ung, carefully completed their watch, and brought the people within the outer defences, so that Tsze-k'ung did not dare to have any meeting with the army of Ts'oo, which had now entered the State, and was halting at Yu-ling. The master of the Left raised a wall at Shang-keih, after which he crossed the Ying, and halted at Chen-jen. Wei Taze-ping and the Kung-taze Kih led thence a body of light-armed troops, and made incursions on Pe, Hwah, Seu-mei, Hëen-yu, and Yung-lëang, going round by the right of mount Mei, and extending their raid to the north-east of Ching, as far as Chiung-laou. When they returned, Tsze-käng made an attack on the Shun gate, passed two nights at the foot of the wall, and then withdrew, crossing the river at the foot of [the hill] Yu-ch'e. Heavy rains then overtook him, and many of the soldiers suffered so from cold that the followers of the camp nearly all perished.'

'The army of Tsin having heard of this expedition of Ts'00, the music-master Kwang said [to the marquis], "It will do no harm. I was singing a northern air and a southern, and the latter was not strong, and gave the notes of many deaths. Ts'00 will accomplish nothing." Tung-shuh [also] said to him, "The course of Heaven lies now mainly in the north-west. The time is unfavourable to a southern expedition. It will have no success." Shuh-hëang said, "All depends on the virtue of the ruler."

- XIX. 1 In the [duke's] nineteenth year, in spring, in the king's first month, the princes made a covenant in Chuh-ko.
  - The people of Tsin seized and held the viscount of Choo.
  - 3 The duke arrived from the invasion of Ts'e.
  - 4 We took the lands of Choo as far as from the K'oh-water.
  - 5 Ke-sun Suh went to Tsin.
  - 6 There was the burial of duke Ching of Ts'aou.
  - 7 In summer, Sun Lin-foo of Wei led a force and invaded Ts'e.
  - 8 In autumn, in the seventh month, on Sin-maou, Hwan, marquis of Ts'e, died.
  - 9 Sze Kae of Tsin led a force to make an invasion into Ts'e, and had arrived at Kuh, when he heard of the death of the marquis, on which he returned.
  - 10 In the eighth month, on Ping-shin, Chung-sun Mëeh died.
  - 11 Ts'e put to death its great officer, Kaou How.
  - 12 Ching put to death its great officer, the Kung-tsze Kës.
  - 13 In winter there was the burial of duke Ling of Ts'e.
  - 14 We walled round our western suburbs.
  - 15 Shuh-sun P'aou had a meeting with Sze Kae of Tsin in Ko.
  - 16 We walled Woo-shing.

Par. 1. Chuh-ko (Kung-yang has ) for III) was in Ts'e,—in the pres. dis. of Changtaing (III), dep. Tse-nan. We see from the Chuen that it was also called Tuh-yang. The princes in the text are those who had been engaged in the campaign against Ts'e. The Chuen says:—'The princes returned from the country about the E (see the Chuen on xviii. 4, at the end), and made a covenant in Tuh-yang, to the effect that the great States should make no raids on the small.' The news from Ching of its being invaded by Ts'oo had rendered it necessary to give up further operations against Ts'e.

Par. 2. 'They seized,' says Tso-she, 'duke Taou of Choo, because he had invaded us (see xvii. 8).' His father had been seized for the same reason in the duke's 16th year; and we are astonished both at the persistent hostility of Choo and Keu to Loo in defiance of Tsin, and I'ar. 3. The critics have much to say on its being stated here that the duke came from the 'invasion,' and not from the siege of the capital of Ts'e; but the truth seems simply to be that the siege was merely an incident of the inva-

Par. 4. The K'oh ran through Choo, and flowing along the south of Loo, fell into the Sze (),—in the pres. dis. of Yu-t'ae. Comp. VIII. ii. 7; but the phrase,—'lands of Choo,' would indicate that they had never belonged to Loo, though the Chuen seems to say so. It is a continuation of that on par. 2, and says:—'They then halted near the Sze, and defined the boundary of our lands, taking those of Choo back to us. The marquis of Tsin then returned before (his army) to his capital, and the duke gave an entertainment to the six generals of Tsin in the P'oo orchard, giving to each of them the robes of a minister of three degrees; while to the controller of the army, the marshal, the superintendent of entrenchments, the master of carriages, and the scoutmaster, he gave the robes of an officer of one degree (see the Chuen after VIII. ii. 4). On Seun Yen he further conferred a bundle of silks, a peil, and 4 horses, followed by the tripod which Loo had received from Show-mung of Wei.

'Seun Yen was now suffering from an ulcer, which grew upon his head; and after crossing the Ho as far as Choo-yung, he was quite ill, The great officers who and his eyes protruded. had returned before him all came back, and Sze Kae begged an interview with him which he did not grant. He then begged to know who should be his successor, and Yen said, "My son by the daughter of Ching." In the 2d month, on Kësh-yin, he died with his eyes protruding, and his teeth firmly closed. Seuen-taze (Szo Kae), washed [his face], and stroked it, saying, "Shall I not serve Woo (Yen's son) as I have served you?" but still he stared. Lwan Hwaetsze (Ying) said, "Is it because he did not complete his undertaking against Tse?" And he also stroked [his face], saying, "If you are indeed dead, let the Ho witness if I do not carry on your undertaking against Ts'e!" The eyes of the corpse then closed, and the [customary] gem was put between the teeth. When Seuentsze left the apartment, he said, "I am but a shallow creature (with reference to what he had said to the corpse)."

Par. 5. The Chuen says: — Ke Wortsze went to Tsin, to give thanks for the expedition [against Ts'e], when the marquis entertained him. Fan Seuen-tsze, who was [now] principal minister, sang the Shoo mëaou (She, II. viii. ode III.). Ke Woo-tsze rose up, bowed twice with his head to the ground, and said, "The small States depend on your great State as all the kinds of grain depend on the fattening rains. If you will always dispense such a cherishing influence, the whole kingdom will harmoniously unite under you, and not our poor State only!" He then sang the Luh Yueh (She, II. iii. ode III.)."

Par. 7. Sun Lin-foo had a reason for attacking Ts'e, because K'an, whom he had driven from Wei, had taken refuge there. It would appear, however, that Tsin also took part in this expedition. The Chuen says:—'Lwan Fang of Tsin led a force, and followed Sun Wantaze in an incursion into Ts'c.' Lwan Fang was sent on this expedition, it is supposed, through the influence of Lwan Ying, to fulfil the oath which he had sworn to the corpse of Seun Yen.

The Chuen appends here:—'Ke Woo-taze had a bell, toned to the second note of the chromatic scale, cast from the weapons which he had acquired in Ts'e, and had the services performed by Loo engraved upon it. Tsang Woo-chung said to him, "This is contrary to rule. What should be engraved [on such articles] is—for the son of Heaven, his admirable virtue; for the prince of a State, a record of his services estimated according to the season in which they have been performed; for a great officer, his deeds worthy of being mentioned. And such deeds are the lowest degree [of merit so commemorated]. If we speak of the time [of this expedition], it very much interfered with [the husbandry of] the people;—what was there in it worthy of being engraved? Moreover, when a great State attacks a small one, and takes the spoils to make an article, the regular furniture [of the ancestral temple], it engraves on it its successful achievement to show them to posterity, at once to manifest its own bright virtue, and to hold up to condemnation the offences of the other. But how should anything be made of our getting the help of others to save ourselves from death? A small State, we were fortunate against a great one; but to display our spoils in this manner, so as to excite its rage, is the way to ruin.']

Par. 8. For Kung-yang has Chuen says:—'The marquis of Ts'e had married Yen-e, a daughter of Loo, but she bore him no son. Her niece, Tsung-shing, however, bore him Kwang, who was declared his eldest son and successor. Among his concubines were two daughters of Sung, Chung Tsze and Jung Tsze. The latter was his favourite, and when Chung Tsze bore a son Ya, the child was given to Jung Tsze, who begged that he might be made successor to his father. The marquis agreed to this; but the child's mother objected, saying, "To abrogate in his favour the regular order [of succession] will be inauspicious. It is hard, moreover, to interfere with the other princes.

Since Kwang was declared your successor, he has been numbered among them; and now to displace him without any cause is to take it on yourself to degrade a prince. Your lordship will be sure to repent of incurring, in such a difficult matter, the charge of doing what is inauspicious." The marquis replied that the thing rested entirely with himself, and sent Kwang away to the east. At the same time he appointed Kaou How grand-tutor to Ya, whom he declared to be his successor, with Suh-sha Wei as assistant-tutor.

'When the marquis was ill, Ts'uy Ch'oo privately brought Kwang back to the capital; and when the marquis became very ill, Ch'oo raised Kwang to be his successor. Kwang then put Jung Tsze to death, and exposed her body in the court,—which was contrary to rule. A wife should not be subjected to the [ordinary] punishments; and if it be necessary to punish her, the thing should not be done in the court or the market place.

'In summer, in the 5th month, on Jin-shin, the last day of the moon, duke Ling of Ts'e died. Duke Chwang (Kwang) took his place, and seized Ya on the mound of Kow-tow. As he held that the substitution of him in his own place had been owing to Suh-sha Wei, Wei fled to Yaon there and held it in revolt.'

to Kaou-t'ang, and held it in revolt.'

Par. 9. The Chuen says:—'Sze Kae of Tsin was making an incursion into Ts'e, and had got as far as Kuh, when he heard of the death of the marquis and returned;—which was according to rule.' Kuh,—see III. vii. 4, et al.

The Chuen says:—'In the 4th month, on Ting-we, the Kung-sun Chiae of Ching died, and the news of his death was sent to the great officers of Tsin. Fan Seuen-tsze (Sze Kae) spoke to the marquis about how well Chiae had behaved in the invasion of Tsin, on which the marquis made a request to the king, and obtained for him the posthumous gift of a carriage, which was used at the performance of his [funeral] rites.']

Par. 10. Chung-sun Meeh, or Mang Heentsze, had long sustained an important position in Loo. He was succeeded by his son Suh (in), or Mang Chwang-tsze (in).

Par. 11. The Chuen says:—'In autumn, in the 8th month, Ts'uy Ch'oo of Ts'e killed Kaou How in Shae-lan, and took to himself all his property. The text, in ascribing his death to the State, intimates that he had followed his ruler in his abandoned blindness to what was right.'

Par. 12. For 嘉 Kung-yang has 喜. The Chuen says.—'Tsze K'ung of Ch'ing, in his government of the State, acted on his own exclusive authority, to the distress of the people. At the punishment of the troubles in the western palace (see on x.8), and in the attempt [of Ts'oo] on the Shun gate (in the year before this), he had acted criminally; but he guarded himself with his own men-at-arms, and with those of the families of Tsze-kih and Tsze-leang. On Keahshin, Taze-chen and Taze-se attacked him at the head of the people, put him to death, and divided his property between themselves. The text ascribes his death to the State because of the exclusive authority which he had arrogated. Tsze-jen and Tsze-k'ung were sons [of duke Muh] by [a daughter of Sung],—Sung Tsze; and Sze Tsze-k ung was his son by [a daughter of Ch'in], Kwei Kwei. Kwei Kwei's rank was inferior to Sung Tsze's, but they were fond of each other. Sze Tsze-k'ung was also on friendly terms with them. Tsze-jen died in the 4th year of He (the 6th year of duke Seang of Loo), and Sze Tsze-kung in Köen's (duke Muh's) first year, (Sëang's 8th year); and the minister of Instruc-tion K'ung looked after the households of Tszekih and Tsze-lëang. The three families indeed were as one, and hence they came together to trouble. Taze-kih and Taze-leang fled to Ta'oo, where the former became director of the Left. The people of Ching made Tsze-chen manager of the State, with Tsze-se as administrator of the government, and Tsze-ch'an a high minister.'

Par. 13. [The Chuen appends here:—'K'ing Fung of Ts'e laid siege to Kaou-t'ang, but could not reduce it. In winter, in the 11th month, the marquis joined the siege; and seeing [Suhsha] Wei on the top of the wall, he called out to him. Wei came down, and the marquis asked him if he was well prepared for defence. He replied that he was not, and the marquis bowed to him, when he ascended the wall again. Hearing that the army [of the marquis] was coming [to the siege, Wei] gave out food to the men of Kaou-t'ang; but [two officers of Ts'e], Chih Ch'oh and Kung Laou, agreed to bring the soldiers by night | not long possess his ancestral temple."] up the wall by means of cords (the text here is probably defective). Wei was made pickle of in the army.'] Par. 14. This was done, says Tso, 'through

Par. 14. fear of Ts'e.

This Ko is different from the place Par. 15. in Ts'e of the same name, and was probably in Wei,—in the pres. dep. of Ta-ming. The Chuen says:-- 'Ta'e and Tsin concluded a peace, and made a covenant in Ta-suy. In consequence, Muh-shuh had a meeting with Fan Seuen-tsze in Ko. Having an interview with Shuh-hëang, he sang the 4th stanza of the Tsae chre (She, I. iv. ode X.). Shuh-hëang said, "I dare not but receive your command."?

Par. 16. Woo-shing was a city of Loo, -90 & to the south-west of the pres. dis. city of Pe, dep. E-chow.

The Chuen says:—'On his return to Loo, Muhshuh said, 'Ts'e is not yet [reconciled to us]; we must not dismiss our apprehensions."

cordingly we fortified Woo-shing.

[The Chuen adds here:—'On the death of Shih Kung-tsze (Shih Mae) of Wei, [his son], Taou-tsze manifested no grief. K'ung Ch'ingtsze said, "Here is a case of the falling tree tearing up its roots. Taou-tsze will certainly

XX. 1 In the [duke's] twentieth year, in spring, in the king's first month, on Sin-hae, Chung-sun Suh had a meeting with an officer of Keu, and made a covenant [with him] in Heang.

In summer, in the sixth month, on Kăng-shin, the duke had a meeting with the marquises of Tsin and Ts'e, the duke of Sung, the marquis of Wei, the earls of Ch'ing and Ts'aou, the viscounts of Keu, Choo, and T'ăng, the earls of Seeh and Ke, and the viscount of Little Choo, when they made a covenant in Shenyuen.

3 In autumn, the duke arrived from the meeting.

4 Chung-sun Suh led a force and invaded Choo.

5 Ts'ae put to death its great officer, duke [Chwang's] son Sëeh. His brother, Le, fled to Ts'oo.

6 Hwang, the younger brother of the marquis of Ch'in, fled from that State to Ts'oo.

7 Shuh Laou went to Ts'e.

- 8 In winter, in the tenth month, on Ping-shin, the sun was eclipsed.
- 9 Ke-sun Suh went to Sung.

Par. 1. Here, and afterwards, Kung-yang has it for it. As to the individual, see on par. 10 of last year. Heang,—see on I. ii. 2. The Chuen says:—"We were [now] at peace with Keu, and Mang Chwang-tsze had a meeting with an officer of Keu, and made a covenant in Heang,—in consequence of the covenant at Tuhyang (see on xix. 1)."

Par. 2. Shen-yuen was a river, called also the 子, and gave its name to the city in the text,—25 & north-west from the pres. K'ae Chow (開州), dep. Ta-ming. It belonged to Wei. This meeting and covenant were to celebrate the good understanding which now existed between Tsin and Ts'e (严成 故心).

Par. 4. This shows strikingly the little value of those covenants. Loo, moreover, might have been satisfied with the lands of Choo which had been assigned to it after the expedition against Ts'e. •

The Chuen says:—'Troops from Choo had repeatedly attacked us, and we had not been able to retaliate in consequence of the business of the States; but this autumn, Mang Chwangtere did so, and invaded Choo.'

Part. 5, 6. For Kuh-leang has R. This Seeh and Le were sons of duke Chwang of Ts'ze, and brothers consequently of duke Wan, whose father had been present at the meeting of Tseen-t'oo in the 28th year of duke He. The Chuen says:—'The Kung-tsze Seeh of Ts'ze wished to carry that State over to Tsin, on which the people put him to death, and his full brother Le fied to Ts'oo.'

Par. 6. Kung and Kuh have I instead of The Chuen says:—'K'ing Hoo and K'ing Yin, being afraid of the pressure on them of the Kung-tsze Hwang, accused him to Ts'oo, saying that he was confederate in the design of the minister of war of Ts'ae (Sëeh of the last par.). The people of Ts'oo thought this was sufficient ground for reprimanding Hwang, who therefore fled to that State, [to clear himself]. At an earlier period, duke Wan of Ts'ae had wished to serve Tsin, saying, "My predecessor took part in the covenant of Tsëen-t'oo. Tsin should not be abandoned; and moreover, its rulers and we are brethren." Through fear of Ts'oo, however, he died without being able to carry his purpose into effect (in the 17th year of duke Sëuen). After this, the people of Ts'oo laid their requirements on Ts'ae without regard to any rule, and the Kung-taze Seeh wished to carry out the design of the former ruler for the benefit of the State; but, unable to effect his purpose, he died. The text in p. 5, that "Ts'ae put to death its great officer, the Kung-taze Seeh," intimates that his wishes did not coincide with those of And the account in this, that the people. "Hwang, the younger brother of the marquis of Chin, left the State, and fled to Ts'oo," intimates that his flight was from no crime of his. When Hwang was about to flee, he cried out in the capital, "Those Kings, in violation of what is right, are seeking to monopolize the government of Chin, tyrannizing over their ruler, and getting his relatives ont of the way. If within 5 years they are not exterminated, there can be no Heaven."'

Par. 7. The Chuen says:—'Ts'e-tsze (Shuh Laou) went [now] for the lat time on a friendly mission to Ts'e;—which was proper.' It was to be hoped that the animosity which had so long prevailed between Ts'e and Loo would now give place to friendly sentiments.

Par. 8. This eclipse took place at noon, on the 25th August, B.C. [552.

Par. 9. The Chuen says:—'In winter, Ke Woo-taze went to Sung, to return the friendly visit of Hëang Seuh (see xv. 1). Choo Szetwan met him to conduct him to an entertainment, where he sang the 7th and last stanzas of the Chang-te, (She, II. i., ode IV.). The people of Sung gave him large gifts; and when he returned, and gave in the report of his mission, the duke entertained him. He then sang the last stanza of the Yu le (She, II. ii. ode III.). The duke responded with the Nan shan yëw the (She, II. ii. ode VII.), at which Woo-taze left his place, and said, "I am not worthy [of such praise]."

[The Chuen calls the reader here to a narrative about Wei:—'Ning Hwuy-tsze of Wei was ill, and called to him his son, Taou-tsze, "I trespassed," said he to him, "against my ruler (See on xiv. 4), and subsequent repentance was of no avail. My name is in the tablets of the States, to the effect that 'Sun Lin-foo and Ning Chih drove out their ruler.' If the ruler re-enter, that may hide my crime; and if you can so hide it, you are my son. If you cannot do so, and I continue to exist as a Spirit, I will starve in that condition, and will not come to partake of your sacrifices." Taou-tsze made him a promise, and soon afterwards be died].'

In his twenty-first year, in spring, in the king's first XXI. 1 month, the duke went to Tsin.

Shoo-k'e of Choo came a fugitive to Loo, with [the cities of] Ts'eih and Leu-k'ëw.

In summer, the duke arrived from Tsin. 3

In autumn, Lwan Ying of Tsin fled from that State to Ts'00.

In the ninth month, on Kang-seuh, the first day of the moon, the sun was eclipsed.

In winter, in the tenth month, on Kang-shin, the first day of the moon, the sun was eclipsed.

The earl of Ts'aou came to the court of Loo.

The duke had a meeting with the marquises of Tsin and Ts'e, the duke of Sung, the marquis of Wei, the carls of Ch'ing and Ts'aou, and the viscounts of Keu and Choo, in Shang-jin.

Par. 1. The duke now went to Tsin, 'to make his acknowledgments,' says Tso-she, 'for the expedition [against Ts'e], and for his receiving the lands of Choo (xviii. 4; xix. 4).' Wang K'ih-kwan bitterly contrasts the duty thus, and on other occasions, paid by the princes of Loo to the leading State, and their general neglect of the duty they owed to the king.

Par. 2. Shoo-k'e was a great officer of Choo.

[widowed] aunt and sister of the duke, and gave gifts to all his followers. On this Loo became postered with a multitude of roblevs, and Wootana asked Tanng Woo-chung why he did not deal effectually with them. "They cannot be so dealt with," was the reply. "I am not able to do it." Wootane urged, "We have our four boundaries well defined; how is it that robbers named be put down? And you are the minister of Crime. Your chief business should be to remove all such criminals, how is it that you are unable to do so?" Woo-chung said, "You call the robbers of other States, and treat them with the greatest ceremony; how can I in such a case repress our own robbers? You are the principal minister of our State, and you bring into it robbers from abroad, and would have me put them away; how should I be able to do so? Shoo-k'e stole from Chou its cities, and came here with them, and you have given him to wife ladies of our ducal House, and have conferred on him [those] cities. To all his followers you have given gifts. Now, since to the great robber you have shown such ceremony, giving him our ruler's aunt and sister, and those great cities; and to the robbers of the next degree you have given runners, herdemen, carriage-men and grooms, the least gifts being robes, swords, and girdles;—you thus reward robbers. To reward them, and at the same time put them away, should be a difficult thing, I think. I have heard this, that when men thing, I think. I have neard that that when men in high positions cleanse their hearts, treating others with an uniform consistency, and regulating their good faith by such laws that it is clearly doministrated, then men can be properly ruled by them. For the way which their superiors take is that to which men [naturally] turn. When they do that which their superiors do not do, there are pains and promities for those, which we may not presume not to in-flict. If the people, however, do that which their superiors do as well, it is what is to be expected, and cannot be prevented. It is said in one of the Books of Hea (Shoo, II. ii 10). "Think whether this thing can be laid on this man. If you would put it away from this man, inth. If you would put it away from this disk, it depends on [putting] the thing [away from yourself]. When you name or speak of this thing, [let it be fit] for this man. Your sincerity must proceed from this, and be in this. Think, O emperor, of the work thus to be achiev-This tells how the result must come from one's own uniform endeavour. Let one's sin-certty be uniform and undivided, and then sucnessful results may be anticipated.

'Shoo-k'e was not a minister, (though he is here named). But coming with territory, of low rank as he was, it was necessary to record the thing as in the text, from the importance belonging to the territory.'

The Cluen gives here two narratives about the affairs of Te'e and Te'en:—lat. 'The marquis of Te'e appointed K'ing Tso a great officer, and proceeded to further (see on xix. 8) measures against the partizans of his brother Yalle sensed the Kung-tase Man on the mound of Kow-tow. The Kung-tase Te'uo fied to Loo, and Shuh-aun Benen to Yen.'

2d. 'In anomer, Tese-king of Te'oo died, and the viscount wished to appoint Wei Taxep'ing to his office of chief minister. Wei consuited Shin Shuh-yu, who said, "There are many favourhos in the State, and the ruler is young. The administration will be impracticable." On this he declined the appointment, alleging that he was ill. The season being warm, he dog a hole in the ground, filled it with in, and placed his bed over it; and there he isy, with two coverings attified with aith, and in a robe of fur, taking very little food. The viscount sent his physician to see him, who reported that he was very thin, but that there was yet no (irregular) motion of his pulse. Tsue-ass (the Kung-tase Chuy-shoo) was then made chist minister."

Par. 4. Here is the verification of Suc Yang's rediction about the downfall of the Lwan fam

The Choen bere says:—'Lwan Hwan-tam(Lwan Yen, 'Lwan Hwan-tam(Lwan Yen, 'Lwan Hwan-tam(Lwan Yen, 'Lwan Hwan-tame(Lwan Yen, 'Lwan Hwan-tame(Lwan Yen, 'Lwan Hwan-tame(Lwan Yen, 'Lwan Hwan-tame) had married a daughter of Yang (Seuen-tame's son), because of his banishment [to Te'in], had a grudge against the Lwan family; and though he and Lwan Ying were both great officers of the ducal kindred, they could not bear each other (see the Chun on xiv. 3). After the death of Hwan-tam, Lwan K'e (his wife, Sinen-tame's daughter) had an intrigue with the old [steward of the family]. Chow Pin, which had almost led to the ruin of the House. Hwan-tame was distressed about it; and his mother, afraid of his taking severe measures, accused him to Seuen-tame, saying, "Ying is about to raise an insurrection on the ground that, dince the death of his father Hwan, the Fan family is monopolizing the government. "My father," he says, 'drove out Yang, het [Seuen-tame], instead of being angry [with his son), rewards him with [additional] favour. He has also given him a similar office to mine, and throws the power into his hands. Since my father's death, [the family] is more wealthy. By that death they have got the monopoly of the government. I will die sooner than follow them.' Such are his designs; and afraid of his

said by his own testimony.

'Hwae-tam was fond of showing his liberality, and had thereby attached to himself may officers,—so many, that Seuce-tase was afraid of them; and though he believed what was tell him, [he hesitated to take action]. Hwae-tam, [moreover], was the [assistant-] cummander of the 3d army. [At last], Sēneu-tame sent him fortify Chno, and thereby took occasion to drive him from the State, so that in the actum he field from it to Ta'oo. Sēneu-tame then put to death Ke E, Hwang Tuen, Kēn Pou, See-k'eng Taing, Ping Yu, Tung Shuh, Ping See, Shu Shoo, Yang-sheh Hoo, and Shuh-p'e; and imprisoned Pili-hwa, Shuh-leāng, and Teefh Yen-Penple said to Shuh-heang, "Was it from wast of wisdom that you let vourself be involved in this affair?" He replied, "Is this imprisonment not better than death? The ode says (She, II, vii. odu VIII. 5; but the quotation is doubtful).

injuring you, my father, I dare not but tell them to you." Fan Yang confirmed what she

'How easily, how happily, They complete their years?'

Here is my wisdom." Yoh Wang-foo had as interview with thuh-heang, and asid to him, "I will intercede for you;" but the prisoner gave nin no answer, nor did he make him any actnowledgment when he went out. His friends ill blamed Shuh-hëang for this; but he said '[My liberation] must be effected by the great officer K'e." When the steward of his house seard this, he said to him, "Whatever Yoh Wang-foo tells him, our ruler is sure to do. He offered to ask for your pardon, and you would not allow him to do so. It was more than the great officer K'e could accomplish, and ret you say that your liberation must come from tim;—what is your meaning?" Shuh-hëang replied, "Yoh Wang-foo is but a parasite of our uler;—what could be do? The great officer K'e recommended to office one not of his own amily, though he was his enemy, nor did he ail to recommend his relative to it, though he was his own son (see the Chuen after iii. 4); shall I alone be forgotten by him? The ode mys (She, III. iii. ode II. 2),

'To an evident virtuous conduct All in the State render their obedient homage.'

Such a manifestly virtuous man is K'e." 'The marquis of Tsin asked about the guilt of Shuh-hëang from Yoh Wang-foo, who replied, " He would not abandon his relatives, and probably shares in their guilt." At this time K'e He was old, [and living in retirement]; but when he heard what was going on, he came, posting from stage to stage, to see Seuen-taze, and said to him, "The ode says (She, IV. i. [i.] xde IV.), 'Your favours to me are unbounded,

> And my posterity shall preserve [our inheritance].'

The Shoo says (III. iv. 2), 'The sage, with their counsels and merit, ought clearly to be established and preserved.' Now in Shuh-heang we have one whose counsels have seldom been in error, and whose kindly lessons have been unwearied. He is a strength to our altars. His posterity for ten generations should be pardoned [if they did wrong], for the encouragement of men of ability; and now for one offence [of his brother he is not to get off with his life. It is an abandoning of our alters;—is there not a mistake in the matter? When Kwan was put to death. Yu was raised to office. E Yin kept Tise-kësh in confinement, and acted as minister to him; but in the end [the sovereign] had not a resentful look. Kwan and Ts'ae were put to death by the duke of Chow, but he himself was the king's helper. Why are you now, on account of Hoo (Shuh-hëang's brother), forgetting your duty to our altars? Do that which is good, and who is there that will not feel stimulated? But what is the use of putting many to death?" Seuen-tsze was pleased, and they went in the same carriage to speak with the marquis, so that Shuh-hëang was pardoned. K'e He then went home without seeing Shuh-hëang, who, on his part, sent no word to him of his being liberated, but went to court.

'At an earlier period, Shuh-hëang's mother, being jealous of the beauty of Shuh-hoo's mother, did not allow her to be with their husband. Her sons all remonstrated with her, when she said. "Deep hills and great marshes produce the dragon and the serpent. Because of her beauty, i

I am afraid she may bring forth a dragon or a serpent that will bring calamity upon you. You are but a feeble clan, and in the State there are many great nobles. If unfriendly persons were setting them against you. would not your case be hard? On what [other] ground should I grudge her our husband's favours?" She then sent the lady to her husband's couch; and the result was the birth of Shuh-hoo. remarkable for his beauty, courage, and strength, and became a favourite with Hwae-tsze, and thus it was that the Yang-sheh clan became involved in [the present] difficulties.

'When Lwan Ying was passing by Chow, the people in its western borders plundered him, on which he complained to a messenger [from the king], saying, "I. Ying, a servant of the son of Heaven, belonging to another State, offended the king's servant, who is its guardian. Trying to escape from the consequences of my guilt, I have trespassed again in your borders. Nowhere can I hide; nowhere can I fly; let me venture to set forth the question of my death. Formerly, Your Majesty's servant, [my grandfather |, Shoo, was able to contribute his strength to the royal House, and the king bestowed favours on him. His son Yen was not able to preserve and continue the services of Shoo; and now, O great ruler, if you have not forgotten the zealous duty of Shoo, then there will be a way of escape for me. If you have forgotten that, and think of the guilt of Yen, I am but the fragment of a doomed man. I will go to the capital] and die under the hand of the officer Wei; I dare not go back. I have presumed to declare every thing;—it is for you, O great ruler, to issue your command." The king said, "To go on thus to wrong him as ['I'sin] has done would be acting worse than Tsin." He then made the minister of Instruction prohibit all plundering of Lwan Ying, and require the people to return what they had taken away. He also made the officer of escort conduct him through the Hwanyuen pass."

Parr. 5, 6. The former of these eclipses took place at noon, on August 13th, B.C. 551. record of the second is an error. There was on the day mentioned no eclipse of the sun; there could be none. How the error, and the similar one in the 24th year, originated, cannot be ascertained. The critics have vexed themselves with the question in vain. See in the 'Explanations of the Classics by scholars of the present dynasty,' ch. 58, pp. 4,5, and ch. 297, p. 6; and what has been said in the section on eclipses in the prolegomena. Yang Sze-heun (楊士勛) the glossarist of Kuh-lëang, of the T'ang dynasty (in the 7th cent.), says:—'In this year, and the 24th year, we have the record of eclipses in successive months. According to modern chronologists such a thing could not be; but perhaps it did occur in ancient times!' See also the note by the K'ang-he editors on the birth of Confucius, at the end of this year.

Par. 7. This earl—duke Woo (武公) succeeded to the State of Ts'aou, on the death of his father as related xviii. 5. He now came, as Tso-she says, to Loo, 'to have a first interview with the duke.

Par. 8. Where Shang-jin was is not known. The Chuen says:—'The meeting at Shang-jin was to prevent Lwan [Ying] from being harboured anywhere. The marquises of Ts'e and Wei behaved disrespectfully at it, which made Shuh-hëang say, "These two princess are sure not to escape an evil end. These meetings and visits at courts are standard ceremonies; such ceremonies are the vehicles of government; it is through government that men's persons are guarded. When the ceremonies are dishonoured, government is lost; and when government is not firmly established, disorder must ensue."

'Che K'e, Chung-hang He, Chow Ch'oh, and Hing Kwae, all fled [from Tsin] to Ts'e, being partizans of the Lwan family. Yoh Wang-foo said to Fan Sëuen-tsze, "Why not bring back Chow Ch'oh and Hing Kwae who are men of daring courage?" "They are braves of the Lwan family," replied Seuen-tsze. "What should I gain?" Wang-foo said "Be to them what the Lwan was, and they will also be your braves."

Duke Chwang of Ts'e, at his audience [one day], pointed to Chih Ch'oh and Kwoh Tsuy, and said, "These are my heroes." Chow Ch'oh said, "If your lordship thinks them heroes, who may not presume to be reckoned a hero? But unworthy as I am, after the service at P'ingyin, (See on xviii.4), I crowed before them both." Duke Chwang having instituted an order of bravery, Chih Ch'oh and Kwoh Tsuy wished to belong to it. Chow Chioh said, "In the attack on the eastern gate, my outside horse on the left turned wildly round in the gate, and I know the number of the boards in it;—can I be allowed for this to belong to the order?" The duke said. "You were acting for the ruler of Tein." "But I am newly become your servant," replied the other. "As to those two, they are like beasts, whose flesh I will eat, and then sleep upon their skins."'

The K'ang-he editors give here the following note on the birth of Confucius:—'According to the Chuen of Kung-yang, Confucius was born in the 11th month of Sëang's 21st year, on the day Kang-tsze; and according to that of Kuhlëang, he was born on Kang-tsze, in the 10th month of this year. The "Historical Records," | the proleg. to Vol. I., p. 69].

however, give his birth, as in the 22d year of Seang. In the preface to his "Collected Comments" on the Analects, Choo He, using the "History of the Kung family." thus defers to the authority of the "Historical Records," while Sung Lëen (Ming dynasty), in his "Discussion of the month and year of Confucius' Birth and Death," vehemently maintains the authority of Kung and Kuh. He adduces, however, no incontestible evidence of their correctness, merely saying that the " Historical Records" contain many errors, and that the statement of Kung and Kuh, handed down from one man to another, is to be relied upon, as having been supported by proofs. Hea Hung-ke says, "Confucius was born in the 22d year of Sëang, and lived to the 16th year of Gae, so that he was then 73 years old. The account in the 'Historical Records' is correct. The month as given by Kung-yang is wrong;—how can we place implicit confidence in him? Sung Leen, following Kung and Kuh. makes the sage to have been 74 years old, which seems a strange thing to hear of." This view of Hea's is the best. The prolegomena to the "General Mirror of History" observe, moreover, that in the 21st year of Scang the sun was twice eclipsed, which does not appear a proper year for the sage to be born in;—and this consideration is not without its reasonableness! Confucius was born in a Käng-seuh year, and died in a Jinseuli;—such is the account that has long obtained. Giving a paramount authority to Choo He, and comparing with him the statements of Hëa and the prolegomena to the "General Mirror," we may assume that the "Historical Records" are not in error in this matter.

'The year of the sage's birth ought be noticed in connection with the Ch'un Ts'ëw, but there is no article in the Chuen of Tso-she on Scang's 22d year, to which it could be annexed; we have therefore preserved here the statements of Kung and Kuh, and discussed them in this note.' See

- XXII. 1 In his twenty-second year, in spring, in the king's first month, the duke arrived from the meeting.
  - 2 It was summer, the fourth month.
  - 3 In autumn, in the seventh month, on Sin-yew, Shuh Laou died.
  - 4 In winter, the duke had a meeting with the marquises of Tsin and Ts'e, the duke of Sung, the marquis of Wei, the earls of Ch'ing and Ts'aou, the viscounts of Keu and Choo, the earls of Seeh and Ke, and the viscount of Little Choo, in Sha-suy.
  - 5 The duke arrived from the meeting.
  - 6 Ts'00 put to death its great officer Chuy-shoo.

Par. 1. [The Chuen introduces here:—'This spring, Tsang Woo-chung was going to Tsin, and was passing by [the city of] Yu Shuh (—Shuh of Yu), when it rained. Shuh was then in the city, and about to set to drinking. He said, "What occasion is there for employing a sage? I will do nothing but drink. Travelling thus in the rain, what sageness can he be possessed of?" When Muh-shuh (Shuh-sun P'aou) heard of this, he said, "[This Yu Shuh] is not fit to be sent on any mission. Carrying himself so proudly to our messenger, he is one of the vermin of the State." He then ordered that his contribution to the State should be doubled].

Par. 2. [We have here in the Chuen the following narrative about the relations of Tsin and Ch'ing:—'In summer, the people of Tsin summende [the earl of] Ch'ing to appear at their court, when the people of Ch'ing employed the Shaou-ching, Kung-sun K'ēsou (Tsze-ch'an), to reply, which he did as follows:—"In the 9th year of duke Taou, the last ruler of Tsin (the 9th year of Sëang), our ruler succeeded to the State; and eight months after, our late great officer, Tsze-sze (the Kung-tsze Fei, , followed him to the presence of your ministers in your court. They did not behave courteously to him, on which he was afraid and took his departure; and in the 6th month of his second year we went to the court of Ts'oo. In consequence of this, Tsin made the campaign of He (See on ix. 5). But Ts'oo was still strong, and repeated its courte-ous treatment of our State. We wished to follow your ministers, but were afraid they would find great matter of offence in our conduct. Tsin, we thought, will say that we do not respond respectfully to courtesy; and on this account we did not dare to separate from Ts'oo.

'In our ruler's 4th year, in the 3d month, our late great officer Kësou (Kung-sun Ch'ae) attended him to Ts'oo, to see what course it would be proper for us to adopt; and on this Tsin made the campaign of Seaou-yu (See on xi. 8). Then it said that our State was near to that of Tsin, and that they were like plants which had the same fragrance;—why then should they presume to be in unequal relations? At this time Ts'oo did not shew strength, and our ruler brought forth all the productions of the State, and added to them the vessels of his ancestral temple, that he might enter into a common covenant. He then led his servants to follow your ministers, and was present in your court at the end of the year. On his return, he punished Tsze-how and Shih Yu, who were inclined towards Ts'oo.

'The year after [the meeting at] Keih-leang (See xvi. 2), Tsze-kësou being old, Kung-sun Hëa attended our ruler to your court, when he had an audience at the summer sacrifice, and assisted in holding the offerings of flesh. When two years had intervened, hearing that your ruler was about to pacify the States of the east, he again went to your court in the 4th month, to ascertain the time for the enterprize. Between his appearances at your court, there has been no year in which he has not sent a mission of friendly inquiries, there has been no service in which he has not taken his share. Through the orders of your great State coming not at regular times our State has been wearied and distressed; at any time some unlooked for requirement might come; every day are we careful not to give offence; -how should we dare to forget our duty? If your great State will grant us stable rest morning and evening, our ruler will be found in your court, without your having to condescend to send him any order to appear. But if you do not have pity on our distress, and fill your mouth with complaints against us, shall we not then be unable to endure your commands? You will be clipping our territory, and we shall become enemies to each other. This is what our State is afraid of; how dare we be unmindful of your ruler's order? We thus lay the case before his ministers; let them consult about it as its importance requires.']

Par. 3. See on xiv. 1. Shuh Laou was succeeded in the position of great officer by his son Kung (权号), known as Tsze-shuh King-tsze (子叔敬子).

[The Chuen returns here to the affairs of Lwan Ying of Tsin:—'In autumn, Lwan Ying went from Ts'00 to Ts'e, on which occasion Gan P'ing-chung said to the marquis of Ts'e, "At the meeting of Shang-jin, you received the command of Tsin [not to harbour Lwan]; if you now receive him, where will be the use of that meeting? It is by good faith that a small State serves a large one. If its good faith be lost, it cannot stand. Let your lordship consider it." The marquis would not listen to him, and P'ing-chung withdrew, and told Ch'in Wantsze, saying, "Rulers should hold fast good faith, and their subjects reverent obedience. It is the rule of Heaven that high and low should all observe true-heartedness, good faith, honesty, and reverence. Our ruler is throwing himself away ;—he cannot continue long.'

We have then another narrative about an officer of Ch'ing:—'In the 9th month, the Kung-sun Hih-kwang of Ching called to him the steward of his house, and his kinsmen who took part with him in his ancestral temple, and told them to support [his son] Twan in his place, requiring them to diminish the number of his officers and the style of his sacrifices. A single sheep would be sufficient at the seasonal services, and a sheep and a pig at the grand sacrifice once in 3 years. Retaining a sufficient number of towns to supply these sacrifices, he gave all the rest back to the duke, saying, "I have heard that when one is born in an age of disorder, the best thing for him is to be able to be poor. When the people have nothing to require from him, his family will endure longer than the families of others. Reverently and dutifully," [said he to his son], "serve your ruler, and the officers, [his ministers]. Your life will depend on your reverence and caution, and not on your riches." On Ke-sze, Pih-chang (Hih-kwang) died. The superior man will say that he was wise in the cautions which he gave. What the ode says (She, III. iii. ode II. 5),

> 'Be careful of your duties as a prince; Be prepared for the dangers that may arise,' was exemplified by Tsze-chang of Ching.']

Par. 4. Kung and Kuh have here for from the first form. Sha-suy,—see VIII. xvi. 8. The Chuen says:—'This meeting at Sha-suy was to take further measures to prevent the harbouring of Lwan [Ying]. He was still in Ts'e, and Gan-tsze said, "Calamity is about to develop itself. Ts'e will attack Tsin. There is ground for us to cherish apprehension."

See the Chuen after par. 4 of last year. The Chuen here says:—'Kwan K'e of Ts'00 was a favourite of Tsze-nan the chief minister, and while his emolument was yet but small, his teams of horses were numbered by tens. The people were distressed about it, and the king determined to punish the minister. Tsze-nan's son, K'e-tsih, was charioteer to the king, who would fall a weeping whenever he saw him. K'e-tsih said to him, "You have thrice wept at the sight of me;-let me ask whose crime makes you do this." The king said, "You know the inefficiency of the chief minister. The State is about to punish him; and can you abide in your office after that?" "If I were to abide after my father has been put to death," replied the charioteer, "how could you employ me? But to commit the great crime of disclosing what you have said is what I will not do." After this the king put Tsze-nan to death in the court, and caused the four limbs of Kwan K'e to be torn from each other by chariots in four different directions. Tsze-nan's servants then asked K'e-tsih to beg leave to remove his father's body from the court. "It is for you," he said to them, "[to teach me how] to observe the duties that should obtain between a ruler and his minister." After three days, he begged the body which the king granted to him; and when it was buried, his followers asked him if he was going to leave the State. "I was a party," he said, "to the death of my father; to what State should I go?" "Well then," they asked again, "will you continue to be a servant of the king?" He replied, "To have abandoned my father, and yet to serve his enemy, is what I cannot bear to do." Immediately after, he strangled himself.

'[The king] then again appointed Wei Tszeping to be chief minister. The Kung-tsze E was made [grand-]marshal, and K'euh Këen was made the Moh-gaou. The favourites of Weitaze were eight men, all of whom, though having no emoluments, were possessed of many horses. One day [after his appointment], being at court, he spoke to Shin Shuh-yu, who gave him no answer, and withdrew. Wei-tsze followed him, and he threw himself among a crowd. When he was still followed, Yu returned to his house, whither the other went to see him, when he had retired from the court. "Thrice," said Weitsze, "you snubbed me in the court. You have frightened me, and I have felt that I must come and see you. Please tell me my errors; why should you be so indignant with me?" "I was afraid," replied Shuh-yu, "lest I should not escape [the impending fate]; how should I dare to tell you?" "What do you mean?" asked the minister. The other said, "Lately, Kwan K'e was the favourite of Tsze-nan. Tsze-nan was dealt with as a criminal, and Kwan K'e was torn in pieces by chariots. Is there not reason for me to be afraid?" [Wei-tsze] then drove home himself, but was not able to keep the road. When he arrived, he said to his favourites, "I have seen my master Shin Shuh. It may be said of him that he can give life to the dead, and flesh to the [bare] bones. master who knows me as he does I am satisfied; but I had rather drop the acquaintance of one who does not do so." He then dismissed the eight men, and afterwards the king was satisfied with him.

The Chuen appends the narrative of a strange and melancholy event in Ch'ing:—'In the 12th month, Yew Pan of Ching was proceeding to Tsin; and before he crossed the boundaries of the State, he met with a man and the bride whom he was conducting to his house. Yew Pan took the lady from him by force, and lodged her in a city [that he was passing]. On Ting-sze, her husband attacked Tsze-ming (Yëw Pan), and killed him, and then went away with his [recovered] wife., Tsze-chen set aside Lëang (Pan's son), and made Tae-shuh (Pan's younger brother) Head of the family, saying, "A minister of the State is only second to the ruler, and a lord of the people. He must not be allowed to act disorderly. I have taken it on me to set aside another who is like Tsze-ming." He also sought for the man who had lost his wife, made him return to his place, and would not allow the Yew family to resent what he had done, saying to them, "Do not make more manifest the wickedness [of Tsze-ming]."]

XXIII. 1 In the [duke's] twenty-third year, in spring, in the king's second month, on Kwei-yëw the first day of the moon, the sun was eclipsed.

2 In the third month, on Ke-sze, Kae, earl of Ke, died.

3 In summer, Pe-go of Choo came a fugitive to Loo.

4 There was the burial of duke Hëaou of Ke.

5 Ch'in put to death its great officers, K'ing Hoo and K'ing Yin.

Hwang, the younger brother of the marquis of Ch'in, returned from Ts'oo to Ch'in.

7 Lwan Ying of Tsin again entered Tsin, and entered K'ëuh-yuh.

In autumn, the marquis of Ts'e invaded Wei, and took the opportunity to invade Tsin.

In the eighth month, Shuh-sun P'aou led a force to relieve Tsin, and halted at Yung-yu.

10 On Ke-maou Chung-sun Suh died.

- In winter, in the tenth month, on Yih-hae, Tsang-sun Heih fled to Choo.
- 12 The people of Tsin put to death Lwan Ying.
- 13 The marquis of Ts'e fell upon Keu by surprise.

Par. 1. This eclipse was visible at sunrise on the 30th December, B.C. 550.

Par. 2. Earl Kae is known as duke Hëaou. Tso-she says, 'This spring, duke Hëaou of Ke died, and the widow of [duke] Taou of Tsin went into mourning for him (She was his sister). Duke Ping, however, did not discontinue his usual music;—which was contrary to propriety. The rules of propriety require that such music should be intermitted on [the death of the ruler of] a neighbouring State.'

Par. 3. For 男我 Kung and Kuh have 异. We are to suppose that Pe-go was a partizan of Shoo-k'e of xxi. 3, and came to Loo in the same way that the other had done.

Parr. 5, 6. For the circumstances in which the prince Hwang had fled to Ts'oo see the Chuen on xx. 6. The Chuen here says:—'The marquis of Ch'in went to [the court of] Ts'oo. when the Kung-tsze Hwang accused the two King to Ts'oo, the people of which summoned them to it. [Instead of going themselves], they sent King Loh, who was put to death. The King clan upon this held the capital of Chin in revolt. In summer, K'ëuh Këen (the Mohgaou of Ts'oo; see the Chuen on p. 6 of last year) went with the marquis of Ch'in, and laid siege to it. The people were then repairing the wall, and one of the frame-planks falling down, [the King] put the builder to death. The workmen then agreed together that they should | kill their overseers, and proceeded to put to death King Hoo and King Yin. The people of Ts'oo re-instated the Kung-tsze Hwang. The superior man will pronounce that the King acted unrighteously, and that such a course cannot be indulged in [with safety]. As it is said in the Shoo (V. ix. 23), 'The [favour] of Heaven is not constant.'

The death of the two King serves to illustrate the latitude with which the statements of a State putting its officers to death may be interpreted. Confucius' text in itself gives no inkling of the real nature of the transaction here. Too Yu contends that the is a mere connective, and must have no stress laid upon it. Acc. to a canon on the use of the conjunction, King Hoo would be the proper criminal, involving Yin in the consequences of his guilt. But acc. to the Chuen here and in other similar canons, this breaks down here and in other places. Comp., e.g., VI. ix. 7.

Par. 7. Lwan Ying, it will be remembered, had found shelter in Ts'e;—see the Chuen introduced at par. 3 of last year.

The Chuen says:—'[The marquis of] Tsia being about to marry one of his daughters to [the viscount of] Woo, the marquis of Tse ordered Seih Kwei-foo to escort the appointed ladies of his House to accompany her, taking the opportunity to place Lwan Ying and his followers in enclosed carriages, and to convey them to K'ëuh-yuh. Ying had an interview at night with [the commandant of that city] Seu Woo, and told him [his plans]. thing," said Woo, "is impracticable. Who can raise up him whom Heaven is overthrowing? You are sure to perish [in this attempt]. I do not grudge death [in your cause], but I know the enterprize will not succeed." Ying replied, "Granted, but if through your help I go to my death, I will not regret it. I may not have Heaven on my side, but you will be free from blame." Seu Woo agreed to his request, and, having concealed him, invited the [principal] When the men of K'ëuh Yuh to a banquet. music struck up, he said to them, "If now we had got here the young Lwan, what would you do?" "If we had our lord here," they replied, "we should think dying for him to be no death." With this all sighed, and some wept. As the cup went round, he put the same question again, and they all said, "Only give us our lord, and there will be no swerving from our purpose." On this Ying came forward, and saluted them all round.

'In the 4th month, Ying led on the men-atarms from K'ëuh-yuh, and, depending on the belp of Wei Hëen-tsze, entered Këang in the day time. Before this, Ying had been assistantcommander of the 3d army under Wei Chwangtaze. In consequence of this, Heen-taze (Son of Chwang-tsze) was secretly attached to Ying, and the latter depended on his help. But the Chaou clan were hostile to the Lwan, because of the misfortunes of [the lords of] Yuen and Ping (See the Chuen on VIII. viii. 6). The clans of Han and Chaou [likewise] were now on friendly terms. The Chung-hang clan were hostile to the Lwan, because of what had occurred in the invasion of Ts'in (see on xiv. 3); and Che Ch'oh-tsze being young, his family was guided by the Chung-hang. Ching Ching was a favourite of the duke; and thus it was that only the Head of the Wei clan and the superintendent of the duke's carriages favoured Lwan

'Yoh Wang-foo was sitting with Fan Seuentaze, when word was brought to them that Ying had arrived. Seuen-tsze was afraid, but Hwantaze (Wang-foo) said to him, "Quickly support the marquis into the strong palace, and no harm will be sustained. The Lwan have many enemies; and the government is in your hands. Lwan Ying has come from without, and you are in your place; -- your advantages are many. Since you have such advantages and the power, and hold moreover the handle of the people, what have you to fear? And has Ying any friends but the chief of the Wei clan, whom you may take by force? Disorder is to be repressed by prompt action for the exigency;—do not you be remiss [in taking it]."

'As they were in mourning at the duke's for their relative (the earl of Ke), Wang-foo made Seuen-tsze put on mourning clothes and head-band all blackened, and be pushed along in a lady's barrow by two females, and in this guise go to the duke, with whom he then proceeded to the strong palace.

"[At the same time], Fan Yang went to meet Wei Shoo, whom he found with his carriages all drawn up and yoked, about to go to meet Lwan Ying. Hurrying forward, Yang said to him, "Lwan Ying with a body of rebels has entered the city. My father and the great officers are all at the ruler's, and have sent me to meet you. Allow me to take the third place in your carriage and to hold the strap." With this, he sprang into the carriage, brandishing his sword in his right hand, and with his left hand holding the strap, while he ordered them to gallop along. As they issued from the gate, the driver asked where he should go to. "To the duke's," cried Yang. Seuen-tsze met Wei Shoo at the steps, took him by the hand, and promised him K'ëuh-yuh.

'[Seuen-tsze] had a slave Fei P'aou, one of those entered in the red book (Book of criminals). The strongest of Lwan Ying's followers was Tuh Jung, of whom all the people were afraid. Fei P'aou said to Seuen-tsze, "If you will burn the red book, I will kill Tuh Jung." Seuen-tsze joyfully said to him, "I swear by the sun, that if you kill Tuh Jung, I will beg our ruler to burn it." Accordingly he sent P'aou forth, and shut the gate behind him. Tuh Jung came to pursue him, and P'aou waited for him, concealed behind a low wall. Then, when Jung had jumped over it, P'aou killed him with a blow from behind.

'The followers of Fan were all behind the tower, and the Lwan swarmed up to the duke's gate. "The arrows reach the ruler's house," said Seuen-tsze to Yang; "do your utmost, though you die." Yang led on his men with his sword drawn, and the Lwan withdrew. He was then pursuing them in his father's chariot, as if he were the . commander-in-chief, when he was met by Lwan "Get out of my way," [cried Yang], "O Loh. Though I die, I will dispute with you in heaven." Loh discharged an arrow at him, and missed; and when he had got another on the string, his carriage was overturned by the root of a cassia-tree, when some one drew him from underneath with the hook of his spear, and cut off his arms, so that he died. Lwan Fang was wounded, and Ying fled to K'ëuh-yuh, where the troops of Tsin laid siege to him.

Of the two statements in the text, that 'Ying entered Tsin again, and entered K'ëuh-yuh,' the second is to be understood of Ying's retreating to K'ëuh-yuh, after his attempt upon the capital of the State was defeated. Kung-yang is in error, as the K'ang-he editors point out, in referring it to Ying's first entrance into K'ëuhyuh, and then advancing from it to the capital. The use of \( \sqrt{is somewhat peculiar.} \) Maou says:-'人 is used instead of 频 (rebelled), because in the first instance he entered and then rebelled,—he had not rebelled before he entered; and in the second instance, he entered after he had rebelled,—he did not enter, and then hold the city in rebellion!' He compares xxx. 7 and VIII. xviii. 5.

Par. 8. The K'ang-he editors remark that the invasion of Tsin by Ts'e, following here the account of Lwan Ying's attempt, makes it plain that Ying had been aided and instigated by Ts'e; but it is from the Chuen and not from the text that we learn this. Wei had attacked Ts'e at the command of Tsin in the 19th year, and the marquis would now first wreak his vengeance on it. The invasion of Tsin being so much the greater undertaking, the critics hesi-

The Chuen says:—'In autumn, the marquis of Ts'e invaded Wei. The van of the army was commanded by Wang-sun Hwuy, with Kuh Yung as charioteer, and Shaou Yang as spearman. The next column was commanded by Keu Häng, with Ch'ing Ch'ih as charioteer, and Foo-che, [son] of Shin Seen-yu, as spearman. [In the centre], Ts'aou K'ae was charioteer to the marquis, and Gan Foo-jung was spearman. The supporting force was commanded by Hing Kung, with Shang Che-tang as charioteer, and Loo P'oo-kwei as spearman. In the left wing, Sëang P'e commanded, with Laou Ching as charioteer and Lang Keu-soo as spearman; in the right, How Chaou, with Shang Tsze-keu as charioteer, and Hwan T-ëaou as spearman. The army of the rear was commanded by Hea Cheyu-k'ow with Shang Taze-yu as charioteer, and Ts'uy Joo as spearman, Chuh-yung Che-yueh being in the same chariot.

'The intention being to go on from Wei to attack Tsin, Gan Ping-chung said, "The marquis means, in the confidence of his courage and strength, to attack the president of covenants. It will be well for the State if he do not succeed. If there be success without virtue, grief will [soon] come to him." Ts'uy Ch'oo remonstrated with the marquis, saying, "Do not [invade Tsin]. I have heard that when a small State takes advantage of the troubles of a great one to do it further injury, it is sure to have to bear the blame. Let your lordship consider it." But remonstrance was of no use.

'[After this] Ch'in Wan-tsze saw Ts'uy Wootsze and said to him, "What is to be done with reference to our ruler?" "I remonstrated with him," was the reply, "and he would not listen to me. If we are all brought to straits by his taking advantage of the [present] distress of the president of covenants, what difficulty will there be in dealing with him? Forbear saying anything for the present." Wan-tsze retired, and said to his people, "Shall Ts'uy-tsze die peacefully? He speaks of the marquis's conduct as very bad; and his own will go beyond it. He will not have a peaceful death. When a man condemns his ruler in a righteous way, he still does so to his own damage; how much more must he do so, when he has wickedness in his mind!"

'The marquis accordingly invaded Tsin, and took Chaou-ko. He then divided his forces into two bodies; entered the pass of Mäng; ascended the hill of T'ae-hang; formed an entrenched camp at Yung-t'ing; placed garrisons in Pe and Shaou; raised a mound at Shaou-shwuy:—all in retaliation for the affair at P-ing-yin (See on xviii. 8). He then withdrew, and was pursued by Chaou Shing with the troops of Tung-yang, when Gan Le was taken prisoner.'

Par. 9. For Kung and Kuh have The place belonged to Tsin, and was 18 le southwest from the pres. dis. city of Seun (), dep. Wei-hwuy, Ho-nan. Tso-she says that the action of the commander was 'proper.' Why it should be 'proper' to halt, it is difficult to understand, though it was no doubt proper in Loo to send an expedition to the relief of Tsin. Kung-yang and Ying-tah think the halting was to get orders from the marquis of Tsin; while the K'ang-he editors condent it as an evidence of weakness. But see the reference to the expedition in the Parr. 10, 11. It will be found from the Chuen that there was a connection between these two events:—'Ke Woo-tsze had no son by his wife proper. Of [his other sons], Kung-mei was the eldest, but he loved Taou-tsze, and wished to make him his successor. Consulting Shin Fung on the subject, he said to him, "I love both Mei and Heih (Taou-tsze), but I wish to select the abler of the two, and make him my successor." Shin Fung hurried away home, and intended to leave the State with all his family. Another day he consulted him again, and Fung replied, "If it must be so, I will get my carriage ready and leave the State;" upon which he desisted from his purpose. Consulting Tsang Heih about it, however, that minister said, "Invite me to drink with you, and I will appoint him for you." Accordingly Ke gave a feast to all the great officers, with Tsang Heih as the principal guest. When he had sent the pledge cup round, Tsangsun ordered two mats to be placed in the northern part of the hall. He then took a new cup, and washed it, called for Taou-tsze, and went down the steps to meet him, while the great officers all rose up. When the general cup was going round, he also called for Kung-ts'oo (Kungmei), and made him take a place after Taou-tsze. Ke-sun lost colour [on seeing what was done].

'[After this], Woo-tsze appointed Kung-ts'00 to be the superintendent of his stud, but he was indignant, and would not come forth. Tsze-ma visited the young man, and said to him, "You ought not to behave so. Happiness and misery have no gate by which they must enter; each man calls the one or the other for himself. A son should be distressed lest he should not be filial, and not about his proper place. Reverence and honour your father's command; what invariableness attaches [to the order of succession? If you maintain your filial reverence, you may become twice as rich as the Head of the Ke family; but if you play a villainous and lawless part, your misery may be double that of one of the lowest of the people." Kung-ts'oo took this advice, showing a reverent obedience to his father early and late, and sedulously filled his office. Ke-sun was delighted, and made himself be invited by him to a feast, to which he went, carrying with him all the apparatus for it and leaving it there. In this way Kung-ts'oo became rich, and [by-andby he went forth, and became administrator of the Left to the duke.

'Mang-sun hated Tsang-sun, and Ke-sun liked him. Mang-sun's charioteer, Ts'ow Fung-teen liked [his master's son] Këeh, and said to him, "If you will follow my advice, you will become your father's successor." After he had urged this several times, Këeh agreed to it; and when Chwang-tsze was ill, Fung-tëen said to Kung-ts'oo, "If you will secure the succession of Këeh, I will be an enemy to Tsang-sun." Kung-ts'oo then said to his father, "Yu-tsze Ch'ih (the elder brother of Këeh) ought indeed to succeed to his father, but if we raise Këeh to the place, we shall truly show ourselves stronger than Tsang-sun." Ke-sun gave him no reply; and on Ke-maou, when Mang-sun died, Kung-ts'oo took Këeh, and placed him at the side of the door (In the chief mourner's place). Ke-sun came to the house, entered the apartment, and wept. When he was going out, he said, "Where is Ch'ih?" Kung-ts'oo replied, "Këeh is here." "But Ch'ih is the elder," said Ke-sun. "What have we to do with the elder?" was the reply. "We only require the abler. And his father so commanded." Këeh was hereupon declared successor to Mang Chwang-tsze, and Ch'ih fled to Choo.

'When Tsang-sun entered the apartment [of the dead , he wept very sore, with many tears. When he went out, his charioteer said to him, " Mäng-sun hated you, and yet you thus lament him. If Ke-sun were to die, how would you bear it?" Tsang-sun answered him, "The love of Ke-sun produced in me a feverish eruption. The hatred of Mang-sun was like a medical stone to me. The good cruption was not so beneficial as the painful stone, which brought me to life again, while the eruption increased its venom more and more. Now that Mang-sun is dead, my exile is not distant." The [new] Head of the Mang family then shut his gate, and sent word to Ke-sun that Tsang-sun was about to raise a disturbance, and would not allow him to bury his father. Ke-sun did not believe it; but when Tsang-sun heard it, he took precautionary measures. In winter, in the 10th month, Mang-sun was about to prepare the grave, and borrowed labourers from Tsang-sun, who ordered the superintendent of them to render his assistance; and when they were clearing the road at the east gate, he went himself with some men-at-arms to see them. Mang sun sent also information of this to Ke-sun, who was angry, and gave orders to attack Tsang. In consequence, on Yih-hae, Tsang Heih cut down the barrier at the Luh gate, made his escape, and fied to Choo.

'[Heih's father], Tsang Seuen-shuh had married a lady of Choo, who bore to him Këa and Wei, and then died. He then raised to her place her niece, [who had come with her to the harem],—a daughter of the younger sister of Muh-kënng (The mother of duke Ching). This lady bore Heih, who grew up in the duke's palace; and being the object of the duchess Këang's love, he was made successor to his father. When that took place, his [half-] brothers Këa and Wei left the State and lived in Choo. Woo-chung [now] sent word from Choo to Këa of what had befallen him, and sent him a large tortoise, saying, "Through my want of ability, I have lost the change of our ancestral temple, and I venture to tell you of my pitiable case. My offence, however, is not of a character that should lead to the extinction of our sacrifices. Do you present to the duke this large tortoise, and ask to be permitted to continue them; and it may be granted." Këa replied, "What has happened is the misfortune of our family, and not through any fault of yours. I have received your commands." He then bowed twice, and received the tortoise, which he entrusted to [his brother] Wei to present with the request which had been suggested. But Wei preferred the request in his own behalf. Tsang-sun went to Fang (the city of the Tsang clan), and sent a message from it to the duke, saying, "It was not in my power to do any harm;—it was my wisdom which falled me (Referring to his going with the men-at-arms to see the workmen). I do not presume to make any request for myself. But if you allow the maintenance of the sacrifices to my ancestors, and do not forget the merits of my two predecessors, shall I not leave this city?" Upon this Tsang Wei was made Head of the family;—and Tsang Heih surrendered Fang, and fled to Ts'e. Some of his people said to him, "Will they make a covenant with reference to us?" "They have nothing to allege in doing so," said Heih. It was determined, however, to do so, and Ke-sun called the historiographer of the Exterior, and asked him how, in dealing with the case of a guilty minister, the covenant should be headed. The historiographer replied, "In the covenant about the minister Tung-mun, it was said, 'Let no one act like Tung-mun Suy, who disregarded the order of the duke, putting to death the rightful heir, and raising the son of a concubine in his place.' In the covenant about the minister Shuh-sun, it was said, 'Let no one act like Shuh-sun K'ëaou-joo, who wished to set aside the regular order of the State, and overthrow our ducal House.' Kesun said, "The guilt of Tsang-sun is not equal to that of either of these." Mang Tsëaou suggested that the covenant should be grounded on his violence to the gate in breaking down the barrier. Ke-sun adopted the suggestion, and the covenant ran—"Let no one act like Tsangsun Heih, who violated the rules of the State, and broke through the gate, cutting down the barrier." When Tsang-sun heard these terms, he said, "There is a man in the State. was it? Was it not Mang Tsëaou?"'

Par. 12. The Chuen says:—'The people of Tsin reduced K'ëuh-yuh, and took Lwan Ying, when they put to death all the members and the partizans of the Lwan clan, Lwan Fang making his escape, and flying to Sung. In the text there is no mention of Ying's being "a great officer of Tsin," because he had come [against it] from another State.' Comp. the account of the death of Lëang Seaou in xxx. 7.

Par. 13. The Chuen says:—'When the marquis of Ts'e returned from Ts'in, without entering [his capital], he fell on Keu by surprise, and attacked the gate of Tseu-yu. A wound in the thigh obliged him to retire; but next day he resolved to renew the fight, and fixed on Showshoo as the place of engagement. [In the meantime] Ke Chih and Hwa Seuen passed during the night in their armour through a defile near Tseu-yu, and reached the suburbs of the capital city. Next day, before the marquis, they met with the viscount of Keu at P'oo-how-she, who offered them large bribes to induce them not to fight to the death, and begged them to make a covenant with him. Hwa Chow (Hwa Sëuen) replied, "If, coveting your bribes, we should cast away our orders, your lordship would hate us. If before mid-day we could forget the orders which we received at dawn, wherewith should we serve any ruler?" On this the viscount himself beat the drum, and urged on his men to attack them, when Ke Lëang (Ke Chih) was taken prisoner. After this the people of Keu made submission.

'When the marquis of Ts'e was returning home, he met the wife of Ke Lëang in the suburbs, and sent an officer to present to her his condolences. But she declined them, saying, "If Chih committed any offence, why should you condescend to send me any message? If he escaped committing any offence, there is the cottage of his father. I cannot listen to any condolences in the fields." The marquis then sent his condolences to her house.'

[We have here a narrative about Tsang-sun Heih in Ts'e:—'The marquis of Ts'e was intending to make a grant of lands to Tsang-sun Heih, when at an audience which Heih had with him, he spoke with him about his invasion of Tsin. Heih replied, "You say you accomplished much, and let it be so; but your lordship was like a rat. Now a rat lies hid in the day-time, and moves about at night. It does not have its holes in bed-chambers nor in ancestral temples:—from its fear of men. Now your lordship heard of the troubles in Tsin, and began your movements. If it had been quiet, you would have served it. If you were not a rat in this, what were you?"

'After this, the marquis did not give him any lands. Chung-ne said, "It is hard to be wise. There was the wise Tsang Woo-chung, and yet he was not allowed to remain in Loo. And there was reason for it. He did what was not accordant with right, and did not act on the principle of reciprocity. One of the Books of Hëa (Shoo II. ii. 10) says, 'When you think of anything, be found yourself in that thing,' meaning that one's conduct should be accordant with right, and his actions on the principle of reciprocity."']

XXIV. 1 In the [duke's] twenty-fourth year, in spring, Shuh-sun P'aou went to Tsin.

2 Chung-sun Këeh led a force and made an incursion into Ts'e.

3 In summer, the viscount of Ts'oo invaded Woo.

4 In autumn, in the seventh month, on Këah-tsze, the first day of the moon, the sun was completely eclipsed.

5 Ts'uy Ch'oo of Ts'e led a force and invaded Keu.

6 There were great floods.

7 In the eighth month, on Kwei-sze, the first day of the moon, the sun was eclipsed.

The duke had a meeting with the marquis of Tsin, the duke of Sung, the marquis of Wei, the earls of Ch'ing and Ts'aou, the viscounts of Keu, Choo, and T'ang, the earls of Seeh and Ke, and the viscount of Little Choo, in E-e.

- 9 In winter, the viscount of Ts'oo, the marquises of Ts'ae and Ch'in, and the baron of Heu, invaded Ch'ing.
- 10 The duke arrived from the meeting [at E-e].
- 11 K'ëen E-këw of Ch'in fled from that State to Ts'oo.
- 12 Shuh-sun P'aou went to the capital.
- 13 There was a great famine.
- : I. The object of this was probably, as ays, to congratulate the marquis of Tsin e quelling of the Lwan revolt. The Chuen 'When Muh-shuh (P'aou) went to Tsin, Sënen-tsze met him, and asked the meanf the saying of the ancients, "They died iffered no decay," and, before he had replied, on to say, "Anciently, the ancestor of the 1, anterior to the time of Yu (Shun), was rince of T'aou and T'ang (Yaou; see on hoo, III. iii. 7). In the time of Hea, their tors were the Yu-lung (see the Chuen after ix. 4). In the time of Shang, they were lords of Ch'e-wei. In the beginning of , they were the [lords of ] T'ang and Too. 1 Tsin obtained the presidency of cove-, we became the [lords of] Fan.—Is this is meant by the saying?" Muh-shuh "According to what I have heard, this is is called 'hereditary dignity,' but it is not not decaying.' There was a former great r of Loo, called Tsang Wan-chung, the lence of whose words was acknowledged his death. This may be what the saying ied. I have heard that the highest meanf it is when there is established [an exe of virtue; the second, when there is lished [an example of] successful service; the third, when there is established [an ple of wise] speech. When these examare not forgotten with length of time, this at is meant by the saying—"They do not ." As to the preservation of the surname he giving off clan branches, by which the tral temples are preserved, and the sacricontinued without interruption from age to where is the State in which we have not The preservation of the greatest dignity at be called that freedom from decay.

here follows here the following narrative:-Seuen-tsze was chief minister of Tsin, and fferings required from the different States ne [constantly] more heavy, so that the le of Ch'ing were distressed about it. In d month [of this year], the earl of Ching going to Tsin, and Tsze-ch'an entrusted 'sze-se a letter for Fan Seuen-tsze, in h he said, "The administration of the mment of Tsin is in your hands. The abouring States all about do not hear of lisplay of admirable virtue, but they hear e great offerings which are required from ;—and this perplexes me. I have heard to a superior man presiding over a State is no trouble about the want of gifts, but ifficulty is lest he should not be obtaining id name.

Now, when the offerings of the different es are largely accumulated in your duke's , those princes will become alienated from

And if you, my master, put your conce in these things, the State of Tsin will ue alienated from you. If the States become alienated from it, Tsin will go to ruin, and if Tsin become alienated from you, your family will go to ruin. In what a fatal course are you proceeding! Of what use would the gifts be then?

'A good name is the carriage in which virtue is conveyed about; and virtue is the [sure] foundation of a State. When there is a foundation, there is no crumbling to ruin;—is not this then of paramount importance? With virtue there is joyful satisfaction, a satisfaction that is permanent. The ode (She, II. ii. ode VII. 1) says,

'Objects of joyful complacency are these officers,
The foundations of my State;

—with reference to the effect of admirable virtue. [And another ode (She, III. i. ode I. 7) says], with reference to the effect of a good name-Strive with all your heart to make your virtue illustrious, and a good name will then carry the fame of it abroad; and in this way the remote will come to you and the near will repose in you. Had you not better cause men to say of you that you nourish them, than to say that you take from them to nourish yourself? Tho elephant has tusks to the destruction of its body;—because of their use as gifts." Sëuentsze was pleased, and made the offerings [required from the States] lighter.

'God is with you, Have no doubts in your heart;'

'On this visit, the earl of Ching appeared at the court of Tsin, on account of the great offerings which were required, and to ask leave to invade Chin. He bowed with his head to the ground [before the marquis], and when Sëuen-tsze wished to decline such an act of homage, Tsze-se, who was in attendance on the earl, said, "Through its reliance on the great State [of Ts'oo], Chin exercises an insolent oppression of our poor State. On this account our ruler asks leave to call it to account for the offence;—how dare he but bow his head to the earth?"]

Par. 2. The appointment of Këeh to be successor to his father as a minister of Loo and head of the Chung-sun clan, is given in the Chuen on par. 10 of last year. He is known as Mang Hëaou-pih (元文句). Tso-she observes that the incursion in the text was made in behalf of Tsin. Kung-yang gives his name as 表, 表, and 表.

Par. 3. The Chuen says:—'In summer, the viscount of Ts'oo invaded Woo with a naval squadron; but through the neglect of the rules of war, it returned without accomplishing anything.'

Part. 4, 7. The former of these eclipses is correctly recorded. It took place, and was total, about 1 h. 15 m. r. m., on June 12th, B.C. 548. The record of the second is a mistake, for which we cannot account any more than for the similar mistake in xxi. 6.

Par. 5. The Chuen says:—'The marquis of Ts'e being under apprehension because of his invasion of Tsin, wished to have an interview with the viscount of Ts'oo, who sent Wei K'e-këang to Ts'e on a friendly visit, and to be informed as to the time of meeting. The marquis was sacrificing at the altar of the land, and inspected his munitions of war, that the visitor might see them. This made Ch'in Wän-tsze remark that there would soon be rebellion in Ts'e. "I have heard," said he, "that when weapons are not kept in their place, a prince will bring his own clans against himself."

'In autumn, having heard that Tsin was contemplating an expedition against him, the marquis sent Ch'in Woo-yu after Wei K'e Këang to Ts'oo, to put off the meeting, and to beg the assistance of an army. Ts'uy Ch'oo escorted him with a force, and took the opportunity to invade Keu, making an incursion to Këae-kin.'

It was stated in the Chuen on the last par. of last year that Keu and Ts'e had made peace. We have here another instance of the little value of truces between the States of those days.

Par. 6. See II. i. 5, et al. From the Chuen on next par. it appears that this flood extended beyond Loo.

Par. 8. E-e,—see on V. i. 3; and III. xxxii. 7. 'This meeting,' says Tso, 'was with the intention of attacking Ts'e; but in consequence of the floods, the purpose was not carried out.' Here, as always, instead of Kung-yang has . Recent critics are severe on Tso, for throwing the failure of this meeting on 'the floods;' and what is said in the Chuen on the next par. gives some colour to their strictures.

Par. 9. The Chuen says:—'In winter, the viscount of Ts'oo invaded Ch'ing, in order to relieve Ts'e, and attacked the eastern gate of its capital. He then halted at the marsh of Keih, while the States returned [from E-e] to relieve Ching. The marquis of Tsin ordered Chang Loh and Foo Leih to flout the army of Ts'oo, when they begged Ching to supply them with a charioteer. The people of Ch'ing consulted the tortoise-shell about the matter, and it was indicated that the appointment of Yuen Shih-k'euen would be fortunate. Tsze-t'ae-shuh admonished him that he should not put himself on an equality with the officers of the great State; but he replied, "Whether they belong to a populous State or a small one, those above me are of the same degree." "Not so," said T'ae-shuh. "Small hillocks have no fir trees nor cypresses on them."

'The two officers sat in their tent, while Yuen Shih-k'euen waited outside. They took their food first, and then gave to him. They made him precede them in a wide war-chariot, while they followed in an easy one. It was not till they approached the army of Ts'oo that they entered his carriage, and then they squatted on a cross board at the back, playing a couple of lutes. When they came quite near, Yuen dashed on without telling them. They took their helmets from the bowcase and put them on; and when they entered the entrenchments, they descended from the carriage, seized each a man and dashed him to the ground, seized each another, and carried him off under his arm. The chariot had drawn off out of the entrenchments, without waiting for them; but they sprang into it, took their bows, and began shooting. When they had got off, they resumed their squatting, playing upon their lutes. "Kung-sun," said they [to their charioteer], "being in the same carriage, we are brothers; why did you act twice without consulting us?" "The first time," he replied, "I was thinking of nothing but entering [the camp]; just now I was afraid." What a hasty temper Kung-sun has!" responded they, laughing.

'The viscount of Ts'oo withdrew from the marsh of Keih and returned, when he sent Wei K'e-këang with a force to escort Ch'in Woo-yu

[to Ts'e].

'The people of Woo, in consequence of the naval attack on them by Ts'oo (par. 8), invited the people of Shoo-kew to join them, and they agreed to revolt from Ts'00. The viscount was then with his army in Hwang-p'oo, and sent Show, commandant of Shin, and Sze K'e-le to reprove them. The viscount of Shoo-kew met the two offcers reverently, and assured them there was no such thing, requesting also to be allowed a covenant. When they returned with this report to the king, he [still] wanted to attack the place; but Wei-tsze said, "No. They say they are not revolting, and they ask us to impose a covenant on them. If you now go on to attack them, you are attacking the guiltless. Let us return for a time, and give the people rest, to wait for the issue. If the issue be that they show no disaffection, we have nothing more to ask of them. If after all they do revolt, they will have no excuse, and we can take successful action." Accordingly [the army of Ts'00] returned.'

Par. 11. The Chuen says:—'The people of Ch'in were taking further measures against the partizans of the K'ing (See xxiii. 5); and K'ēsa

E-këw fled from it to Ts'oo.

Par. 12. The Chuen says:—'The people of Ts'e had [for the king] rebuilt the wall of Kësh (The Këah-juh of the Chuen on VII. iii. 4). Muh-shuh went to Chow on a mission of friendly inquiries, and to congratulate the court on the rebuilding of the wall. The king admired his courteous deportment, and gave him a great carriage.'

The floods mentioned in par. 6 had extended to the capital, and the wall of the king's city had been thrown down. Ts'e had rebuilt it, wishing, in its differences with Tsin, to conciliate the king's favour. The critics observe that this was the first mission which Seang had sent to the court, though he had been 5 times to Tsin, since his accession, and been 13 times present at meetings of the States.

Par. 13. There was a twice in the time of duke Seuen;—see VII. x. 18, xv. 10. Here we have the record of a great ke.' Kuh-leang says here:—'When one of the [five] grains does not ripen, there is said to be a k'een (pr., a deficiency); when two, a ke (pr.); when three, a kin (pr.); when four, a k'ang (pr.); when the whole five, a great is in (), or a great ke. In a great is in the rules were that the king should not have two dishes at once, nor plaster his towers and terraces; that he should discontinue his archery feasts, and leave the road in the archery ground uncared for; that different offices should be maintained, but nothing done in them; and that the Spirits should be prayed to, but no sacrifices offered.

According to the rules of government, duke Seang should have been prepared for such a season with the accumulations of eight years' superabundance; but it is assumed to have come on the State without any such provision for it.

[The Chuen gives here the following narrative:—'The marquis of Tsin had appointed a favourite, called Ching Ching, to be assistant-commander of the third army. When Kung-sun Hwuy, the messenger of Ching, was at Tsin on a friendly mission, Ching Ching, asked him, saying, "I venture to inquire what is the meaning of descending the steps [to meet a guest]?" 'Isze-yu (Hwuy) was not able to reply; but on his return he told Jen-ming of the circumstance. Jen-ming said, "He is going to die, or he is going to become a fugitive. Men of high rank know to be apprehensive; being apprehensive, they think of showing humility; and so there are those steps. They are simply emblematic of condescending to others; what is there to be asked about them? To desire to descend, when one has ascended high, is the part of a wise man; Ching Ching is not capable of it. Is he to be banished for something? Or if not, is he out of his mind with some perplexity, and feeling the sorrow of approaching death?""]

XXV. 1 In the [duke's] twenty-fifth year, in spring, Ts'uy Ch'oo of Ts'e led a force and attacked our northern borders.

In summer, in the fifth month, on Yih-hae, Ts'uy Ch'oo of Ts'e murdered his ruler Kwang.

The duke had a meeting with the marquis of Tsin, the duke of Sung, the marquis of Wei, the earls of Ching and Ts'aou, the viscounts of Keu, Choo, and T'ang, the earls of Seeh and Ke, and the viscount of Little Choo, in E-e.

4 In the sixth month, on Jin-tsze, Kung-sun Shay-che of Ch'ing led a force, and entered [the capital of] Ch'in.

5 In autumn, in the eighth month, on Ke-sze, the States made a covenant together in Ch'ung-k'ëw.

6 The duke arrived from the meeting.

7 The marquis of Wei entered into E-e.

- 8 K'euh Këen of Ts'oo led a force, and extinguished Shoo-këw.
- 9 In winter, Kung-sun Hëa of Ch'ing led a force, and invaded Ch'in.
- In the twelfth month, Goh, viscount of Woo, invaded Ts'oo, and died in an attack on one of the gates of Ch'aou.

Par. 1. The Chuen says:—'This was in retaliation for the expedition of Mang Hëaou-pih (See par. 2 of last year). The duke was distressed about it, and [was going to] send information to Tsin, when Mang Kung-ch'oh invasion his mind. He is not set on troubling us; he is handed.'

sure to return back soon:—why need you be distressed? His coming this time is without injuring us, and he does not treat the people with severity. It is very different from other invasions." The army of Ts'e returned empty-handed.'

Ta-kwo(言; 大過); which the diviners all said was fortunate. He showed it to Chin Wan-taze, but he said, "The [symbol for] a man [in K'wan] is displaced by that for wind [in Ta-kwo]. Wind overthrows things. The woman ought not to be married. And moreover, [upon K'wan] it is said, 'Distressed by rocks; holding to brambles; he enters his palace and does not see his wife. It is evil (see the Yih, on the third line of K'wan)' 'Distressed by rocks;'—in vain does one attempt to go forward. 'Holding by brambles;'—that in which trust is placed wounds. 'He enters his palace and does not see his wife; it is evil:'—there is nowhere to turn to." Ts'uy-taze replied, "She is a widow; —what does all this matter? Her former husband bore the brunt of it." So he married her. Afterwards duke Chwang had an intrigue with her, and constantly went to Ts'uy's house. [On one occasion] he took Ts'uy's hat and gave it to another person; and when his attendants said that he should not do so, he remarked, "Although he be not Ts'uy-tsze, should he therefore be without a hat?"

'I's'uy-tsze [was enraged] by these things; and because the duke took occasion [of its troubles] to invade I'sin, thinking that I'sin would be sure to retaliate, he wished to murder the duke in order to please that State. He did not, however, find an opportunity, till the duke had whipt one of his attendants, called Këa Keu, whom notwithstanding he kept near him. This man then watched the duke for Ts'uy-tsze.

'In summer, in the 5th month, on account of the affair at Tseu-yu (See on xxiii. 13) the viscount of Keu came to the court of Tse, and on Kën-sculi the duke entertained him in the north suburbs. Ts'uy-tsze gave out that he was ill, and did not go to see the affair. Next day the duke went to ask for him, and went after the lady Keang, who entered into a chamber, and passed out of it by a side door along with Ts'uytaze, while the duke patted a pillar and sang. [In the meantime], his attendant Këa Keu stopped all the duke's followers, entered [the house himself], and shut the door. Men-at-arms made their appearance, and the duke, ascending a tower, begged them to let him off. They would not do so, and he then begged to make a covenant; but neither would they agree to this. He begged [finally] to be allowed to kill himself in the ancestral temple; but they again declined, all saying, "Your lordship's servant Ch'oo is very ill, and cannot receive your commands. And this is near the duke's palace. We are watchmen, [and have to take] an adulterer. We can know nothing of two commands." The duke then attempted to get over a wall, when they shot and wounded him in the thigh; and as he fell backwards, they murdered him. Kes Keu, Chow Ch'oh, Ping Sze, Kung-sun Gaou, Fung Keu, Toh Foo, Seang E, and Leu Yin, all died at the same time.

'The priest To-foo had been sacrificing in Kaou-tang, and when he came to report the execution of his commission, he was killed at Ta'uy's house, before he could take off his cap. Shin Kwae should have been superintending the fishermen, but he retired [from that duty], and said to his steward, "You can make your escaps with your family. I will die [here]." The steward replied, "If I made my escape, I should be acting contrary to your righteous course." So he went with him, and they both died. Ts'uy-taze also put to death Tsung Mēch in

'Gan-taze stood outside the gate of Ts'uy's house. His people said to him, "Will you die?" "Was he my ruler only?" replied he. "Why should I die?" "Will you leave then?" "Is his death my crime? Why should I flee?" "Will you [now] go back to your house?" "Our ruler is dead. Where should I go back to? Is it the business of the ruler of the people to merely be above them? The altars of the State should be his chief care. Is it the business of the minister of a ruler merely to be concerned about his support? The nourishment of the altars should be his object. Therefore when a ruler dies or goes into exile for the altars, the minister should die or go into exile with him. If he die or go into exile for his seeking his own ends, who, excepting his private associates, would presume to bear the consequences with him? Moreover, when another man murders his ruler, how can I die with him? how can I go into exile with him? of what use would it be for me to return home?" When the gate was opened, he went into the house, pillowed the corpse upon his thigh, and wept He then rose, gave three leaps up, and went out. People advised Ts'uy-tsze to put him to death, but he said, "The people look up to him. Let him alone, and it will conciliate them."

'Loo P'oo-kwei fled to Tsin, and Wang Ho fled to Keu. After Shuh-sun Seuen-pih (Shuhsun K'ësou-joo; see VIII. xvi. 13) took up his residence in Tse, Shuh-sun Seuen introduced his daughter to duke Ling, with whom she became a favourite, and she bore him a son, [who now became] duke King. On Ting-chow, Tsuy Ch'oo raised him to the State, and became his chief minister, King Fung being minister of the Left. They made a covenant with the people of the State in the temple of Trae-kung, which began, "If we do not adhere to Ts'uy and K'ing," when Gan-taze looking up to heaven, sighed and broke in with, "If I do not adhere to those who are faithful to the ruler and seek the good of the altars, may God witness it!" With this he smeared his lips with the blood.

'On Sin-sze, the [new] duke and the great officers made a covenant with the viscount of Keu.

'The grand historiographer wrote [in his tablets]—"Ts'uy Ch'oo murdered his ruler;"—for which Ts'uy-tsze put him to death. Twoof his brothers did the same after him, and were also put to death. A third wrote the same, and was let alone. The historiographer in the south, hearing that the grand historiographer and his brothers had died in this way, took his tablets and set out [for the court]; but learning on his way that the record was made, he returned.

'Leu-k'ëw Ying wrapped up his wife in a cursain, put her into a carriage, and then got into it with Shin Seen-yu, and quitted the capital. Seen-yu pushed the lady out of the carriage, saying [to Ying], "You could not correct the ruler in his blindness, nor save him in his peril, nor die with him in his death, and yet you know how to conceal your wife here:—who will receive you?" Coming to a narrow pass, they thought of resting in it, but Ying said, "Ts'uy and King will be pursuing us!" The other replied, "Here it will be one to one. Who can frighten us?" They rested accordingly, and [Shin] slept with his head upon the reins. [In the morning], he fed their horses and then ate, himself yoked their carriage, and issued from the pass. When they had done so, he said to Ying, "Now urge on the horses to their speed. The multitudes of Ts'uy and K'ing could not [here] be withstood." In this way they came flying to Loo.

'Ts'uy-tsze placed the coffin of duke Chwang in the northern suburbs, and on Ting-hae he buried it in the village of Sze-sun. There were [only] 4 plumes to the carriage; travellers were not warned out of the way; and there were [but] seven inferior carriages in the procession, without any men at arms.'

The K'ang-he editors speak strongly against the conduct of Gan Ying, as described in the above Chuen, and condemn his principle that, when a ruler dies in pursuing his own selfish ends, only his parasites can be expected to die with him. They would have a blind, unreasoning loyalty override every other consideration of duty.

Par. 3. E-e;—see the 8th par. of last year. The object of this meeting was to arrange for the invasion of Ts'e; but it was prevented in the manner described in the Chuen:—'The marquis of Tsin crossed the P'wan, and assembled the States at E-e, [intending] to invade Ts'e, in retaliation for the campaign of Chaou-ko (See on xxiii. 8). The people of Ts'e, however, wished to please I'sin by [the death of] duke Chwang, and sent Seih Ts'oo to beg for peace. King Fung [also] went to the army [of Tsin], with rows of men and women, and bribed the marquis with vessels from the ancestral temple and instruments of music. The six commanders [of Tsin's armies], with the five [civil] officers and the thirty leaders, the great officers of the three armies, the superintendents of the different departments, and the multitude of officers, and those who had remained at home in charge of the State, all received gifts. The marquis granted peace, and sent Shuh-heang to inform the princes that he had done so. The duke [of Loo] sent Tsze-fuh Hwuy-pih to reply, "That your lordship thus pardons the guilty, in order to give rest to our small States, is your kindness. I · have heard your command." '

[The Chuen appends here:—'The marquis of Tsin sent Wei Shoo and Yuen Muh to meet the marquis of Wei (Who was a refugee in Ts'e; see xiv. 4), intending to make Wei give him E-e. Ts'uy-tsze, however, detained the marquis's family, as a means of asking for Woo-luh [from Wei].']

Par. 4. The Chuen says:—'Before this, the marquis of Ch'in had joined the viscount of Ts'oo in invading Ch'ing (Par. 9 of last year), when the army of Ch'in had closed up the wells and cut down the trees along the ways by which they passed. The people of Ching resented this conduct; and [now], in the 6th month, Tszechen and Tsze-chan invaded Chin with a force of 700 chariots, dug through the wall [of the capital] in the night time, and entered it. The marquis of Ch'in fled with his eldest son, Yensze, to the tombs. Meeting with the minister of War, Hwan-taze [on the way], he asked him to take them in his carriage, but he replied that he was inspecting the wall. [By-and-by], they met with Këa Hwoh, who was in a carriage with his mother and wife, but he put them down, and gave the carriage to the marquis. "You may leave your mother," said the marquis; but Hwoh declined doing so, saying that it would not be auspicious. He and his wife then supported his mother, fied to the tombs, and made their

'Taze-chen ordered the army not to enter the palace, and took post himself with Tszech'an to keep the gate of it. The marquis made the minister of War, Hwan-tsze, present to them the vessels of the ancestral temple, while he himself, in mourning, and carrying the tablet from the altar of the land, caused a multitude of the men and women in separate ranks, and bound, to wait with him in the court [for their victors]. Tsze-chen then was introduced to him, carrying a cord in his hand, howed to him twice with his head to the ground, and went forward, holding a cup of spirits, which he presented to him. Tsze-mei (Tsze-ch'an) entered, declared the number of his prisoners, and went out. [The two commanders] then made the [principal] priest sprinkle the altar of the earth, restored to the minister of Instruction [his lists of ] the people, to the minister of War his seal, and to the minister of Works [his charts of] the ground; and returned to

K'aou K'ang well remarks, that of all the 'entrances' into cities or States mentioned in the Ch'un Ts'ëw, there is none where the hostilities were conducted so courteously as by Tszechen and Tszech'an.

Par. 5. Too Yu observes that there must be an error in the month here, for the day — — must have been the 12th of the 7th month. The covenanting States must be those in par. 3. Ch'ung-k'ëw was in Ta'e, most probably in the dis. of Lëaou-shing ( ), dep. Tung-ch'ang. Tso-she says the covenant was made with reference to the peace which had been granted to Ts'e.

[The Chuen appends here:—'Chaou Wăn-tsze was [now] chief minister [of Tsin], and gave orders to make the offerings required from the States lighter, and to behave to them with greater courtesy. Muh-shuh had an interview with him, when he said. "Hostile movements may henceforth be had recourse to somewhat less." Ts'uy and K'ing of Ts'e have come [but] recently into the government of that State, and will wish to cultivate good relations with the rest of the States. I (Woo——was Chaou's name) know the chief minister of Ts'oo. If I behave with respectful courtesy to him, and set him the example of polite communications, in order to give repose to the States, hostile measures may be obviated."]

Par. 7. This was duke Hëen ( ), (17), who had been driven from Wei in Sëang's 14th year. E-e had been the capital of Hing, and on the extinction of that State by Wei, in the 25th year of duke lie, it had of course belonged to it. The purpose of the marquis of Tsin, mentioned in the Chuen appended to par. 8, was now carried out. The Ch'un Ts'ëw at this point recognizes "two marquises" of Wei, the one in par. 5 being P'ëaou ( ), who had been raised to the State on the expulsion of K'an.

Par. 8. Shoo-këw;—see on VII. viii. 7. It was the last of the Shoo States, which Ts'00 allowed to maintain a half sort of independence. The extinction of it here is the sequel of the narrative in the Chuen on par. 9 of last year.—' Wei Tsze-p'ing of Ts'oo having died, K'ëuh Këen became chief minister [in his room], with K'ëuh Tang as the Moh-gaou. The people of Shoo-kew in the end revolted, and the chief minister of Ts'oo, Tszemuli [K'ëuli Këen], proceeded to attack it. When he got to Le-shing, a body of men from Woo came to its assistance. Tsze-muh made a hurried march with the army of the right, and got before the rest of it to the city; but Tszekëang, Seih Hwan, Tsze-tsëeh, Tsze-ping, and Tsze-yu, withdrew with the army of the left. The men of Woo thus occupied a position between the two bodies for seven days. Tszekëang said [to Tsze-muh], "Ere long it will be raining, and we shall be reduced to such a straitness of ground, that we must be made prisoners. Our best plan is to fight soon. Allow us with our troops here to make a feint, while you have your army drawn up in order to wait for the result. If we are successful, you will advance. If we have to fly, you will still see what is best to be done. In this way we can escape; otherwise, we are sure to fall prisoners to Woo." Tsze-muli agreed to the plan, and the five men with their soldiers made an onset upon the troops of Woo, which fied. Going up a hill to look, however, and seeing that the [main] army of Ts'oo was not supporting their pursuers, they turned and drove those before them, till they approached their army. Then the fugitives were joined by the rest of the army that had been prepared for the occasion, and the troops of Woo received a great defeat. The siege of Shoo-kew was then prosecuted, the people dispersed, and in the 8th month, Ts'oo extinguished the State.'

Par. 9. For Kung-yang has . The Chuen says:—'Tsze-ch'an of Ch'ing [went] to Tsin to report the victory [over Ch'in], and wore for the occasion his military attire. An officer ( , see below) asked what had been the offence of Ch'in, when Tsze-ch'an replied, "In former times, Oh-foo of Yu was chief potter to Chow, and with his art did service to our first king [Woo], who, in consequence of the profit which he derived from him in the supply of vessels, and his being the descendant of the spiritual and intelligent [Shun], gave his own eldest daughter, T'ae-ke, in marriage to [his son], duke

Hoo, and invested him with Ch'in, thus completing the number of the 'three bonoured States.' Thus the princes of Ch'in originated with our Chow, and to the present time their dependence has been on it. In the troubles which occurred [after the death of] duke Hwan (see on II. v. l, 6; vi. 4), the people of Ts'ae wanted to raise to the State a prince of Chin whose mother was a daughter of Ts'ae, when our ruler duke Chwang placed Woo-foo in the marquisate. The people of Ts'ae killed him, and then we and they appointed and maintained duke Le. The succeeding dukes, Chwang and Sëuen, both owed their dignity to us. In the troubles occasioned by the Hea family (see VII. x. 8; i. 5), duke Ching was obliged to flee, but he owed his entrance [again] into his State to us, as [your] ruler knows.

"Now Ch'in has forgotten its great obligations to Chow, and makes no account of our great kindness to it, and has cast away [all consideration of the affinity between us. Relying on the multitudes of Ts'oo, it has behaved with a cruel insolence to our State, with a determination which could not have been anticipated. On this account we made last year the announcement to you on the subject (See the Chuen after par. 1); and before we had received your explicit commands, [Ch'in and Ts'oo had invaded us, and] attacked our east gate. The troops of Chin stopped up the wells and cut down the trees along the roads by which they marched. We were greatly afraid in the consciousness that we were not strong, and were ashamed of the disgrace thus done to T'ae-ke. But Heaven moved our breasts and put it into our hearts; and Ch'in was made to acknowledge its offence, and surrender itself to us. And now we presume to report to you our success."

"The officer of Tsin [further] asked why they encroached upon a small State. Tsze-ch'an replied, "It was the command of the former kings, that, wherever there was guilt, it should in every case be punished. And moreover, the domain of the son of Heaven was fixed at 1000 ks square, and that of the States at 100 ks, and less according to a scale. But your great State now contains several times the amount of the king's domain. If you did not encroach upon small States, how have you reached this extent of territory?"

'The officer asked once more "Why do you appear in martial attire?" Tsze-ch'an replied, "Our former rulers, Woo and Chwang, were high ministers of the kings Ping and Hwan. After the battle of Shing-puh (In He's 28th year), [your] duke Wan issued his orders that princes should all resume their old offices, and [specially] charged our duke Wan in martial attire to help the king; and therein he reported [to the court] the victory over Ts'oo. [I am now in that attire, because I do not dare to neglect the king's command." Sze Chwang-pih was not able to ask any more questions, and reported what had passed to Chaou Wan-tsze, who said, "His speeches are reasonable. To go against them would be inauspicious;" and accordingly he received Tsze-ch'an.

'In winter, in the 10th month, Tsze-chen attended the earl of Ching to Tsin to acknowledge its acceptance of his service against Chin. Tsze-se again invaded Chin, when the two States made peace.

'Chung-ne said, "An ancient book says, 'Words are to give adequate expression to one's ideas; and composition, to give adequate power to the words.' Without words, who would know one's thoughts; without elegant composition of the words, they will not go far. Tsin was the leading State, and but for Tszech'an's well-composed speeches would not have acknowledged Ch'ing's entrance into Ch'in as good service. Tsze-ch'an took great pains with his speeches."'

The notice in the text of the invasion of Ch'in, after what is told in par. 4. is strange, and Maou ventures to say that this was not properly an invasion, but an expedition to make a covenant of peace.

The Chuen gives here the following narrative about affairs in Ts'oo:—' Wei Yen was made [grand] marshal of Ts'oo, and Tsze-muh (The chief minister) commissioned him to regulate the levies [of the State], and make a schedule of its weapons and buff-coats. On Këah-woo, Wei Yen set about describing the [different] lands; measuring the forests; defining the meres; marking out the higher lands and the downs; distinguishing the poor and salt tracts; enumerating the boundaries of flooded districts; raising small banks on the plains between dykes; assigning the wet low grounds for pasturage; dividing the wide rich plains into tsings (see Mencius, III.i. ch. III.13); determining the levies according to the in-come of each; assigning the [contribution of] carriages and of horses; and of footmen; with the number of buff-coats and shields. When he had completed his task, be delivered the result to Tsze-muh. All this was proper.'

Ch'aou,—see VI.xii.4. The Chuen says:—'Choofan (The viscount of Woo,) now invaded Ts'oo in return for its naval expedition (xxiv.3), and attacked the gate of Ch'aou. Nëw Shin of that place said, "The king of Woo is daring and reckless. If we open the gate, he will attack it himself, and I shall have an opportunity to shoot him dead. Let him once die, and our boundaries will have a little rest." His advice was taken. The viscount attacked the gate, and Nëw Shin shot him from behind a low wall, so that he died."

This is the first occurrence in the text of some as a verb signifying to attack a gate (). The character has often occurred in the Chuen in this sense.

[We have now four narratives in the Chuen:
—1st. 'The viscount of Ts'oo wanted to reward
Tsze-muh on account of his extinction of Shookëw, but that minister refused the reward, saying, "It was all the merit of our late great officer Wei-tsze. The reward was given [accordingly] to Wei Yen.'

2d. 'Ching Ching of Tsin died, and Tszechian then learned for the first time [what] Jen-ming [had said about him] (See the Chuen at the end of last year). He therefore now consulted him about the practice of government, and Jen-ming replied, "The people should be looked on as one's children; and when a bad man is seen, he should be taken off as a hawk pursues a sparrow." Tsze-ch'an, full of joy, repeated his words to Tsze-t'ae-shuh, saying, "Formerly I had seen only Meeh's (Jen-ming's name) face, but now I see his heart." Taeshuh then asked Tsze-ch'an about government, and got the reply, "Government is like the work of husbandry. You must think of it day and night, thinking of what is to be done first, and how the end is to be accomplished. Then labour at it morning and evening; but in what you do, do not go beyond what you have thought over;—just as the husbandmen keep within their dividing banks. In this way you will commit few errors."

3d. 'Duke Hëen of Wei opened a communication from E-e with Ning He, who agreed to his proposals (See the Chuen at the end of the 20th year). When T'ae-shuh Wän-tsze heard of it, he said, "Ah! as it is said in the ode (She, II. v. ode III. 8),

'My person is rejected;

Of what use is it to think of subsequent things?'

Ning-tsze may be said not to think of the future. Is what he is contemplating to be done? It cannot be done. The superior man, when he does anything, thinks of what will be the end of it, and whether it can be repeated. It is said in the Shoo, (V. xvii. 6), 'Be careful of the beginning and reverent of the end; then in the end you will have no distress.' The ode (She, III. iii. ode VI. 4) says,

'Never idle, day nor night, In the service of the one man.'

Ning-tsze is now dealing with his ruler not so carefully as if he were playing at chess. How is it possible for him to escape disaster? If a chess-player lifts his man without a definite object, he will not conquer his opponent; how much more must this be the case when one would put a ruler down without a definite object! He is sure not to escape ruin. Alas that by one movement a family whose Heads have been ministers for 9 generations should be extinguished!"

4th. 'In the year of the meeting at E-e, (This belongs to the 24th year), the people of Ts'e walled Këah (for the king). In the 5th month, Ts'in and Tsin made a peace, Han-k'e of Tsin going to Ts'in to make a covenant, and Pih-keu of Ts'in going to Tsin to make one. The peace thus concluded, however, was not firmly knit.']

- XXVI. 1 In the [duke's] twenty-sixth year, in spring, in the king's second month, on Sin-maou, Ning He of Wei murdered his ruler P'ëaou.
  - 2 Sun Lin-foo of Wei entered Ts'ëih, and held it in revolt.
  - 3 On Këah-woo, K'an, marquis of Wei, returned to his dignity in that State.
  - 4 In summer, the marquis of Tsin sent Sëun Woo to Loo on a mission of friendly inquiries.
  - 5 The duke had a meeting with an officer of Tsin, Lëang Sëaou of Ch'ing, an officer of Sung, and an officer of Ts'aou, in Shen-yuen.
  - 6 In autumn, the duke of Sung put to death his heir-son Tso.
  - 7 The people of Tsin seized and held prisoner Ning He of Wei.
  - 8 In the eighth month, on Jin-woo, Ning, baron of Heu, died in Ts'oo.
  - 9 In winter, the viscount of Ts'oo, the marquis of Ts'ae, and the marquis of Ch'in, invaded Ch'ing.
  - 10 There was the burial of duke Ling of Heu.

The Chuen introduces here the narrative of | an occurrence in Tsin, which probably took place in the 1st month of this year:—"This spring, K'een, a younger brother of the earl of Ts'in, went to Tsin, to cultivate the good relations [into which the States had recently entered] (See the 4th narrative at the end of last year). Shuh-heang gave orders to call the internuncius Tsze-yun, when another, Tsze-choo, said, "I ought to go in [this time]." Thrice he said so, but Shuh-hëang gave him no answer, on which he became angry, and said, "His order and rank are the same as mine. Why do you [thus] degrade me in the court?" He then with his hand on his sword followed Shuh-hëang, who said to him, "Ts'in and Tsin have been in unfriendly relations for a long time. If to-day's affair be successfully concluded, it will be a matter of relief for the State. Should it not be so, the bones of our soldiers will lie on the Tsze-yun gives the words of the two States without any private admixture of his own, while you are continually changing them. Those who serve our ruler treacherously, I have power to keep back." And with this he shook his robe and followed him, till some parties came and separated them. Duke Ping said, "Tsin cannot be far from being well governed! That about which my ministers quarrel is great." The music-master Kwang said, "I am afraid the duke's House will be reduced low. The ministers do not contend together with their minds, but quarrel with their strength; they do not make virtue their object, but strive to be [thought] excellent. When such selfish desires are rampant, can it escape being reduced low?"']

Par. 1. The Chuen says:—'Duke Hëen of Wei wanted to send [his brother] Tsze-sëen [to the capital] on the subject of his restoration, but Tsze-sëen declined the mission; and when [their mother], King Sze, tried to force him to go, he replied, "The ruler will not keep his word. I am afraid I shall not escape the consequences." She said, "It may be so, but go on my account;" and he then agreed to go. Before this, the duke had opened a communication with Ning He, who said, "Tsze-seen must come here. If he do not do so, the attempt is sure to be defeated." It was on this account that the duke [now] sent Tsze-seen, who, not having succeeded in getting a [contrary] command from King Sze, [went and] told Ning He the duke's message, "If I return, the government shall be in your hands, and the sacrifices in mine." Ning informed Keu Pili-yuh [of the negotiation], and that officer said, "I would not listen to the matter of the ruler's expulsion (See the Chuen on xiv. 4); dare I listen to his entrance again?" and he immediately went away, and left the State by the nearest gate upon the borders.

'Ning then told Kuh, the administrator of the Right, who said, "Do not. You [Nings] will have been criminals in the case of two rulers. under heaven will bear you?" But Taou-tsze (He) replied, "I received a charge [to do this] from my father (See the Chuen at the end of the 20th year), and I cannot swerve from it." Kuh then said, "Let me go [first] to E-e and see the duke." He accordingly did so, had an interview, and told He on his return, "The ruler has been long in sorrow abroad, even for 12 years; but there is no sadness in his looks, nor generosity in his speech. He is the same man that he was. If you do not abandon the enterprize, the day of your death is not distant." Taou-tsze urged, "There is Tsze-seen." "And what will be the advantage of Tsze-seen?" replied Kuh. "At the most he will have to go into exile;—what can he do for us?" Taou-tsze replied, "Notwithstanding that, I cannot abandon the thing."

'[At this time], Sun Wăn-tsze was in Ts'eih; and [his son] Sun Këa was on a friendly mission to Ts'e, leaving [only] Sun Sëang in charge [at the capital]. In the 2d month, on Kang-yin, Ning He and Kuh, administrator of the Right, made an unsuccessful attack on [the house of] the Suns, but wounded Pih-kwoh (Sëang). Ning-taze left the city and lodged [with his family] in the suburbs (To be ready for flight), but Pih-kwoh died [of his wound]; and while they were lamenting during the night in his house, the people called for Ning He, when he and Kuh again attacked it, and took it. On Sin-maou, [He] put to death Tsze-shuh (P'ëaou; the marquis de facto), and his eldest son Këoh.

'The words of the text, "Ning He murdered his ruler P'ësou," show how the crime belonged to Ning He.'

Par. 2. Lin-foo was already in Ts'eih, and did not need to enter it. The par. must be read as a whole, without any stop at the the complant of the complant is a second of the complant of the sis being on the concluding . According to Tso, Lin-foo now also transferred his allegiance to Tsin. He says:—'Sun Lin-foo [now] went [over] to Tsin with Ts'eih. The words of the text, "entered into Ts'eih to revolt" are condemnatory of his crime. The emolument of a minister (In this case derived from the revenues of Ts'eih) really belongs to the ruler. When righteous relations obtain between them, the minister comes forward and discharges his duties. When such relations do not obtain, he should retire with his single person. If he assert a right to his emolument in order to meet his necessities, he deserves death.'

復歸,—see II. xv. 5, et al. Chuen here is a continuation of the two preceding:—'On Këah-woo, the marquis of Wei entered the capital. The words, "returned to his dignity," intimate that it was the State which restored him (?). (If the great officers who met him at the borders, he took the hands, and spoke with them. To those who met him [afterwards] on the road, he bowed, [saluting them with his hands]. To those [who were waiting] at the gate, he only nodded. When he arrived, he sent to reprove Tae-shuh Wan-taze, saying, "While I have been [thus] long in sorrow outside, one and another officer let me hear, morning and evening, what was passing in Wei. It was only you who were not for me. The ancients had a saying, 'I)o not be angry where you ought not to be angry.' I have reason to be angry [with you]." Wan-tsze replied, "I know my offences. In my incompetency I was not able to carry a halter and tether, and follow you to play the part of a herd and a groom;—this is my first offence. There were you who had left the State, and there was he who was in it; I was not able to play a double part, and keep up a communication between the outside and inside of the State;—this is my second offence. With these two offences, I dare not forget my duty to die." He was then leaving the State by the nearest barrier-gate, when the duke sent and stopped him.

[The Chuen appends here two narratives:—
1st. 'The people of Wei made an incursion into the eastern borders of Ts'eili, when Sun Lin-foo complained of them to Tsin, which sent a garrison to Maou-she. Chih Ch'oh (He had fled from Ts'e to Wei) attacked the place, and killed 300 of the garrison. Sun Kwae pursued him, but did not dare to attack him, on which

[his father] Wän-tsze said to him, "You are not equal to that devil." In consequence of this [Kwae] resumed the pursuit, and defeated the enemy at Yu, Yung Ts'oo capturing Chih Ch'oh. [Sun tsze] again sent a complaint to Tsin.'

2d. 'The earl of Ch'ing was rewarding the good service done in entering the capital of Ch'in, and in the third month, on Kēah-yin, he feasted Tsze-chen, and gave him a first [-class] carriage, and the robes of a minister of three degrees, along with 8 cities. He [also] gave Tsze-ch'an a second [-class] carriage, and the robes of a minister of two degrees, along with 6 towns. Tsze-ch'an declined the towns, saying, "The rule is that from the highest rank downwards the amount of gifts conferred should diminish by two each rank; and my place is only the 4th. The merit, moreover, belonged to Tsze-chen. I dare not assume that I ought to be rewarded. Allow me to decline the towns." The earl, however, pressed them upon him, and he accepted three. Kung-sun Hwuy said, "Tszech'an will yet administer the government [of Ch'ing j; while declining [the earls's favours], he did not fail in courtesy].

Par. 4. Seun Woo was a son of Seun Yen, and appears as the Chung-hang Muh-tsze ( ). The Chuen says:—'The people of Tsin, in consequence of [the complaints of] Sun Lin-foo, called out the States, intending to punish Wei. This summer, Chunghang Muh-tsze came to Loo on a friendly mission, and called the duke [to the meeting].'

We have here the following narrative with reference to Ching:—'The viscount of Ts'og and an officer of Ts'in, made an incursion into Woo, as far as Yu-low; but hearing that Woo was prepared for them, they returned, and proceeded to make an incursion into Chiag. In the 5th month they arrived at Shing-keun, the garrison of which was commanded by Hwang Keeh, who went out and fought with the army of Ts'oo. He was defeated, and takes prisoner, by Ch'uen-fung Seuh, with whom however, king [Kung's] son Wei disputed the right of his possession. They referred their claims to Pih Chow-le, who said. "Let us ask the prisoner." Accordingly he set Hwang Kat [before them], and said to him, "These disputants are both men of high degree; you must know which of them [is in the right]." Then holding up his hand, he said, "That gentleman is Wei, a son of our king [Kung], and the honourable brother of our ruler." Holding is down, he said, "This gentlemman is Chuen-fung Seuh, director of the district outside our wall of defence. Which of them took you?" The prisoner said, "It was when I met with the king's son that I became weak." Seuh was enraged at this, took his spear, and pursued Wei, but could not overtake him. The people of Ts'oo then took Hwang Keeh back with them. They had also made prisoner Yin Kin-foo, who had been associated with Hwang-keeh in guarding of the city, and him they presented to 'The people of Ch'ing received property from Yin's family, with which to ask that he might be restored to them; and Tsze-t'ae-shuh who had the superintendence of the government-manifestoes, agreed to make application for them [to Ts'in]. Tsze-ch'an said to him, "You will not get him. [Ts'in] received him as a trophy of Ts oo, and if it should take property for him from Ching, it would not deserve to be called a State. It will not do so. If you say, 'We acknowledge your lordship's diligent service for the State of Ching. If it had not been for your lordship's kindness, the army of Ts'oo would still have been at the foot of the wall of our capital; - that will succeed.' The other did not take his counsel, and a messenger proceeded to Tsin, but there they would not give up [their prisoner]. Tsze-t'ae-shuh then changed the money into offerings of silk, took the counsel of Tsze-ch'an, and obtained [Kin-foo's release .'

Par. 5. Shen-yuen,—see xx. 2. The Chuen says:—'In the 6th month, the duke had a meeting with Chaou Woo of Tsin, Hëang Seuh of Sung, Lëang Sëaou of Ch'ing, and an officer of Ts'aou, in Shen-yuen,—to [arrange for] the punishment of Wei. They defined the boundaries of the lands of Ts'eih, and took 60 [towns] belonging to E-she in the western borders of Wei, and gave them to the Sun. Chaou Woo is not mentioned in the text,—out of honour to the duke (?); nor is Hëang Seuh,—because he arrived late. [The representative of Ch'ing] arrived before that of Sung, and so has a place before him in the list.

'At this meeting the marquis of Wei [also] made his appearance, [but he was not admitted to it . The people of Tsin seized Ning He and Pih-kung E, and sent Joo Ts'e back with them to [Tsin], before doing anything else about them. The marquis of Wei then went to Tsin, where he was seized, and given in charge to Sze Joh as a prisoner. In autumn, in the 7th month, the marquis of Ts'e and the earl of Ching went to Tsin in the interest of the marquis of Wei. The marquis entertained them at the same time, and sang the Kea loh (She, III. ii. ode V.). Kwoh King-taze was in attendance on the marquis of Ts'e, and sang the Luh sëaou (She, II. ii. ode IX.). Trze-chen was in attendance on the earl of Ching, and sang the Tsze-e (She, I. vii. ode I.). Shuh-hëang instructed the marquis to acknowledge [the compliment paid by] the two princes, and then said, "My ruler ventures to thank the ruler of Ts'e for the rest which he secures to the ancestral tablets of our former princes. He ventures also to thank the ruler of Chaing for his unswerving adherence."

'Kwoh-tsze made Gan P'ing-chung say privately to Shuh-hëang, "The ruler of Tsin displays his brilliant virtue to the States, compassionating their distresses, repairing their defects, correcting their errors, and relieving their troubles. In this way he is the lord of covenants; but how is it that he has now in the behalf of a subject seized the ruler?" Shuh-hëang told this to Chaou Wan-tsze, who reported it to the marquis. The marquis explained to him the offence of the marquis of Wei (The slaughter of the garrison of Maou-she; see the first narrative appended to par. 3), and made Shuh-hëang inform the two princes of it. Kwoh-tsze on this sang the Pe che jow (A lost ode), and Tsze-chen sang the Tsëang Chung-tsze he (She, I. vii. ode II.). After this the marquis granted the return of the marquis of Wei. Shuh-hëang said, "()f the [descendants of the] seven sons of duke Muh of Ching, the Han will be the last to perish. Tszechen is moderate and single-hearted."'

Par. 6. Kuh-lëang has Like for Like. Chuen says:—'Before this, Juy, minister of Instruction in Sung, had a daughter born to him, who was so red and hairy, that he made her be thrown away under a bank. A concubine belonging to the harem of Kung Ke (The duke of Sung's mother) found her, and took her to the palace, where she was named K'e (Castaway). As she grew up, she became beautiful: and one evening, when duke Ping paid the customary visit to his mother, and was detained by her to supper, he saw the young lady, and looked at her intently. His mother in consequence introduced her to his bed. She became a favourite with him, and bore a son called Tso ( ; not the Tso in the text), who was ugly but winning. [The duke's] eldest son, Tso, was beautiful, but quarrelsome. [Hëang Seuh) of Hoh, the master of the Left, was afraid of him. and hated him. The head of the eunucha, Hwuy-ts'ëang E-le, was his master in the palace, but had no favour with him.

'This autumn, a visitor from Ts'oo, who was going on a friendly mission to Tsin, passed by [the capital of] Sung, and as the prince knew him, he asked leave to go out and give him an entertainment in the country. The duke commissioned him to go, when E-le asked leave to follow him. "Does he not hate you?" asked the duke. The eunuch replied, "When a small man like me serves a superior man like him, though hated, he does not presume to keep far from him, and though loved he does not presume to keep too near him. I will respectfully wait for his commands;—dare I have a double mind? There may be people to supply his outer wants, but there are none to supply his inner. Please allow me to go." The duke sent him after the prince. But when he arrived at the place, he took the blood of an animal as if for a covenant, placed a writing [on the vessel containing it], to attest what he meant to say, and then hurried away and told the duke that the prince was going to raise an insurrection. and had made a covenant with the visitor from Ts'oo. "He is my [eldest] son," said the duke; "what more does he want?" "He wishes your speedy [death]," was the reply. The duke sent to see [the place], and certainly there was [the pre-arranged evidence]. He then asked his wife, and the master of the Left, who both declared that they had heard of the thing. On this he imprisoned the prince, who said, "None but Tso can get me off." He called his brother. and sent him to intercede for him, saying, "If you do not come by midday, I shall know that I must die." The master of the Left heard of the arrangement, and kept up a [ceaseless] talk with the brother, till it was past time, and the prince strangled himself, after which his brother was declared successor to his father. By-andby the duke ascertained that the prince had not been guilty, and boiled E-le.

'[One day], the master of the Left saw a man exercising the horses of [the duke's] lady, and asked him [whose they were]. "They belong," said the man, "to the duchess." "Who is the duchess?" asked the other; "how is it that I do not know?" The groom went home and told the lady, who thereupon sent to the master a piece of jade, followed by some embroidered silk, and a horse. The messenger said, "The ruler's concubine K'e has sent me to present these things." The master of the Left made him say "The duchess" instead, then bowed twice with his head to the ground, and received the gifts.'

Par. 7. The seizure was made at the meeting in Shen-yuen; but Too Yu supposes that the announcement of it to the States was not made till after the return of the officers of Tsin from that place, and hence it is entered here as taking place in the autumn. From the account which we have of the death of He in Wei in the next year, we must suppose that Tsin released him when it released the marquis of that State, of the seizure of whom the text makes no mention.

[The Chuen appends here two narratives:—1st. 'When the earl of Ch'ing returned from Tsin, he sent Tsze-se to that State on a mission of friendly inquiries, and to make the following speech:—"My ruler came and troubled your ministers, so that he is afraid he must have incurred the charge of offending you, and has sent me to apologize for his want of intelligence,' The superior man will say that he knew well how to serve a great State.'

'Before this, Woo Ts'an of Ts'oo and Tsze-chaou, the grand-master of Ts'ae, were friends, and Ts'an's son Woo Keu was [also] attached to [Tsze-chaou's son], Shing-tsze. Woo Keu married [? a daughter of] king [Kung's son, Mow, who was duke of Shin, and obliged to flee from the State. The people of Ts'oo said that he had been escorted away by Woo Ken, who then fled to Ching, intending to continue his flight from thence to Tsin. Shingtsze was going at the time on a mission to Tsin, and met him in the suburbs of Ching. spread some king branches on the ground, ate together, and talked about [whether Keu could] return [to Ts'on]. Shing-taze said, "Go your way now. I will be sure to procure your return."

'When Hëang Seuh of Sung was trying to reconcile Tsin and Ts'oo, Shing-tsze was sent to communicate with Tsin; and on his return, he went to Ts'oo. The chief minister, Tszemuh, talked with him, and asked about things in Tsin. He asked him also whether the great officers of Tsin or those of Ts'oo were the superior. "The high ministers of Tsin," replied Shing-taze, "are not equal to those of Ts'oo, but the great officers are superior. Every one of them has the abilities of a minister. like the wood of the ke and the tsze, like skins and leather, they go from Ts'oo. The materials are Ts'oo's, but the using of them is Tsin's." "And is Tsin alone," asked the minister, "without its clans [connected with its ruling House], and its families in the relation of affinity?" "It has these," the other replied, "but it makes much use of the materials supplied to it by I (His name was Kwei-säng, 歸 生) have heard this, that the skilful administration of a State is seen in rewarding without error and punishing without excess. If rewards be conferred beyond what is proper, there is a danger of some reaching bad men; and if punishments be inflicted in excess, there is a danger of some reaching good men. If unfortunately mistakes cannot be avoided, it is better to err in the matter of rewards than of punishments. It is better that a bad man get an advantage !

than that a good man be lost. If there be not good men, the State will follow them [to ruin]. The words of the ode (She, III. iii. ode X. 5), 'Men there are not, And the kingdom is sure to go to ruin,' are descriptive of the consequences of there being no good men. And so in one of the Books of Hëa it is said, 'Rather than put to death an innocent person, you run the risk of irregularity;' indicating the fear that should be entertained of losing the good. In the sacrificial odes of Hëa (She, IV. iii. V. 4) it is said, 'He erred not in rewarding or punishing; He dared not to be idle.

So was his appointment established over the States,

And his happiness was made grandly secure.'

"It was thus that T'ang obtained the blessing of Heaven. The ancient rulers of the people encouraged themselves in rewarding, and stood in awe of punishing, and their compassion for the people was untiring. They rewarded in spring and summer; they punished in autumn and winter. Thus it was that when they were going to reward, they increased the number of their dishes, and in doing so they gave abundantly [to their ministers]:—showing us by this how they rejoiced in rewarding. But when they were going to punish, they would not take a full meal. and at the same time silenced their music: showing us by this how they shrank from punishing. Early they rose and went to sleep late; morning and evening they were occupied with the government:—showing us how anxious they were for [the welfare of the people. These three things are the great points of propriety [in a government]; and where there is such propriety, there will be no such thing as overthrow.

"Now in Ts'oo there are many wrongful punishments, through which its great officers fly from it, and die everywhere in the other States. to which they become counsellors to the injury of Ts'oo; and this error cannot be cured:—this is what I mean by saying that [Ts'00] cannot use its materials. In the insurrection raised by xiv. 7), the Tsze-e (See the Chuen after duke of Seih fled to Tsin, the people of which placed him in the rear of their chariots, and employed him to direct their counsels. In the campaign of Jaou-koh (See the Chuen on VIII. vi. 11), Tsin was going to retreat, when he said, 'The army of Ts'00 is excitable, and may be easily dispersed. If you beat many drums all at once, and attack it by night, it will be sure to retire.' The commanders of Tsiu took his advice, and the army of Ts'oo dispersed in the night. [The army of] Tsin in consequence made an incursion into Ts'ae, surprised Shin, and took its ruler captive (See the Chuen on VIII. viii. 2), defeated the armies of Shin and Seih at Sang-suy, captured Shin Le, and returned to its own State. On this Ching no [longer] ventured to turn its face to the south, and Ts'oo lost [its influence with] the States [of the north]:—all was the doing of the duke of Seih.

"The uncle and brother of Yung-tsze slandered him, and your ruler and the great officers did not accept his explanations. On this he fled to Tsin, where they gave him [the city of] Chuh, and employed him to direct their counsels. In mpaign of Pang-shing (See VIII. xviii. so and Tsin met in the valley of Mei-këoh; e army of Tsin was about to fly, when see sent orders through it, saying, 'Let and the young return home. "And there is now ning worse than this," rejoined Shing-·Tsëaou Keu (? There they mean to give him a district, considering that he is equal to Shuh-hëang. If he give them counsel to the injury of Ts'oo, will it not be a matter of sorrow?" Tsze-muh was afraid, and spoke on the subject to the king, who increased Keu's revenue and rank, and brought him back, Shing-tsze sending Tsëaou Ming to meet him.']

Par. 8. The Chuen says:—'Duke Ling of Heu went to Ts'oo, and begged that it would invade Ch'ing, saying that he would not return [to Heu] till the army was in motion; and in the 8th month, he died in 'Ts'oo.' Heu's wish that Ch'ing should be invaded, dates from the invasion of Heu in xvi. 7.

Par. 9. The Chuen says:—'The viscount of Ts'oo said, "If I do not invade Ch'ing, on what ground can I seek [the submission of] the States?" [Accordingly], in winter, in the 10th month, he invaded that State. The people of Ching wished to resist him, but Tsze-chian said, "Tsin and Ts'oo are about to become friends, and the States will be in harmony. The king of Ts'oo has blindly erred therefore in this attack on us. Our best plan is to let him have his way and return. Things will then be easily settled. As to those small men whose nature it is to be moved to deeds of daring, and to like times of confusion, thereby gratifying their nature and seeking for fame, [their schemes] will not be for the advantage of the State; -why should we follow them?" Tsze-chen was pleased, and did not resist the enemy. In the 12th month, on Yih-yew, [the troops of Ts'oo] entered Nan-le, and threw down the wall of it. They then crossed at [the ford of Yoh-she, and attacked the gate Szeche-leang, when nine men were captured by letting the port-cullis down. They [finally] crossed the Fan, and returned to Ts'oo, after which [the viscount] buried duke Ling of Heu.'

Par. 10. [We have here three narratives:—1st. 'The people of Wei presented a daughter of their house to [the marquis of] Tsin, on which he liberated the marquis of Wei. The superior man knows from this what a failure the government of duke Ping was.'

2d. 'Han Seuen-tsze went on a friendly mission to Chow. The king sent to ask his business, when he said, "A [humble] officer of Tsin, I wish to present the dues of the season to the subordinates of the prime minister. I have no other business." When the king heard his reply, he said, 'This Han will flourish and be great in Tsin. In his speeches he does not fail to observe the old rules."'

8d. 'In the summer of the year that the people of Ts'e walled Këah (In the 24th year), Woo Yu of Ts'e fled to Tsin, making over to it [the city of] Lin-k'ëw. [Afterwards], he surprised Yang-këoh of Wei, and took it, and then took by surprise our Kaou-yu. There was then a great rain, and he managed to enter by the drains, plundered the military store, mounted the wall, his men having armed themselves from the store, conquered and took the city. He also took a city from Sung. At this time Fan Sëuen-tsze was dead, and the States were not able to deal [with this marauder]; but when the government came into the hands of Chaou Wan-tsze, he was dealt with at last. Wan-taze said to the marquis, "Tsin is ) lord of covenants. If any of the States encroach on one another, we punish them, and make them restore the lands they have taken. Now all the cities of Woo Yu are of the kind for which punishment should in this way be inflicted. If we I The duke sent him on the duty.'] covet them, we are not fit to be lords of covenants. Let them be returned." The duke agreed and said, "Who is proper to be sent on such a mission?" Wän-taze said, 'Seu Leangtae can execute it without any military force."

XXVII. quis of Ts'e sent K'ing Fung to Loo on a mission of friendly inquiries.

In summer, Shuh-sun P'aou had a meeting with Chaou Woo of Tsin, K'euh Këen of Ts'oo, Kung-sun Kweisang of Ts'ae, Shih Goh of Wei, K'ung Hwan of Ch'in, Lëang Sëaou of Ch'ing, an officer of Heu, and an officer of Ts'aou, in Sung.

3 Wei put to death its great officer Ning He.

4 Chuen, younger brother of the marquis of Wei, left the State, and fled to Tsin.

In autumn, in the seventh month, on Sin-sze, P'aou and the great officers of the States made a covenant in Sung.

6 In winter, in the twelfth month, on Yih-hae, the first day of the moon, the sun was eclipsed.

[There follows here the conclusion of the narrative at the end of last year:—'This spring, Seu Lëang-tae called all who had lost cities to come, prepared secretly with chariots and men, to receive their lands; he also called Woo Yu to come, prepared in the same way to receive investiture. Yu appeared accordingly with all his people, and Seu made the princes assume an appearance as if they were going to invest him [with the cities]. He then took the opportunity to seize Yu, and make prisoners of all his followers, after which he took all the cities, and returned them to their owners. This event made the States all well-affected to Tsin].'

Par. 1. The object of this visit was to introduce, as it were, the new marquis of Ts'e to Loo. The Chuen says:—'K'ing Fung of Ts'e came to Loo on a friendly mission. His carriage was handsome, and Mang-sun said to Shuh-sun, "Is not K'ing Ke's carriage handsome?" Shuh-sun replied, "I have heard that when a man's robes are finer than befits him, he will come to an evil end. What is the use of the fine carriage?" Shuh-sun gave the envoy an entertainment, at which he did not behave himself respectfully. The host sang with reference to him the Sëang shoo, (She, I. iv. ode VIII.), but K'ing Fung did not understand his meaning.'

Parr. 2, 5. Here and afterwards, for The A., Kung has 孔 瑶. By 'Sung' we are to understand here the capital of that State. The Chuen says:—'Hëang Seuh of Sung was on good terms with Chaou Wan-tsze [of Tsin], and also with Tsze-muh, the chief minister [of Ts'00]. Wishing to stop the [constant] wars of the States, and thereby get a name, he went to Tsin, and told his object to Chaou-mang (Chaou Woo, or Wan-tsze), who consulted with the great officers upon it. Han Seuen-tsze said. "War is destructive to the people, an insect that eats up the resources [of a State], and the greatest calamity of the small States. If any one try to put an end to it, though we may think it cannot be done, we must sanction his proposal. If we do not, Ts'oo will do so, and proceed to call the States together, so that we shall lose the presidency of covenants." They then agreed in Tsin [to Seuh's proposals]. He next went to Ts'00, where they also did the same.

'He went to Ts'e, and there they were raising difficulties; but Ch'in Wan-tsze said, "Since Tsin and Ts'oo have agreed, how can we decline? And men will say that we refused to sanction the stoppage of wars, which will certainly make our people disaffected. Of what use will it be for us to decline?" So they agreed in Ts'e. He sent word [of his plan] to Ts'in which also agreed. He then sent word to all the smaller States, and arranged for a meeting at [the capital of | Sung.

'In the 5th month, on Këah-shin, Chaou Woo of Tsin arrived at that city, and on Ping-woo, Lëang Sëaou of Ch'ing arrived. In the 6th month, on Ting-we, the 1st day of the moon, they feasted Chaou Wan-tsze in Sung, with Shuh-hëang as subordinate to him, when the marshal caused the dishes to be set forth with the meat in pieces upon them;—which was proper. Chung-ne made [? me introduce here] this ceremony, because it afforded opportunity for many speeches. On Maou-shin, Shuh-sun P'aou, K'ing Fung of Ts'e, Seu Woo of Ch'in, and Shih Goh of Wei arrived. On Këah-yin, Seun Ying of Tsin arrived, subsequent to the arrival of Chaou Woo. On Ping-shin, duke Ch'oh of Choo arrived. On Jin-seuh, the Kungtsze Hih-kwang of Ts'oo arrived before [the prime minister], and settled the words [of the covenant] on the part of Tsin. On Tingmaou, Hëang Seuh went to Chin, following Tsze-muh, to settle the words on the part of Ts'oo. Tsze-muh said to him that he had to request that the States which followed Tsin and Ts'oo respectively should be required—those of the one side to appear at the court of the other. On Kang-woo, Heang Seuh returned to report this to Chaou-mang, who said, "Tsin, Ts'oo, Ts'e, and Ts'in are equals; Tsin can do nothing more with Ts'e than Ts'oo can do with Ts'in. If Ts'oo can make the ruler of Ts'in condescend to come to our capital, our rules will earnestly request [the ruler of] Ts'e to go to Ts'oo." On Jin-shin, the master of the Left (Heang Souh) went to report this answer to Tsze-muh, who despatched a courier to lay it before the king [of Ts'00]. The king said, "Leave Ts'e and Ts'in out, and let the other States be required to appear at both our courts.

'In autumn, in the 7th month, on Maou-yin, the master of the Left arrived [from Ch'in]; and that night, Chaou-mang and Tsze-seih (The Kung-tsze Hih-kwang) made a covenant about the terms to be adopted. On Kang-shin, Tsze-muh arrived from Ch'in, and at the same time K'ung Hwan of Ch'in and Kung-sun Kwei-săng of Ts'ae. When the great officers of Ts'aou and Heu were also arrived, they made an encampment with fences, Tsin and Ts'oo each occupying one side of it. Pih Suh said to Chaou-mang, "The spirit of Ts'oo is very bad. I fear there will be trouble;" but Chaou-mang replied, "We are on the left, and can turn and go into the city. What can they do to us?""

On Sin-sze they were about to covenant outside the western gate, when the men of Ts'oo wore their armour under their outer clothes. Pih Chow-le said [to Tsze-muh], "The multitude of the States are assembled here, and is it not undesirable [now] to show them our want of good faith? The States expect good faith from Ts'oo, and on that account they come to [indicate] their submission to it. If we do not keep faith, we are throwing away that by which we must effect the submission of the States." He then earnestly begged that the armour might be put off; but Tsze-muh said, "There has been no good faith between Tsin and Ts'oo for long. We have to do merely with getting the advantage. If we get our will, what is the use of having good faith?" The grand-administrator on this retired, and told [some people] that the chief minister would die in less than 3 years. "When he is seeking to get his will," he said "and casts away his faith, how can his will be got in that way? It is from the purpose in the mind that words come forth; it is by words that good faith is declared; and it is by good faith that the purpose in the mind is realized. The three are necessary in order to the stability of man. Having lost his good faith, how can he continue for three [years]?" Chaou-mang was troubled by the men of Ts'oo wearing their armour, and told Shuh-hëang of it, who said to him, "What harm can it do? It will not do for even an ordinary man to violate his faith;—the end of it is sure to be his death. If they, at this meeting of the ministers of the States, commit a breach of faith, they will not be successful by it. He who is false to his word is sure to suffer for it. You need not be troubled about this. If they call men together by [assurances of] their good faith, and go on to accomplish their purpose by violating it, there will be none who will adhere to them. How can they injure us? And moreover, we have [the capital of] Sung to depend on, to guard against any injury. Thus we should be able to resist to the death, and with Sung doing the same, we should be twice as strong as Ts'oo;—what are you afraid of? But it will not come to this. Having called the States together to put a stop to war, if they should commence hostilities to injure us, our advantage would be great. There is no ground for being troubled."

'Ke Woo-tsze sent to say to Shuh-sun, [as if] by the duke's command, that Loo should be considered in the same rank as Choo and Tang. But Ts'e had requested [that] Choo [should be considered as attached to it], and Sung had done the same in regard to Tang, so that neither of these States took part in the covenant. Shuh-sun replied, "Choo and Tang are like the private possessions of other States. We are a State among them. Why should we be put on the same footing as those? Sung and Wei are [only] our peers." And accordingly he cove-nanted. On this account the text [of par. 5] does not give his clan-name, intimating that he had disobeyed orders.

'Tsin and Ts'oo disputed about the precedence [at the covenant]. On the side of Tsin they said, "Tsin certainly is the lord of covenants. No State has has ever taken precedence of it." On the side of Ts'oo they said, "You have allowed that Tsin and Ts'oo are peers. If Tsin always take the precedence, that is a declaration that Ts'oo is weaker than it. And moreover, Tsin and Ts'oo have presided in turns over the covenants of the States for long. How does such presidency belong exclusively to Tsin?" Shuh-hëang said to Chaou-mang, "The States acknowledge Tsin because of the virtue [of its government], and not because it presides over their covenants. Let that virtue be your chief concern, and do not quarrel for the point of precedence. Moreover, at the covenants of the States, it is understood that the smaller States should superintend the instruments of the covenanting. If Ts'00 will act this smaller part for Tsin, is it not proper that it should do so?" Accordingly the precedence was given to Ts'oo, The text, however, mentions Tsin first, because of its good faith (?).

'On Jin-woo, the duke of Sung entertained the great officers of Tsin and Ts'oo at the same time, Chaou-mang being the [chief] guest. When Tsze-muh conversed with him, he was not able to reply to him [suitably], on which he made Shuh-hëang sit by him and maintain the conversation, when Tsze-muh could not reply [suitably]. On Yih-yëw, the duke of Sung and the great officers of the States covenanted outside the Mung gate. Tsze-muh asked Chaoumang of what kind had been the virtue of Fan Woo-tsze (Sze Hwuy), and was answered 'The affairs of his family were all well-regulated; in conversing [with his ruler] about the State, he concealed nothing; his officers of prayers set forth the truth before the Spirits, and used no speeches he could be ashamed of." When Tszemuh returned to Ts'oo, he told this to the king, who said, "This was admirable! He was able to find favour both with Spirits and men. Right was it he should distinguish and aid five rulers of Tsin, and make them the lords of covenants." Tsze-muh also said to the king, "Well-deserved is the presidency of Tsin. With Shuh-hëang to aid its ministers, Ts'oo has no man to match him. We cannot contend with it." Seun Yin of Tsin shortly went to Ts'oo to ratify the covenant.

'The earl of Ch'ing entertained Chaou-mang [returning from Sung] in Chuy-lung. Tsze-chen. Pih-yëw, Tsze-se, Tsze-ch'an, Tsze-t'ae-shuh, and the two Tsze-shih, were all in attendance on the earl. Chaou-mang said to them, "You seven gentlemen are all here with the earl, a [great] distinction and favour to me. Let me ask you all to sing, which will complete your ruler's beneficence, and likewise will show me your several minds. Tsze-chen then sang the Ts'aou ch'ung (She, I. ii. ode III.), and Chaoumang said, "Good for a lord of the people, but I am not sufficient to answer to it." Pih-yew sang the Shun che pun pun (She, I. iv. ode V.), and Chaou-mang said, "Words of the couch should not go across the threshold; how much less should they be heard in the open country! This is what I cannot listen to." The-se sang the 4th stanza of the Shoo meaou (She, II. iii. ode III.), and Chaou-mang said, "There is my ruler; how can I [accept this]?" Taze-ch'an sang the Sih sang (She, II. viii. ode IV.); and Chaou-mang said, "Allow me to accept the last stanza of that ode." Tsze-t'ae-shuh sang the Yay yew man ts'aou (She, I. vii. ode XX.); and Chaou-mang said, "This is your kindness." Yin Twan (The 1st Tsze-shih) sang the Sih tsuh (She, I. x. ode I.); and Chaou-mang said, "Good! a lord who preserves his family! I have hope [of being such]." Kung-sun Twan (the 2d Tsze-shih) sang the Sang hoo (She, II. vii. ode I.); and Chaou-mang said, 'While the cup passes round, they show no pride;

Where should blessing and revenue go but to them?'

If one can verify those words, though he should wish to decline blessing and revenue, would it be possible for him to do so?"

When the entertainment was ended, Wanteze (Chaou-mang) said to Shuh-hëang, 'Pihyew will yet be put to death. We use poetry to express what is in our minds. He was calumniating his ruler in his mind; and though the earl would resent [the lines which indicated] that, he used them in honour of their guest. Can he continue long? He will be fortunate if exile precede his death." Shuh-heang said, The saying "Yes; and he is extravagant. about not lasting five harvests is applicable to him." Wan-tsze added, "The rest of them will all continue for several generations; and the family of Tsze-chen will be the last to perish. Though his rank be high, he has not forgotten to be humble. Yin [Iwan] is next to him. He can enjoy himself without wild indulgence. Using [his love of] pleasure to give rest to the people, and not exacting services from them to an excessive degree, is it not right he should long perpetuate his family?"

'[Heang Seuh], Sung's master of the Left, asked that he might be rewarded, saying, "Please grant me some towns for arresting the occasion of death." The duke gave him sixty towns, and he showed the grant to Tsze-han, who said to him, "It is by their arms that Tsin and Ts'oo keep the small States in awe. Standing in awe, the high and low in them are loving and harmonious; and through this love and harmony they can keep their States in quiet, and thereby serve the great States. In this is the way of preservation. If they were not kept in awe, they would become haughty. That haughtiness would produce disorder; that disorder would lead to their extinction. This is the way of ruin. Heaven has produced the five elements which supply men's requirements, and the people use them all. Not one of them can be dispensed with; -- who can do away with the instruments of war? They have been long in requisition. It is by them that the lawless are kept in awe, and accomplished virtue is displayed. Sages have risen to their eminence by means of them; and men of confusion have been removed. The courses which lead to decline or to growth, to preservation or to ruin, of blindness on the one hand, of intelligence on the other, are all to be traced to these instruments; and you have been seeking to do away with them:-is not your scheme a delusion? No offence can be greater than to lead the States astray by such a delusion. You have escaped without a great punishment, and yet you have sought for reward;—with an extreme insatiable-ness." With this be cut [to pieces the document], and cast it away. The master of the Left on this declined the towns, [in consequence of which] members of his family wished to attack the minister of Works (Tsze-hān]. Seuh, however, said to them, "I was on the way to ruin, when he preserved me. I could not have received a greater service;—and are you to attack him?"

'The superior man will say, "May we not consider [the lines (She, I. vii. ode VI. 2)],

"That officer

In the country ever holds to the right,"

as applicable to Yoh He (Tsze-han)? and [those other lines, (She, IV. i. [i.] ode II.)],

"How shall he show his kindness? We will receive [his favour],' as applicable to Hëang Sëuh!"?

I have thrown the Chuen on these two paragraphs together, because they relate to the same transaction, the details of which extended over several months, and because we cannot reconcile the latter par. and the narrative under it, without having recourse to the narrative under the second.

From the Chuen under par. 2, we learn that the representatives of 14 States (Including Sung). came to the capital of that State, as if to be present at the meeting; but the text mentions only 9 of them as taking part in it (Not including Sung); but we learn also from it that the States of Ts'e and Ts'in were exempted from it because of its peculiar nature and their own greatness. Then from the narrative under par. 5, we learn that the States of Choo and Tang were exempted because of their weakness, and through Ts'e and Sung taking the opportunity to have them publicly declared as being respectively under their jurisdiction. Ts'00 was willing, no doubt, to accede to the application of Ts'e and Sung, because the power of Tsin was thereby weakened.

With regard to the meeting and covenants themselves, they mark a revolution (大變) in the kingdom. Heretofore, for more than a hundred years, one State had struggled to maintain a presidency over the others;—avowedly in the interest of the Chow king. Tre first exercised it, and then Tsin. Nearly all the time Ts'oo had disputed their right and power; and now Tsin was obliged to agree to a presidency divided between it and Ts'00, while both of them acknowledged their inability to control the great States of Ts'in and Ts'e. Evidently, the scheme of a presidential State had become an impracticability. A process of disorganization must go on, till some one Power should become supreme. An invigoration of Chow was out of the question; and whether Tsia, Ts'oo, Ts'in or Ts'e was to found the dynasty of the future, the future only could show.

Again, as the power of the Chow king had waned before the growth of the princes of the great States, the power of those princes was waning in the same way before the growing influence of their ministers and great officers. It might be expected, as actually occurred, that the great States would nearly all be broken up, or the Houses which now ruled them give place to others.

As to Hëang Seuh, with whom the scheme of a general pacification to be secured by this covenant occurred, he appears to have been a restless dreamer, vain and selfish withal. The scheme itself was, as another officer of Sung pronounced it, a delusion. The time had not come then in China to dispense with the arbitrament of arms, as, alas! it has not yet come in China, or anywhere else in the world.

Par. 8. The Chuen says:— Ning He of Wei assumed to himself the whole administration of the government, and the duke was vexed about it. Kung-sun Mëen-yu asked leave to put He to death, but the duke said, "But for Ning-tsze, I should not have got to my present position, and I gave him my word. The issue [of any attempt], moreover, cannot be known, and I should only make a bad name [for myself]. Stop." The other replied, "I will kill him. Your lordship need know nothing about it." He then consulted with Kung-sun Woo-te and Kung-sun Shin, and made them attack the Ning. They were unsuccessful, and both died. The duke said, "Shin was guilty of no crime; and [now] both he and his father have died through me." In summer, Meen-yu again altacked the Ning, when he killed Ning He, and Kuh, the administrator of the Right, and exposed their bodies in the court. [At that time], Shih Goh was about to go to take part in the covenant at Sung. He had received his commission, and was coming out of the court. threw a garment over [He's] body, pillowed it on his thigh and wept. It occurred to him. that he would put it in a coffin, and then flee into exile, but he was afraid he should not escape. He said also to himself that he had received [the State's] commission, and so went on his way.'

Par. 4 For Kung and Kuh have 4. Chues was the Tsze-seen of the narrative under The Chuen says:—Tszen-seen said, "He who drove us out (Sun Lin-foo) has [merely] left the State, and he who received us back (Ning He) is dead. Without the clear [and right application of rewards and punishments, how is it possible to deter [from evil] and to encourage [to good]? When the ruler has broken his faith, and there is no law in the State, is it not difficult [to carry on the government]? And it was really I who brought this about." With this he left the State to flee to Tsin. The duke sent to stop him, but in vain. When he had got to the Ho, a second messenger came to stop him, whom he detained till be had made an oath [that he would not return]. He then took up his residence in Muh-mun, where he would never sit with his face towards Wei. The commandant of that city advised him to take office [in Tsin], but he refused, saying, "If I took office, and failed in the business of it, I should be an offender; if I succeeded, I should [seem to] show that it was for the sake of office that I had left Wei:—to whom could I make my case clear? I must not stand in the court of any prince." And all his life he did not take office. The duke wore mourning for him all his life.

'The duke offered Mëen-yu 60 towns, but he refused them, saying, "It is only a high minister who has the complete number of 100 towns. If I would take these 60, I should in my low position be having the revenue of a higher one. The thing would be disorderly and irregular. I dare not hear of it. And moreover it was Ning-tsze's many towns which caused his death. I am afraid lest death should quickly overtake me." The duke pressed them upon him, when he accepted the half, and became the Juniortutor. The duke wished to make him minister, but he declined the office, saying, "T'ae-shuh E does not waver in his fidelity, and can help you im [all] great affairs. Give the appointment to him." Wan-taze accordingly was made minister.'

Par. 5. [The Chuen appends here three narratives;—lst. Before Ts'uy Ch'oo of Ts'e became a widower, he had two sons, Ching and Këang. After his marriage with Tung-kwoh Këang (See on xxv. 2), she bore to him Ming. and also brought into his family T'ang Wookëw, her son by her former husband, who, with Tung-kwoh Yen, took the management of Ts'uy's family. In consequence of some disease which he had, Ts'uy Ch'ing was degraded from his position [as the eldest son], and Ming appointed in his place, after which he begged that he might be put in possession till his old age of Te'uy. Te'uy-tsze granted him that city, but Yen and Woo-këw would not give it to him, saying, "Ts'uy is the ancestral city, and must be in the hands of the lord of the ancestral temple." Ch'ing and Këang were enraged, and, having resolved to kill them, they told King Fung, saying, "You know all about our father. He follows [now] only Woo-kew and Yen. None of our uncles or cousins of the clan can get him to listen to a word. The state of things, we are greatly afraid, will be injurious to him, and we presume to tell you of it." King told them to retire for a time, while he considered the matter, which he laid before Loo-p'oo P'ëeh. P'ëeh said, "He showed himself the enemy of his ruler, and Heaven perhaps is now going to abandon him; but why should you feel any distress at disorder in his House? The thinner Tsuy is, the thicker grows King."

When the sons of Ts'uy came to K'ing Fung another day, he said to them, "If it be profitable for your father, you can remove the two men; and if you get into difficulties, I will assist you." In the 9th month, on Kang-shin, Ts'uy Ch'ing and Ta'uy Këang killed Tung Kwoh Yen and T'ang Woo-këw, while they were at the court of Ts'uy-taze. In a rage he issued from the gate, but his people were all scattered. He sought for men to get his carriage in readiness, but it could not be done. [At last] he got a groom to yoke a carriage for him, and with a cunuch to drive him, he went forth, saying to himself, "It will be fortunate for the Ts'uy family, if only I perish." He then drove to see King Fung, who said, "The Ts'uy and the King are one. Who dared to act thus? Allow me to punish them for you." He then sent Loo-p'oo P'ëeh with a body of men-at-arms to attack the palace of Ts'uy. It was held, however, by men behind the parapets, who made a successful resistance, till the people were sent to assist the assaulters. P'eeh then extinguished the House of Ts'uy, killed Ching and Köang, and carried off all in the house, the wife of Ts'uy-tsze having strangled herself. This done, he returned with a report to that officer, and then drove him back to his palace, where he found that he had nothing to come to, and strangled himself. Ts'uy Ming laid him at night in his fathers' grave;—and on Sin-sze he fled himself to Loo. K'ing Fung took the administration of the State.'

2d. 'Wei P'e of Ts'oo went to Tsin to confirm the covenant, when the marquis entertained him. As he was leaving the feast, he sang the Ke tsuy (She, III. ii. ode III.). Shuh-hëang said, "Right is it that this Wei should perpetuate his family in Ts'oo. Charged with his ruler's commission, he is not unmindful to show his intelligence. Tsze-tang will yet have the government of his State. Active and intelligent in serving his ruler, and thereby able to nourish the people, to whom should the government go but to him?"'

8rd. 'When Shin Seen-yu came a fugitive to Loo, in consequence of the troubles occasioned by Ts'uy Ch'oo (See the Chuen on xxv. 2), he hired a house for himself and servants in the suburbs, and there mourned for duke Chwang. This winter, an officer from Ts'oo came to invite him to that State. He went there accordingly, and became director of the Left.']

Par. 6. This eclipse took place on the 7th Oct. B.C. 545, and was visible in Loo in the morning; but that was the 12th cycle day of the text. The Chuen is correct, therefore, in assigning the eclipse to the 11th month; but Tso-she is in error when he goes on to say, "This was really the 9th month, through the error of the officers of the calendar. They had now omitted two intercalations." For the grounds which have been attempted to be made out for this remark, see on the 1st par. of next year.

In summer, Shih Goh of Wei fled from that State to 2 Tsin.

- 3 The viscount of Choo came to the court of Loo.
- 4 In autumn, there was a grand sacrifice for rain.

5 Chung-sun Këeh went to Tsin.

- 6 In winter K'ing Fung of Ts'e came a fugitive to Loo.
- 7 In the eleventh month, the duke went to Ts'oo.
- In the twelfth month, the king [by] Heaven's [grace] died.
- 9 On Yih-we, Ch'aou, viscount of Ts'oo, died.

Par. 1. This would seem to be an extraordinary phænomenon, according to the general rule for such entries in the text; but if intercalations had been omitted, so that the calendar was at least two months in advance of the proper time, then the first month of the Chow year began at this time really in our October or perhaps September, when the absence of ice was quite natural. Hence to bring things right, and make the phænomenon extraordinary and ominous, Too Yu introduces in his scheme of the calendar two intercalary months, one immediately after the other at the end of the previous year! The Chuen here says:— There being no ice this spring. Taze Shin said, "This year there will be famine, it is to be feared, in Sung and Ching. The year [-star] (Jupiter) [ought to be in Sing-ke (Sagittarius-Capricorn), and it has licentiously advanced into Hëuen-hëaou (Capricorn-Aquarius). Hence this ominous character of the season, the yin not being able to overcome the yong. The Snake is mounted on the Dragon, which contains the stars of Sung and Ching. Those States will have famine. The middle star in Hönen-hösou is Heu. But Hesou denotes consumption and waste. The land empty, and the people with their resources consumed:—what can this mean but famine?"'

The Chuen appends here:—'In summer, the marquises of Twe. Chin, and Tsiae, the earls of north Yen and Ke, the viscounts of Hoo and Shin, and the northern Teih, went to appear at the court of Tsin,-in accordance with the covenant of Sung. When the marquis of Tse was about to go, King Fung said, "We took no part in the covenant. What have you to do with Tsin?" Ch'in Wan-taze said to him, "Business first and then gifts, is the rule. A small State, in serving a great one, before it has discharged the business [which is required], should first comply with its request [to go to it], in accordance with its wishes;—this [also] is the rule. Although we took no part in the covenant, dare we revolt from Tsin? Let us not forget the covenant of Ch'ung-k'ëw (xxv. 5). Do you advise the marquis to go."'

Par. 2. See the narrative under par. 3 of last year for the conduct of Shih Goh after the death of Ning He.

The Chuen here says:—'The people of Wei were punishing the partizans of the Ning, and Shih Goh fled in consequence to Tsin. In Wei they appointed his nephew, Foo, to take charge of the sacrifices of the Shih family;—which was according to rule.'

Par. 3. Tso-she says that this appearance of duke Taou of Choo at the court of Loo was 'the usual affair;' meaning that it was not in consequence of the covenant of Sung, but a discharge of the usual duty which Choo owed to that State.

Par. 4. "This," says Tso-she, "was because of drought."

The Chuen appends here:—' When the marquis of Ts'ae was returning from Tsin (See the narrative after par. 1), he entered the capital of Ching, where the earl entertained him, and he behaved disrespectfully. Taze-ch'an said, "The marquis of Ta'ae will not escape an evil death. When he was passing this (On his way to Tsin), our ruler sent Tsze-chen to go and compliment him outside the east gate, and then he carried himself arrogantly. I thought that he might still change his way; but now, when being feasted thus on his return, he is so remise, such, it appears, is his nature. Ruler over a small State, and in his service of a great one thus so remiss and arrogant as to show that such is his nature, shall he die a natural death? If he do not escape an evil end, it will be sure to come from his son. He has played the ruler in a lustful and unfatherly way (He had debauched his son's wife), and I have heard that such persons always meet with calamity at the hand of their sons.'

Par. 5. Tso-she says:—'Mang Heaou-pih [now] went to Tsin to inform that court, that, in accordance with the covenant of Sung, [the duke] was going to Ts'oo.'

[We have here two narratives:—lst "When the marquis of Ts'ae went to Tsin, the carl of Chring sent Yew Keih to Ts'oo. When he had got to the Han, the people of Ts'oo sent him back, saying, "According to the covenant of Sung, your ruler ought to come in person; but here are you come. Our ruler says to you, 'Please return for the present. I will send a courier with all speed to ask Tsin, and then lay the matter before you.' " Tsze-t'ae-shuh (Yëw Keih) replied, "In the covenant of Sung, your lordship's commands were for the benefit of the small States, and you also ordered us to seek the repose and stability of our altars, and the protection and comfort of our people, and thus by the observance of all proper rules we might enjoy the blessing of Heaven. These were your lordship's orders, and in accordance with them was the hope of our small State. On this account my ruler sent me with skins and silks, in consideration of the difficulties of the year (A famine), on a [merely] friendly visit to your ministers. But now I have their commands, saying, 'What have you to do with governmental matters? You must send your ruler. Let him leave his charge in his own State, travel over the hills and cross the streams, encounter the hoar-frust and the dew' This [only] will satisfy your lordship. The hope of our small State is in you, and we dare not but listen to your commands,

In the 12th month, on Yih-hae, the 1st day of the moon, the people of Ts'e removed duke Chwang from his grave, and put him in proper graveclothes into a new coffin in the grand chamber, and in the [old] coffin they exposed Ts'uy Chioo's body in the market place. The people could all still recognize it, and said, "This is

Parr. 7, 9. The Chuen says:—'In consequence of the covenant of Sung, the duke, and the duke of Sung, the marquis of Chin, the earl of Ching, and the baron of Heu, went to Ts'oo. When the duke passed by [the capital of ] Ching, the earl was not in it, [but had already gone]. Pihyew, however, came out on a complimentary visit to the banks of the Hwang, and was not respectful. Muh-shuh said, "If Pih-yëw be not dealt with as an offender by Ching, he will do that State great injury. Respectfulness is an essential thing for the people. If a man cast it away, how shall he keep [the family] he has received from his ancestors? It the people of Ching do not punish him, they are sure to suffer through him. The duckweed and pondweed, gathered by the banks of shallows and marshes and about standing pools, placed in the ancestral temple, and superintended by the young and elegant ladies, [are accepted] because of the reverence [in the thing] (See the She, I. ii. ode IV.). When the duke had reached the Han, king K'ang of Ts'oo was dead, and he wished to return. Shuh-chung Ch'aou-pih said, "We are going for the sake of the State of Ts'oo, and I not on account of one man." Tsze-fuli Hwuypili said, "The superior man is solicitous about what is remote; smaller men act from the impression of what is near. Who has leisure to attend to the future, without considering the [present] hunger and cold? Let us return for the present." Shuh-sun Muh-tsze said, "Shuhchung is to be entirely followed. Tsze-fuh's opinion is that of one commencing his learning." Yung Ching-pih [also] said, "He who considers the remote is the faithful counsellor." On this the duke went on.

'Hëang-seuh said, "[Our journey was] on account of the one man, and not on account of Ts'ov. Who can think of Ts'oo, and not think of the [present] hunger and cold? Let us return for the present and rest our people. When they have settled the question of a new ruler, we can make the necessary preparations." On this the duke of Sung returned.'

Par. 8. The king really died on Kwei-sze, 21 days before Këalı-yin;—acc. to the 1st narrative after p. 6. Tso-she says:—'An officer from the court came to announce the king's death. Being asked the day of it, he said it was Këahyin; and so it was recorded, to show the fault [of the late announcement] (?).'

If Këah-yin was in the 12th month, Yih-we when the viscount of Ts'00 died, separated from Këah-yin by 41 days could not be in it. This is held to prove that there was an intercalary month at the end of this year, to which Yih-we belonged.

There is appended here:—'K'euh Këen of Ts'oo died, and Chaou Wan-tsze wore mourning for him according to the rule for those who had covenanted together;—which was right.'] though they are not in the engagements of the covenant, and will reflect on your lordship's virtue, and be disadvantageous to your minis-This our small State was afraid of; but since it is not so, what labour is there from which we will shrink?" Tsze-t'ae-shuh then returned and gave a report of his commission, saying to Tsze-chen, "The viscount of Ts'oo will [soon] die. Instead of cultivating his government and virtue, he is blindly eager to command the States, and so gratify his ambition. If he wished to continue long, would it be possible for him to do so? The thing is contained in the Chow Yih. When the diagram Fah (復, 豐) becomes E (頤, 豐), we have, in reference to it, the words, 'Deceived as to return;—evil,' which we may well apply to the viscount of Ts'oo. Wishing after all to obtain what he desired, and abandoning what was essential to that, there is no place to return to: this is what is taught in those words, 'Deceived as to return.' Is it possible evil should not come? Let our ruler go. He will accompany the [viscount's] funeral, and come back,—thus satisfying the wish of Ts'oo. It will not be ten years before Ts'oo is not able to think about the States, and we shall then seek the repose of our people." Pre Tsaou said, "At this time the king of Chow and the viscount of Ts'oo will The year-star has left its proper both die. place, and is sojourning in its place for next year, to the injury of the tail of nëaou. Both Chow and Ts'oo may well hate this."

2d. 'In the 9th month, Yew Keih of Ching went to Tsin, to inform that court, that the earl was going to the court of Ts'oo in compliance with the covenant of Sung. Tsze-ch'an attended the earl to Ts'oo, and [when they approached the capital of that State], he caused a booth to be erected [for the earl], without rearing any high structure. The servants of the mission said, "Anciently, when our great officers attended their rulers to any other State, they always reared a high structure; and from that time till now the practice has been followed. Is it not improper in you now to make this booth upon the grass?" Tsze-ch'an told them, "When a great State goes to a small one, it rears a high structure. When a small State goes to a great one, it should only construct a booth. I have heard this:—When a great State visits a small one, it should do five good things;—be indulgent to its offences, pardon its errors and failures, relieve its calamities, reward it for its virtuous laws, and teach it where it is deficient. There is thus no pressure on the small State. It cherishes [the great] State's virtue and submits to it, fondly as one gues home. On this account a high structure is reared, to display the merit [of the great State], and to make it known to posterity, that they may not be idle in the cultivation of virtue. When a small State goes to a great one, it has five bad things to do. It must explain its trespasses, beg [forgiveness] for its deficiencies, perform its governmental services, contribute its proper dues, and attend to its seasonal commands. And not [only so]:—it has to double its various offerings, to felicitate [the great State] on its happiness, and show its condolence with it in its misfortunes. Now all these things are the sad fate of a small State. Why should it rear a high structure to display its sad fate?

It is enough for it to do that which tells its posterity not to display their sad fate."]

Par. 6. The Chuen says:—' King Fung of Ts'e was fond of hunting and drinking. He gave over the government to [his son] King Shay, and then removed with his harem and valuables to the house of Loo-p'oo P'ëeh, with whom he drank, while they exchanged wives at the same time. For several days together, [the great officers] would have to go there, as he held his court in it. He gave orders that all the exiles who were held to be traitors should be restored on their application to him; and in this way he brought back Loo-p'oo Kwei, who became minister to Tsze-che (Fung's son Shay), and became such a favourite, that Shay gave him his own daughter to wife. Some of Shay's officers spoke to Kwei about this, saying, "Husband and wife should be of different surnames; how is it that you have not avoided taking a wife descended from the same ancestor as yourself?" He replied, "[Another representative of] that ancestor (Meaning Shay) would not avoid me; how should I alone have avoided the thing? am as if you break off from the whole ode one stanza of it, and sing it. I have taken what I desired to get; how should I have recognized the [common] ancestry?"

'Kwei spoke [to Shay] about Wang Ho, and procured his return, who became a favourite as well as himself. Shay made them keep—one before and the other behind him, carrying spears as if guarding his bed.

'Every day two fowls were provided for the public meal at the palace, [under the superintendence of King Fung]. The cook one day stealthily changed them for ducks, and the servants who knew it took away the flesh, and served [the bones up] with the broth. Tsze-ya and Tsze-we were enraged [at the stinginess and insult]; and when King Fung reported that they were so to Loo-p'oo P'ëeh, the latter said, "They are like beasts;—I will sleep upon their skins." He then made Seih Kwei-foo tell Gan Ping-chung about the matter. Ping-chung said, "My numbers are not sufficient to be employed [on such a service] (Against Tsze-ya and Tsze-we), nor have I wisdom to help in such a plan; but I will not dare to speak a word about it. But there should be a covenant." Tszekëa (Seih Kwei-foo) replied "Your words are enough. What is the use of a covenant?" He then spoke to Pih-kwoh Tsze-keu whose answer was "Every one is able in some way to serve his ruler, but this is not in the range of my ability."

'Ch'in Wan-tsze said to [his son] Hwan-tsze, "The overthrow [of the K'ing] is approaching. What shall we get [out of their property]?" "The hundred carriages of wood that are in the Chwang [street];" was the answer; and the father rejoined, "You can maintain a careful guard over yourself." Loo-p'oo Kwei and Wang Ho consulted the tortoise-shell about attacking the K'ing, and showed Tsze-che the indication which they had got, saying, "A man was consulting the tortoise-shell about attacking his enemy, and we venture to present to you the indication." Tsze-che observed, "He will be successful. I see the blood."

'In winter, in the 10th month, King Fung went to Lae to hunt, Chin Woo-yu being in attendance upon him. On Ping-shin, [Chin's father Wan-taze sent to call him home. He asked leave from Fung to return, saying that his mother was very ill. Fung consulted the tortoise-shell, and showed him the indication, saying, "She is dead." [Woo-yu] took the shell in his hand, and wept. He was then sent back, and when King Tsze heard of it, he said, "The calamity is about to commence;" and then urged Tsze-këa (Fung's designation) to return immediately. "The calamity" said he, "will be sure to happen at the autumnal sacrifice. An immediate return may still prevent it." It was in vain, and Fung manifested no regret or change of purpose, which made Tsze-seih (K'ing Tsze) say, "We must fly. We shall be fortunate if we reach Woo or Yueh." [In the meantime], Ch'in Woo-yu [was on his way back], and whenever he crossed a stream, he scuttled the boat, and destroyed the bridge.

'Loo-p'oo Këang (K'ing Shay's daughter) said to her husband, "You have some business in hand; and if you do not tell me what it is, it will not succeed." Kwei then told her, when she said, "My father is self-willed. If some one do not ask him to stay at home, he will not come out. Let me go and ask him." "Very well,"

'In the 11th month, on Yih-hae, was the autumnal sacrifice in the temple of Tae Kung, under the superintendence of King Shay. Loop'oo Këang went and told him [of what was intended], and begged him to stay at home, but he would not listen to her, saying, "Who will dure [to make an attempt on me]?" and with this he went to the temple. Ma Ying was the personator of the dead, and King Heeh had offered the first cup. L:o-p'oo Kwei and Wang Ho were in attendance with their spears, and the men at arms of the King surrounded the palace. The grooms of the Ch'in and Paou families began to get up a play, and the horses of some of the King got frightened, on which [many of ] the men at arms threw off their buffcoats, and secured them. They then fell drinking, and [were drawn off to] see the players to [the street of] Yu-le, the followers of the Lwan, the Kaou, the Ch'in, and the Paou mixing themselves among them. [At this point], Tsze-we struck one of the leaves of the door with a mallet, when Kwei stabled Tsze-che from behind, and Wang Ho struck him with his spear. The blow cut off his left arm, but still he got hold [with the other] of a pillar of the temple, and shook it so that the rafters quivered. Then he hurled a stand and a vase, killed a man with each of them], and died himself. [The conspirators] then killed K'ing Shing (Hëeh) aud Ma Ying. The duke was frightened, but Paou Kwoh said to him, "We are all acting in your interest." Ch'in Sen-woo took the duke away, when he threw off his robes, and went to the inner palace.

'K'ing Fung, on his way back from Lae, was met by parties who told him of the rising. On Ting-hae he attacked the western gate unsuccessfully, after which he turned to the northern, which he took, and entered, proceeding to attack the inner palace. Unsuccessful there, he withdrew, and arranged his forces in the Yoh [street]. There he challenged his enemics to battle, but they would not meet him. He then came to Loo a fugitive, and presented a chariot to Ke Woo-tsze, so beautiful and polished that men could see themselves in it. When Chen Chwang-shuh saw it, he said, "When the carriage is highly polished, its owner is sure to come to distress. It was right he should come to exile." Shuh-sun Muh-tsze gave Fung an entertainment, at which he scattered the sacrificial thank-offerings about. Muh-tsze was displeased, and made the musicians sing for him the Maou ch'e (a lost ode), but he did not perceive the meaning.

'By-and-by the people of Ts'e sent to reproach [Loo for sheltering him], on which he field to Woo, where Kow-yu gave him [the city of] Choo-fang. There he collected the members of his clan and settled them, becoming richer than he had been before. Tsze-fuh Hwuy-pih said to Shuh-sun, "Heaven would seem we enrich bad men. K'ing Fung is rich again." Muh-tsze replied, "Riches may be called the reward of good men, and the ruin of bad men. Heaven will bring him to ruin. He will be destroyed utterly with all that are his.'

[Appended here, we have two narratives:—
1st. 'On Kwei-sze, the king [by] lieaven's [grace] died. No word was yet sent of the event, and therefore no record was made of it.
This was according to rule.' See below on the last par.

2d. 'In the disorder occasioned by Ts'uytaze, all duke [Chwang's] sons had disappeared. Ts'oo had gone to Loo; Shuh-sun Sëuen to Yen, and Kea to the hill of Kow-tow. Now that King Fung was driven into exile, they were all recalled, the furniture which they required supplied, and their cities restored to them. The duke conferred P'ei-tëen on Gan-tsze, in whose circuit there were 60 towns; but he would not receive it. Tsze-we said to him, "Richet are what men desire; how is it that you alone do not desire them?" He replied, "The towns of the K'ing were enow to excite men's desires, and hence he is now in exile. My cities are not enow to do that; but if I were to receive Peitëen, they would be so, and the day of my exile would not be distant. Abroad, I should not have one town to preside over. My not receiving P'ei-tëen is not because I hate riches, but because I am afraid of losing my riches. Moreover, riches should be like pieces of cloth or silk, which are made up in lengths of a definite measurement, which cannot be altered. When the people have the means of sustentation abundant and conveniences of life, there must be the rectification of virtue (See the Shoo, II. ii.7) to act as a limit or border to them. Let them not become abandoned and insolent, and you have what may be called a protecting border to their advantages. If those go beyond that, ruin will ensue. My not coveting to have more than I have is what is called the protecting limit." The duke gave Pih-kwoh Tso 60 towns, and he received them. He gave [many] to Tsze-ya, but he only accepted a few. He gave the same to Tsze-we, and he accepted them, but afterwards returned some. The duke considered the conduct [of these two] a proof of their fidelity, and showed them favour.

'He liberated Loo-p'oo P'ëeh and [banished him] to the northern borders. He sought for the body of Ts'uy Ch'oo, intending to take the head off, but could not find it. When Shuh-sun Muh-tsze heard of this he said, "They are sure to find it. King Woo had ten capable ministers; and did not Ts'uy Ch'oo have as many servants? Less than ten would not have been XXIX. In his twenty-ninth year, in spring, in the king's first month, the duke was in Ts'oo.

> 2 In summer, in the fifth month, the duke arrived from Ts'oo.

On Kăng-woo, K'an, marquis of Wei, died.

A gate-keeper murdered Yu-chae, viscount of Woo. 4

Chung-sun Këeh joined Sëun Ying of Tsin, Kaou 5 Che of Ts'e, Hwa Ting of Sung, She-shuh E of Wei, Kung-sun Twan of Ching, and officers of Tsiaou, Keu, T'ang, Seeh, and little Choo, in walling [the capital of Ke.

6 The marquis of Tsin sent Sze Yang to Loo on a friendly mission.

The viscount of Ke came and made a covenant. The viscount of Woo sent Chah to Loo on a friendly 8 mission.

9 In autumn, in the ninth month, there was the burial of duke Hëen of Wei.

10 Kaou Che of Ts'e fled from that State to north Yen.

11 In winter, Chung-sun Këeh went to Tsin.

Par. 1. Tso-she says this notice is intended to explain how the duke did not welcome in the new year by repairing to the shrines in the ancestral temple on the first day of it. But there is probably more significance in it. Both duke Seang and duke Ching had been absent from Loo at the time of the new year on visits to Tsin; but the classic contains no par. like this in reference to those years. To be obliged to go to Ts'oo was an indignity to the marquis of Loo; while there, he was obliged to submit to peculiar indignities; and during his absence Ke Woo-tsze had encroached upon his authority in the government of the State, so that he was even afraid to enter his capital on his return. All these things are hidden under the apparently innocent words of the text, in which many have traced the stylus of the sage himself. The Chuen says:—'The people of Ts'oo required the duke to bring grave-clothes with his own hand [for king K'ang]. He was troubled about it, but Muh-shuh said to him, "Have all about the coffin sprinkled, and then take the grave-clothes there. They will be but so much cloth or silk set forth [at court]." Accordingly a sorcerer was employed, who first executed the sprinkling with a branch of a peach tree and some reeds. The people of Ts'oo did not prevent him, but they afterwards regretted it.'

We have here two notices about the burials of the princes of Ts'e and Ts'oo:—

1st. 'In the 2d month, on Kwei-maou, the people of Ts'e buried duke Chwang in the northern suburbs.

2d. 'In summer, in the 4th month, at the burial of king K'ang of Ts'oo, the duke, with the marquis of Chin, the earl of Ching, and the baron of Heu, all accompanied it to the outside of the western gate, and the great officers of the States went to the grave. Këahgaou (See at the end of the 1st year of duke Ch'aon) then took the vscant seat, and king [Kung's] son Wei became chief minister. Tazeyu, the internuncius of Ching, said, "This may be called incongruous. [Wei] will take the [king's] place, and flourish in his room. Beneath the pine and the cypress the grass does not flourish].

Par. 2. The duke arrived from Ts'00, but it was with some hesitancy that he ventured to enter his own State again.

The Chuen says:—"When the duke on his return had got [to the barrier-wall of Ts'00], Ke-Woo-taze had taken Peen, [and appropriated it to himself]. He sent, however, Kung-yay to [meet the duke, and] inquire after his welfare, sending a messenger after him, who overtook him, with a sealed letter [for the duke], in which it was said, "The officer in charge of Peen was intending to revolt. I led my followers to punish him, and have got the place. I venture to inform you of it." Kung-yay discharged his commission and withdrew; and when [the duke] came to his resting place, he learned that Ke Woo-tsze had taken Pëen. "He wished to get it," said the duke, "and pretends that it was revolting. This makes me feel that I am treated very distantly." He then asked Kung-yay whether it would be safe for him to enter [the State]. "The State," replied Kung-yay, "is your lordship's; who will dare to resist you?" On which the duke gave him the cap and robes [of a minister]. That officer firmly declined them, and only received them after he was hard pressed to do so. The duke wished not to enter the State, till Yung Chingpih sang to him the Shih we (She, I. iii. ode XI.), after which he took his way back to the He arrived from Ts'00 in the 5th month, and Kung-yay resigned the city which he held from Ke Woo-tsze, and never afterwards entered his house, saying that he would not be in the employment of such a deceiver of his ruler. If Ke-sun went to see him, he would speak of his business as in former days. If he did not go to see him, he never spoke of the affairs of the family. When he was ill, he assembled his servants, and said to them, "When I am dead, be sure and not put me in my coffin with my ministerial cap and robes. They were not a reward of virtue. And do not let the Ke bury me." '

Par. 3. The Chuen appends here:—'At the burial of king Ling, the highest ministers of Ching being [otherwise] occupied, Taze-chen proposed that Yin Twan should go [to the capital]. Pih-yëw objected on the ground that Twan was too young; but Tsze-chen said, "Is It not better that a young man should go than that no one at all should go? The ode (She, II. i. ode II. 2) says,

'The king's business was not to be slackly performed;

I had no leisure to kneel or to sit.'

East, west, south and north, who dares to dwell at ease? We steadily serve Tsin and 'Is'oo, in order to protect the royal House. The king's business must not be undischarged, but there is no regular rule as to the person." Accordingly, he sent Yin Twan to Chow.']

Par. 4. The Chuen says:—'The people of Woo, in an invasion of Yueh, took a prisoner, whom they made a door-keeper (1.e., after cutting off his feet), and then appointed him to the charge of the [viscount's] boat. The viscount, Yu-chae, was inspecting the boat fon one occasion], when the door-keeper murdered him with a knife."

There is no doubt as to the meaning of but how the murder should be the act of a 'door-keeper' seems to need some explanation. Both Kung-yang and Kuh-lëang say that the person in question was HI, 'mutilated,'and Kuh-lëang further says the mutilation consisted in his being a eunuch ( ). But we need not suppose this. Persons mutilated in their feet were in those times often employed as gatekeepers; and officers were so punished, and then that occupation was given to them. This must be the meaning, I think, of the 以為關 in Teoshe, and we can understand how the man should revenge himself by the murder of the viscount

We have here the following narrative:— 'Tsze-chen of Ching died, and [his son], Tszep'e, succeeded to his place. At this time the State was suffering from famine, and as the wheat crop was not yet ripe, the people were very badly off. Tsze-p'e then, [as if] by his father's command, presented each family with a chung of millet, thereby winning the attachment of the people; and in consequence of this the government of the State regularly continued in the hands of the Han family, its chiefs being the highest minister.

'When Tsze-han, minister of Works in Sung, heard what T'sze-p'e had done, he said, "As we are neighbours to [the State where such] good [is done], our people will expect the same from Sung was also suffering from famine, and he begged duke P'ing to lend [to the people] out of his public stores of grain, and made the great officers all lend in the same way. He himself kept no record of what he lent, [saying that he did it] for the great officers who had none. The consequence was that none in Sung suffered from want. Shuh-hëang heard of it and said, "Many families will perish before the Han of Ching, and the Yoh of Sung. They two are likely to have the chief sway in their States. The people will be attached to them, But in giving, and not considering it an act of virtue, the Yoh has the advantage. His descendants will rise and fall along with Sung."']

Par. 5. For 世权儀, Kung-yang has 世 叔 齊; and both he and Kuli-lëang have 邾人 after 莒人. The Chuen says:-'The mother of duke Ping of Tsin was a daughter of the House of Ke, in consequence of which he took the management of that State. In the 6th month, Che Taou-tsze (Seun Ying) assembled the great officers of the States to fortify its capital. Mang Hëaou-pih (Chung-sun Keeh) was among them; and from Ching Tszet'ae-shuh and Pih-shih (Kung-sun Twan) went. The former of these visited Tise-shuh Wän-tsze (Tae-shuh of Wei), and spoke with him [about the undertaking]. "Very great" said Wan-tsze, "is this walling of Ke." Tsze-t'ae-shuh said, "How is it that Tsin has no thought about the wants of the States that are connected with the house of Chow, and sets itself to protect this branch of Hea? We can well know from it how Tsin has abandoned all us Ke (States of the or Chow surname). But if it bandon them, who will remain attached to it? I have heard that to abandon one's own, and seek to strangers, is a proof of estrangement from virtue. ode (She, II. iv. ode VIII. 12) says,

'They assemble their neighbours, And their kinsfolk are full of their praise.'

As Tsin does not play a neighbour's part, who will praise it?"

'Kaou Tsze-yung (Kaou Che) of Ts'e and the minister of Instruction of Sung (Hwa Ting), visited Che Pih (Sëun Ying), when Joo Ts'e was master of the ceremonies. When the guests were gone, the marshal How (Joo Ts'e) said to Che Pih, "Neither of those gentlemen will escape an evil end. Tsze-yung is self-sufficient, and the minister of Instruction is extravagant. They are both men who will ruin their families." Che Pih said, "[As between them], how will it be?" The reply was, "Self-sufficiency brings its fate on more rapidly. Extravagance comes to ruin along with [the exhaustion of] its means; but other men deal ruin to self-sufficiency. In this case it will [soon] come."

It was certainly ill-advised in the marquis of Tsin to call out the States to an undertaking like the walling of Ke. The partiality displayed in it did much to shake the supremacy which Tsin had maintained so long. Loo, and other States probably as well, were made to restore to Ke lands which they had taken from it.

Par. 6. The Chuen says:—'The visit of Fan Hëen-teze (Sze Yang) was in acknowledgment of the walling of Ke. The duke entertained him, when Chen Chwang-pih held the silks [presented to him], and three pairs of archers displayed their skill. The duke's own officers, however, were not sufficient to supply that number, and it was necessary to get some from one of the clans. That supplied Chen Hëa and Chen Yuh-foo, who formed one pair. Of the duke's officers, Kung-woo Shaou-pih-chung and Yen Chwang-shuh formed a pair, and the other consisted of Tsäng Koo-foo and Tang Shuh.'

Par. 7. The marquis sent the marshal Joo Shuh-how to Loo to manage the matter about the lands of Ke, when we did not restore all [that we had taken]. Taou, the marquis's mother, was indignant, and said that Ts'e (Shuh-how) had taken bribes, and that if their former rulers could know it, they would not approve of his doing so. The marquis told this to Shuh-how, who replied, "The princes of Yu, Kwoh, Tsësou, Hwah, Hoh, Yang, Han, and Wei were Kes (177), and Tsin's greatness is owing to [its absorption of] them. If it had not encroached on the small States, where should it have found territory to take? Since the times of Woo and Heen, we have annexed many of them; and who can call us to account for the encroachments? Ke is a rempant of [the House of] Hea, and has assimilated to the wild tribes of the east. [The princes of ] Loo are the descendants of the duke of Chow, and are in most friendly relations with Tsin; if we should confer all Ke on Loo, we should not be doing anything strange, so that there is nothing to make to do about [in the present matter]. In its relations with Tsin, Loo contributes its dues without fail; its valuable curiosities are always arriving; its princes, ministers, and great officers come, one after another, to our court. Our historiographers do not cease recording; our treasury is not left empty a month. Let such a state of things alone. Why should we make Loo thin in order to fatten Ke? If. moreover, our former rulers could know of the case, would they not be angry with the lady, rather than find occasion to reprove me?"

'Duke Wan of Ke [now] came to Loo, and made a covenant (With reference to the restored lands). The text calls him viscount, in oon-tempt for him (?).'

Par. 8. The Chah introduced here appears in an honourable way in the narrative appended to xiv. 1. The difficulties connected with his present mission will be touched on after the long narrative in the Chuen:—'The Kung-taze Chah of Woo, having come to Lou on a complimentary mission, visited Shuh-sun Muh-tsze, and was pleased with him. He said to him, however, "You will not, I am afraid, die a natural death! You love good men, and yet are not able to select such [for office]. I have heard that it is the object of a superior man, high in office, to select [good men], You are a minister of Loo, and a scion of its House. You are entrusted with & great part of its government, and yet you are not careful in the men you raise to office;—how will you bear the consequences? Calamity is sure to come upon you." He then begged that he might hear the music of Chow; and [the duke] made the musicians sing to him the [odes of the] Chow Nan and the Shaou Nan (She, I. i., ii.) [with all the accompaniments]. "Admirable!" he said; "here was the beginning and foundation [of king Wan's transforming influence], yet still it was not complete. Notwithstanding. there is [the expression of ] earnest endeavour, without any resentment,"

'They sang to him the [odes of] P'ei, Yung, and Wei (She, I. iii. iv. v.) "Admirable!" he said. "How deep [was the influence]! Here are those who sorrow, and yet are not distressed." I hear [and I know]:—it was the virtue of K'ang-shuh and duke Woo, which made these odes what they are,—the odes of Wei."

'They sang to him the [odes of] Wang (She, I. vi.) "Admirable!" he said. "Here is thought without fear, as befitted Chow after its removal to the east!"

'They sang to him the [odes of] Ching (I, vii.). He said, "Admirable! But the minutize in them are excessive, and the people could not endure them. It is this which will make Ching the first to perish."

'They sang to him the [odes of ] Ts'e (I. viii.). He said, "Admirable! How loudly sound these odes of a great State! It was T'ae-kung who made such an object of distinction by the east sea. The destinies of this State are not to be measured."

'They sang to him the [odes of ] Pin (I. xv.). He said, "Admirable! [Their sound] is grand. They are expressive of enjoyment without license,—as befitted the duke of Chow in the east!"

'They sang to him the [odes of] Ts'in (I. xi.). He said, "Here are what we call the sounds of the cultivated States! Ts'in was able to become one of these, and so is great, very great. Was it not because it occupies the old seat of Chow?"

'They sang to him the [odes of] Wei (I. ix.). He said, "Admirable! What harmony! There is grandeur and delicacy, like a dangerous defile yet easily traversed! To this let there be added the aids of virtue, and [Wei] should produce intelligent lords."

'They sang to him the [odes of] T'ang (I. x.). He said, "How expressive of thought and deep [anxiety]! Did not T'ang possess the people that came down from [the rule of the prince of] T'aou and T'ang? But for that how should there have been here an anxiety so far-reaching? But for the remaining influence of his excellent virtue, who could have produced anything like this?"

'They sang to him the [odes of] Ch'in (I. xii.). He said, "A State without [proper] lords!—how can it continue long?" On [the music of] Kwei and Ts'aou (I. xiii. xiv.), he made no re-

'They sang to him the [odes of the] Seaou Ya, (She, II.). He said, "Admirable! Here is thoughtfulness, but no disaffection; resentful feeling, but not the expression of it. Is there not indicated some decay in the virtue of Chow? But still there were the people that had come down from the early kings."

'They sang to him the [odes of the] Ta Ya (She, III.). He said, "How wide! How harmonious and pleasant! Amid all the winding [of the notes], the movement is straight-onward. Is there not here the virtue of king Wan?"

'They sang to him the Sacrificial Odes (She, IV.). He said, "This is perfect! Here are straight-forwardness without rudeness; winding but no bending; nearness without pressure; distance without estrangement; changes without license; repetitions without satiety; disconsolateness without deep sorrow; joy without wild indulgence; the use of resources without their ever failing; wide [virtue] without display; beneficence without waste; appropriation without covetousness; conservation without obstruction; and constant exercise without any dissipation. The five notes are harmonious; the [airs of the] eight winds are equally blended; the parts [of the different instruments] are defined; all is maintained in an orderly manner; the complete virtue [of Chow and Shang and of Loo] appears united here."

'When he saw the dancers with the ivory pipes, and those with the southern flageolets, he said, "Admirable! And still we must regret [that Wan's sway was not universal]."

'When he saw the dancers of the Ta-woo (the dance of king Woo), he said, "Admirable! Chow was now complete! Here is the witness of it!"

'When he saw the dancers of the Shaon-hoo (The dance of Tang of Yin), he said, "The magnanimity of the sage! and still there was something to be ashamed of [in Tang];—his position was hard [even] for a sage."

'When he saw the dancers of the Ta-hea (the music of Yu), he said, "Admirable! Zcalous labour without any assumption of merit!—who but Yu could have accomplished this?"

'When he saw the dancers of the Shaou-sesou (the music of Shun), he said, "Virtue was here complete. This is great. It is like the universal overshadowing of heaven, and the universal sustaining of the earth. The most complete virtue could add nothing to this. Let the exhibition stop. If there be any other music, I shall not presume to ask to hear it."

'Chah had come out to pay complimentary visits, to introduce the new ruler of Woo to the other princes; so he now went on to Ts'e, where he was pleased with Gan P'ing-chung, and said to him, "Quickly return [to the State] your towns and your share in the government. If you are without towns and charge, you will escape the troubles [that are coming]. The government of Ts'e will come into the hands of the right person; but until that happens, its troubles will not cease." Gan-tsze on this resigned his share in the government and his towns through Ch'in Hwan-tsze; and in this way he escaped the troubles of Lwan and Kaou.

'[From Ts'e] Chah went on to Ch'ing, where he visited Tsze-ch'an, as if they had been old acquaintances, presenting him with a sash of the plain, white silk [of Woo], and receiving from him a robe of the grass-cloth [of Ch'ing]. He said to Tsze-ch'an, "The [acting] chief minister of Ch'ing is extravagant, and troubles will [soon] arise. The government is sure to fall to you, and you must be careful to observe the rules of propriety in the conduct of it. If you are not so, the State will go to ruin."

'He went on to Wei, where he was pleased with Keu Yuen, Sze Kow, Sze Ts'ëw, the Kungtsze King, Kung-shuh Fah, and the Kung-tsze Chaou, and said, "There are many superior men in Wei, and it will not yet have any sorrows."

From Wei he went to Tsin, and [on the way] was going to pass the night in Ts'eih. Hearing the sound of bells in it, however, he said, "This is strange! I have heard that he who strive, and does so not virtuously, is sure to be executed. It is because he offended against his ruler that he is here. If to live in apprehension were not enough for him, why should he go on to have music? He lives here like a swallow which has built its nest in a tent. When his ruler is still in his coffin in the ancestral temple, is it a time to have music?" With this he left the place; but when [Sun] Wan-tsze heard his words, he never afterwards listened to a lute all his life.

'Arrived at Tsin, he was pleased with Chaou Wan-tsze, Han Seuen-tsze, and Wei Hëen-tsze, and said, "The [rule of the] State of Tsin will be concentrated in the families of these three." He was pleased [also] with Shuh-hëang; and when he was going away, he said to him, "You must do your best. Your ruler is extravagant, and there are many [deemed to be] good men [about the court]. The great officers are wealthy, and the government will come into their families. You love what is straightforward, and will take thought how to escape yourself from calamities

There is considerable difficulty in connexion with this mission of Ke-chah. Acc. to Tso-she, it was to open communications between the new ruler of Woo and the other princes. But the former ruler of Woo was murdered only in the 5th month; and that same month, Chah must have been despatched;—a thing irreconcileable with the proprieties of China. Too Yu supposes that he was sent away by Yu-chae before his murder, and went on his mission, without hearing of it. But as the news of that event soon reached Loo, it could not but also reach him. This is one of those questions which cannot be satisfactorily solved, and which there is therefore little use in discussing.

In his history of Woo, (Historical Records, Bk. XXXI.) Sze-ma Ts'ëen gives Yu-chae 17 years of rule, and a natural death, so that the Ch'un Ts'ëw and his Work here contradict each other.

Par. 10. This is the first appearance of North Yen in the classic. It was a Ke State, held by the descendants of Shih, the duke of Shaou famous in the Shoo, as earls, or, acc. to Sze-ma Ts'ëen, marquises. Its capital was in Ke ( ), in the pres. dis. of Ta-hing, one of the districts in which Peking is. There is still a Ke-chow in the dep. of Shun-t'ëen.

The Chuen says.—'In autumn, in the 9th month, Kung-sun Ch'ae and Kung-sun Tsaou of Ts'e drove the great officer Kaou Che to north Yen. He went from the capital on Yih-we. The words of the text, that he left the State and fled, are condemnatory of him (?). He was fond of assuming the merit of anything that was done, and acting on his own authority; and hence trouble came upon him.'

Par. 11. This visit was, acc. to Tso-she, in return for that to Loo of Fan Shuh (Sze Yang) in the aummer.

[We have here two narratives: -

Ist. 'In consequence of the troubles about Kaou Che, [his son] Kaou Shoo held [the city of] Loo in revolt. In the 10th mouth, on Kangyin, Leu-k'ëw Ying led a force, and invested Loo, when Shoo said that he would surrender it, if they agreed that the Kaou family should continue to have its representative. The people then appointed to that position Yen the great-grandson of King-chung (The Kaou He in the Chuen in III. ix. 6), out of their esteem for King-chung. In the 11th month, on Yih-maou, Kaou Shoo surrendered Loo, and fled to Tsin, where they walled Mëen, and placed him in it.'

2d. 'Pih-yëw of Ch'ing wished to send Kungsun Hih on a mission to Ts'oo, but he declined to go, saying, 'Ts'oo and Ch'ing are now offended with each other;—to send me there is to kill me." Pih-yëw urged that such missions were hereditary in his family; but he replied, "When it is possible, we go; when there are difficulties, we do not;—what hereditary duty is there in the case?" Pih-yew wanted to force him to go, which enraged him —Tsze-seih—so that he arranged to attack the family of Pih-yew; but the great officers reconciled them. In the 12th month, on Ke-sze, the great officers made a covenant with the Pih-yew, when P'e Chin said, 'How long will this covenant be adhered to? The ode (She, II. v. ode IV. 3) says,

'The superior is continually making covenants,

And the disorder is thereby increased.'

The present is the way to prolong disorder; our misery will not yet cease. It will take 8 years before we are relieved from it." Jenming said, "To whom will the govt. go?" and Chin replied, "It is the rule of Heaven that good men should take the place of bad. To whom should it go but to Taze-ch'an? His elevation will not be out of order, but what is due to his position. His elevation as a good man will be approved by all. Heaven is destroying Pili-yew. and has taken away his reason. When Tisze-se is dead, Tsze-ch'an cannot escape being chief minister. Heaven has long been afflicting Ching. and will make Tsze-ch'an give it rest. Through him the State may still be settled; if it be not so, it will go to ruin."']

In the [duke's] thirtieth year, in spring, in the king's XXX. first month, the viscount of Ts'oo sent Wei P'e to Loo on a mission of friendly inquiries.

In summer, in the fourth month, Pan, heir-son of Ts'ac, 2 murdered his ruler Koo.

In the fifth month, on Këah-woo, there was a fire in 3 [the palace of] Sung, [in which] the eldest daughter of our duke Ching, [who had been married to duke Kung] of Sung, died.

The king [by] Heaven's [grace] put to death his younger brother, Ning-foo.

The king's son Hëa fled to Tsin. 5

6 In autumn, in the seventh month, Shuh Kung went to the burial of Kung Ke of Sung.

Lëang Sëaou of Ching fled from that State to Heu. From Heu he entered [again] into [the capital of] Ch'ing, when the people of Ch'ing put him to death.

In winter, in the tenth month, there was the burial of duke King of Ts'ae.

Officers of Tsin, Ts'e, Sung, Wei, Ch'ing, Ts'aou, Keu, Choo, T'ang, Seeh, Ke, and Little Choo, had a meeting at Shen-yuen, in consequence of the calamity of fire in Sung.

Par. 1. For E Kung-yang has 质. This visit from Ts'00 was to open communications between the court of Loo, and the new ruler of Ts'oo, whose accession is mentioned in the Chuen in the last par. of the 28th year. The Chuen here says:—'Muh-shuh asked the envoy how king [Kung's] son was going on in his government, and was answered, "We little men eat, and receive instructions as to the business to be done by us, always apprehensive lest we do not fulfil our duties aright, and do not escape being charged with some transgression; how can we have anything to do with taking knowledge of the government?" Muh-shuh pressed for a more definite reply, but did not obtain it, on known." Shuh-hëang said, "Have they not which he said to the great officers, "The chief minister of Ts'oo is going to make a coup d'état, and Tsze-tang (Wei P'e) will take a part in it. He is aiding him, and conceals the matter."

There are appended here three narratives:— 1st. 'Tsze-ch'an attended the earl of Ch'ing on a visit to Tsin, when Shuh-hëang asked him how [it was going to go] with the government of Ching. He replied, "Whether I can see it, or cannot see it, the thing will be determined this year. Sze (The Kung-sun Hih, Tsze-seih; see the Chuen at the end of the last year) and Lëang (Pih-yëw) were quarrelling, and I do not know the issue. If the issue were come, and I see it, then [what you ask about] may be been reconciled?" "Pih-yëw," answered Tsze Ch'an, "is extravagant and self-willed; and Tsze-seih likes to be above others. The one of them cannot be below the other. Although they were reconciled, they are still gathering evil against one another; and it will come to a head at no [distant] day."'

2d. 'In the 2d month, on Kwei-we, the dowager-] marchioness Taou of Tsin entertained all the men who had been engaged in the walling of Ke. Belonging to the district of Këang was a childless old man who went and took his place at the feast. Some who were present doubted about his age, and would have him tell it. He said, "A small man like me does not know how to keep a record of the years. Since the year of my birth, which began on a Këahtsze, the 1st day of the moon (The Hëa year, not the Chow), there have been 445 Këah-tsze, and to-day is the 20th day of the cycle now running (20 days—) of 60)." The officers [of the feast] ran to the court to ask [the year of his birth]. The music-master Kwang said, "It was the year when Shuh-chung Hwuy-pih of Loo had a meeting with Këoh Ching-taze in Shing-k-wang (See VI. xi. 2). In that year, the Teih invaded Loo, and Shuh-sun Chwang-shuh defeated them at Hëen, taking their giants K'ëaou-joo, Hwuy, and P'aou, after whom he named his sons. is 73 years ago." The historiographer Chaou said, "The character has ( , anciently, in the seal character (7) is composed of two at the head and sizes in the body of it. If you take the two and place it alongside the sixes of the body (||||||), you get the number of the man's days." Sze Wan-pih said, "Then they are 26,660."

'Chaou-mang asked the commandant of the district, and found that it belonged to his own jurisdiction, on which he called the [old] man, and apologized for the error [that had been committed]. "In my want of ability," said he, "and occupied with [all] the great business of our ruler, through the many subjects of anxiety in connection with the State of Tsin. I have not been able to employ you, [as you ought to be employed], but have made you be occupied with earth and plaster too long. It was my fault, and I apologize for my want of ability." He then made the man an officer, and wanted him to assist in the government. The man declined this on the ground of his age, when he gave him some lands, and made him keeper of the marquis's wardrobe. He also made him one of the [land-] masters for the district of Këang, and degraded the commissary [who had employed him].

'At this time the commissioner of Loo (Chungsun Këeh) was in Tsin, and he told this circumstance to the other great officers on his return. Ke Woo-tsze observed, "Tsin is not to be slighted. With Chaou-mang as [the chief of its] great officers, and Pih-hëa (Sze Wăn-pih) as his assistant; with the historiographer Chaou, and the music-master Kwang, to refer to; and with Shuh-hëang and Joo Ts'e, as tutor and guardian to its ruler, there are many superior men in its court. It is not to be slighted. Our proper course is to exert ourselves to serve

3d. 'In summer, in the 4th month, on Ke-hae, the earl of Ch'ing made a covenant with his great officers. The superior man can know from this that the troubles of Ch'ing were not yet at an end'].

Par. 2. See the remarks of Tsze-ch'an in the narrative appended to xxviii. 4. The Chuen here says:—'The marquis King of Ts'ae had taken a wife for his eldest son from Ts'oo, and debauched her. The son [now] murdered the marquis.' 股 is also found 班.

Par. 3. The Chuen says:—'Some one called out in the grand temple of Sung. "Ah! ah! come out, come out." A bird [also] sang at the altar of l'oh, as if it were saying, "Ah! Ah!" On Këah-woo there occurred a great fire in Sung, when duke [Ch'ing's] eldest daughter who had been married to the ruler of Sung, died;—through her waiting for the instructress of the harem. The superior man may say that Kung Ke acted like a young lady, and not like a woman of years. A girl should wait for the instructress [in such a case]; a wife might act as was right in the case.'

The lady of Loo who died in this fire was the same whose marriage occurred in the 9th year of duke Ching, so that she must now have been not less than 60, and might very well have made her escape from the flames without being exposed to the charge of immodesty. Tso-she's remark on the case may well excite a smile. A superior woman might dispense with the help of the duenna in a case of fire. The critics are wroth with Tso-she for the modified reflection which he makes on the lady, who covered herself, they say, with imperishable glory (P)

Par. 4. For 佞夫 Kung-yang has 年夫. The Chuen says: - Before this, after king [Këen's] son Chen Ke's death. his son Kwoh was going to have an audience of [his brother] king [Ling] and sighed. K'een-k'e, son of the duke of Shen, who was the king's charioteer, was passing through the court, and heard the sigh, with the words, "Ah! this shall be mine;" " he went in, and reported the thing to the king saying, "You must put him to death. He shows no sorrow [for his father's death], and has great ambitions. His looks are fierce, and he lifts his feet high,—his thoughts elsewhere If you do not kill him, he will do hurt." The king replied, "He is a boy; what does his know. ledge extend to?"

When king Ling died, Chen Kwoh wished to raise his brother Ning-foo to the throne, that prince knowing nothing of it; and on Mowtsze he laid siege to Wei, and drove out Ching Kien, who fied to Ping-che. In the 5th month, Yin Yen-to, Lew E, Shen Meeh, Kan Kwo, and Kung Ching, put Ning-foo to death. Kwoh, Hea, and Leaou fied to Tsin. The text says that "The king put his younger brother to death," thereby condensing the king? (1) p'e replied, "He has behaved properly to the dead; how much more will he do so to the living!" With this he went himself and induced him to remain."

'On Jin-yin, Tsze-ch'an entered the capital, and, on Kwei-maou, Tsze-shih (Yin Twan); and both accepted a covenant with Tsze-seil. On Yih-sze, the earl and the great officers made a covenant in the grand temple, and they bound [also] the people of the State, outside the gate Szeche-lëang. When Pih-yëw heard that they had made a covenant in Ch'ing with reference to himself, he was enraged; and when he heard that Tszc-p'e's men-at-arms had not been present at the attack on him, he was glad, and said, "Tszep'e is for me." On Kwei-ch'ow, early in the morning, he entered the city by the drain at the Moo gate; by means of Keeli, the master of the horse, procured arms from the repository of Seang; and proceded to attack the old north gate. Sze Tae led the people to attack him; and both parties called out for Tsze-ch'an. "You are both," said Tsze-ch'an, "my brethren, and since things have come to this pass, I will follow him whom Heaven favours." l'ih-yew then died in the Sheep-market. Tsze-ch'an covered him with a shroud, pillowed his body on his thigh, and wept over it. He then had it dressed and put into a coffin, which was deposited in the house of an officer of Pih-yew, who lived near to the market, burying it afterwards in Tow-shing.

'The head of the Sze family wanted to attack Tsze-ch'an, but Tsze-p'e was angry with him, and said, "Propriety is the bulwark of a State. No misfortune could be greater than to kill the observer of it." On this the other desisted from his purpose.

'At this time Yew Keih, who had been on a mission to Tsin, was returning; but when he heard of the troubles, he did not enter the capital. Entrusting to his assistant-commissioner the report of his mission, in the 8th month, on Këah-tsze, he fled to Tsin. Sze Tae pursued him as far as Swan-tsaou, and there Keih made a covenant with him,—Tsze-shang,—dropping two batons of jade into the Ho, in attestation of his sincerity. He then sent Kung-sun Heih into the city to make a covenant with the great officers, after which, on Ke-sze, he returned himself, and took his former position.

'The text simply says that "The people of Ching put to death L\u00e9ang S\u00e9aou," not designating him a great officer of the State, because he entered it from abroad.

'After the death of Taze-këaou (Kung-sun Ch'ae; in the 19th year) when he was about to be buried, Kung-sun Hwuy and P'e Tsaou came together early in the morning to be present. As they passed the gate of Pih-yew's house, there were some weeds growing on the top of it; and Tsze-yu (Kung-sun Hwuy) said, "Are those weeds still there?" At this time the yearstar was in Hëang-low; and when that reached the meridian, it was morning. P'e Tsaou pointed to that constellation, and said, "The year-star may still complete a revolution, but it will not arrive at this point where it now is. When Pili-yëw died, the year-star was in the mouth of Tseu-tsze; and the year after, it again reached Hëang-low.

'Puh Chen had followed Pih-yëw, and died along with him. Yu Këeh left the State and fled to Tsin, where he became commandant of Jin. At the meeting of Ke-tsih, Yoh Ching of Ching had fled to Tsin, and thence gone to Tsin. Yu Këeh sought his help, and they were friendly. He served Chaou Wăn-tsze, and spoke with him about invading Ching; but that could not be done, in consequence of the covenant of Sung. Tsze-p'e made Kung-sun Ts'oo master of the horse.'

Par. 8. The Chuen appends here:—'The Kung-tsze Wei of Ts'oo put to death the grandmarshal Wei Yen, and took to himself all his property. Shin Woo-yu said, "The king's son (Wei) is sure not to escape an evil death. Good men are the reliance of the State. As chief minister of the State, he ought to promote and support the good, but he oppresses them,—to the calamity of the State. The marshal moreover stands in as close proximity to the chief minister as his own side, and is the four limbs of the king. [Thus the king's son] has destroyed the reliance of the people, removed his own side, and injured the king's limbs:—there could be nothing worse or more inauspicious than this. How is it possible he should escape an evil death?" ']

Par. 9. The Chuen says:—'In consequence of the fire in Sung, the great officers of the States assembled to consult about making contributions for the benefit of that State. In winter, Shuh-sun P'aou joined Chaou Woo of Tsin, Kung-sun Ch'ae of Ts'e, Hëang Seuh of Sung, Pih-kung T'o of Wei, Han Hoo of Ch'ing, and a great officer of Little Choo, in a meeting at Shen-yuen; but the issue was that no contributions were made to Sung. On this account the names of the parties who met are not given.

The superior man will say that good faith is a thing about which men should be most careful. The ministers who met at Shen-yuen are not recorded because they did not keep good faith, and their rank and names were all thrown on one side;—such is the declaration of the evil of the want of faith. The ode (She, III. i. ode I. 1) says,

"King Wan ascends and descends In the presence of God."

There is the declaration of [the value of] good faith. Another ode (One of those which are lost) says,

"Be wisely careful as to your conduct; Let nothing be done in hypocrisy."

That is spoken of the want of good faith. The words of the text that such and such men met at Shen-yuen, and that it was on account of the calamity of Sung, is condemnatory of them [all]. The great officer of Loo is not mentioned,—to conceal [the shame of that State] (?).

[There is here a narrative about Tsze-ch'an in the government of Ch'ing;—'Tsze-p'e of Ch'ing wished to resign the government of that State to Tsze-ch'an, who declined it, saying, "The State is small, and is near to [a great one]; the clans are great, and many [members of them] are favourites [with our ruler]. The government cannot be efficiently conducted." Tsze-p'e replied, "I will lead them all to listen [to your orders], and who will dare to come into collision with you? With your ability presiding over its administration, the State will not be small. Though it be small, you can with it serve the great State, and the State will enjoy ease." On this Tsze-ch'an undertook the government. Wishing to employ the services of Pih-shih (Kung-sun Twan), he conferred on him a grant of towns. Tsze-t'ae-shuh said, "The State is the State of us all; why do you make such a grant to him alone?" Tsze-ch'an replied, "It is hard for a man not to desire such things; and when a man gets what he desires, he is excited to attend to his business, and labours to compass its success. I cannot compass that; it must be done by him. And why should you grudge the towns? Where will they go?" "But what will the neighbouring States think?" urged Tsze-t'ae-shuh. "When we do not oppose one another," was the reply, "but act in harmony, what will they have to blame? It is said in one of our own Books, 'In order to giving rest and settlement to the State, let the great families have precedence.' Let me now for the present content them, and wait for that After this Pih-shih became afraid, and returned the towns; but in the end, [Tszech'an] gave them to him. And now that Pihyew was dead, he sent the grand historiographer to Pih-shih with the commission of a minister. It was declined, and the historiographer withdrew, when Pih-shih requested that the offer might be repeated. On its being so, he again declined it; and this he did three times, when at last he accepted the tablet, and went to the court to give thanks for it. All this made Tsze-ch'an dislike the man, but he made him take the position next to himself.

'Tsze-ch'an made the central cities and border lands of the State be exactly defined, and enjoined on the high and inferior officers to wear [only] their distinctive robes. The fields were all marked out by their banks and ditches. The houses and tsing were divided into fives, responsible for one another. The great officers, who were faithful and temperate, were advanced to higher dignities, while the extravagant were punished and taken off. Fung Këuen, in propect of a sacrifice, asked leave to go a-hunting, but Tsze-ch'an refused it, saying, "It is only the ruler who uses venison. The officers use in sacrifice only the domestic animals." chang was angry, withdrew, and got his servants ready, intending to attack Tsze-ch'an, who thought of flying to Tsin. Tsze-p'e, however, stopped him, and drove out Fung Këuen, who fled to Tsin. Tsze-ch'an begged his lands and villages from the duke, got Këuen recalled in three years, and then restored them all to him, with the income which had accrued from them.

'When the government had been in Tracch'an's hands one year, all men sang of him,

"We must take our clothes and caps, and hide them all away;

We must count our fields by fives, and own a mutual sway.

We'll gladly join with him who this Tszech'an will slay."

But in three years the song was,

"'Tis Tsze-ch'an who our children trains; Our fields to Tsze-ch'an owe their gains. Did Tsze-ch'an die, who'd take the reins?"'] Thirty-first year.

- XXXI. In the [duke's] thirty-first year, it was spring, the king's first month.
  - In summer, in the sixth month, on Sin-sze, the duke 2 died in the Ts'oo palace.
  - In autumn, in the ninth month, on Kwei-sze, the [duke's] son Yay died.
  - On Ke-hae, Chung-sun Këeh died. 4
  - In winter, in the tenth month, the viscount of Tang came to be present at the [duke's] interment.
  - On Kwei-yëw, we buried our ruler, duke Sëang.
  - In the eleventh month, the people of Keu murdered their ruler, Meih-chow.

Par. 1. [We find here in the Chuen the two following narratives:—

1st. 'This spring, in the 1st month, when Muh-shuh returned from the meeting [at Shenyuen], he visited Mang Heaou-pih, and said to him, -Chaou-mang will [soon] die. His language was irrelevant, not becoming in a lord of the people. And moreover, though his years are not yet 50, he keeps repeating the same thing like a man of 80 or 90:—he cannot endure long. If he die, the government, I apprehend, will fall into the hands of Han-tsze. You had better speak to Ke-sun, so that he may establish a good understanding [with Han-tsze], who is a superior man. The ruler of Tsin will lose his [control of the] government. If we do not establish such an understanding, so that [Han-tsze] may be prepared to act in behalf of Loo, then when the government [of Tsin] comes to be with the great officers, and Han-tsze turns out to be weak, we shall find those officers very covetous, and their demands upon us will be insatiable. We shall find [also] that neither Ts'e nor Ts'oo is worth our adhering to it, and Loo will be in a perilous case." Hëaou-pih observed, "Man's life is not long; who can keep from that irrelevancy? The morning may not be followed by the evening; of what use would it be to establish that good understanding?" Muh-shuh went out from the interview, and aid to a friend, "Mang-sun will [soon] die. I fold him of the irrelevancy of Chaou-mang, and his own language was still more irrelevant." He then spoke [himself] to Ke-sun about the affairs of Tsin, but [that minister] did not follow [his 早景是大台大品的 田田鄉 counsel].

'When Chaou Wan-tsze died, the ducal House of Tsin was reduced to a low State. government was ruled by the ambitious families. Han Seuen-taze was chief minister, but could not deal with the cases of the States. Loo was unable to endure the requirements of Tsin, and slanderous charges against it multiplied, till [at last] there came the meeting of Ping-kiew (See below in the 13th year of duke Ch'aou).

2d. 'Teze-we of Ts'e hated Lew-k'ew Ying; and, wishing to put him to death, he made him bean a force, and attack Yang-chow. We went to ask the reason of such an expedition; and in summer, in the 5th month, Tsze-we put Lewkew Ying to death, to satisfy our army. Kung. low Sha, Sing Tsaou, K'ung Hwuy, and Këa Yin, fled from Tsre to Ken. All the sons of the previous dukes were driven out.']

Par. 2. Duke Seang was thus still a young man when he died, being only in his 35th year. The history of his rule much belies his name of Seang, for the conduct of affairs during it was the reverse of successful.

On his visit to Ts'oo, the duke had admired its palaces, and erected one on his return after their pattern, giving to it the name of that State.

The Chuen says:—'When the duke built the Ts'oo palace, Muh-shuh said, "We read in the Great Declaration (Shoo, V. i. Pt. i. 11), 'What a man desires, Heaven is sure to gratify him in.' Our ruler's desire is for Ts'oo, and therefore he has made this palace. If he do not again go to Ts'oo, he is sure to die here. [Accordingly], in the Ts'oo palace he did die, on Sin-sze, in the 6th month.

'Shuh-chung Tae (The Shuh-chung Ch'aou-pih of the Chuen on vii. 4) stole [on this occasion] the large peih, giving it [first] to his charioteer, who put it in his breast, and afterwards getting it from him again. In consequence of this he was deemed an offender [by the people].'

Par. 8. Comp. the 子般 Zin III. xxxii. But the death of duke Chwang's son was a death of violence, and should have been so described, while the death of Yay in the text was from disease.

The Chuen says:—'[On the duke's death], Yay, his son by King Kwei, a lady of the house of Hoo, was appointed his successor, and lived in the mansion of Ke-sun; but in autumn, in the 9th month, on Kwei-sze, having been pining away, he died. Ke-sun then declared the succession to be in the Kung-tsze Chow, the duke's son by Ts'e Kwei, the cousin of King Kwei, [who had accompanied her to the harem]. Muhshuh was dissatisfied with the choice, and said, "When the eldest son [by the wife] dies, his own younger brother should have the succession. And if he have no own brother, then the eldest of his father's other sons [by concubines]. When there are two of the same age, the worthier should be chosen; where they do not differ in regard to their righteousness, the tortoise-shell should be consulted:—this was the ancient way. [Yay] was not the heir as being the wife's son, and it was not necessary to appoint the son of his mother's cousin. This man, moreover, has shown no grief in his mourner's place; in the midst of the sorrow he has looked pleased. He is what may be pronounced 'a man without rule'. and it is seldom that such an one does not occasion trouble. If indeed he be appointed marquis, he is sure to give sorrow to the family of Ke." Ke Woo-tsze would not listen to his remonstrance, and the issue was that Chew was appointed. By the time of the burial, he had thrice changed his mourning, and the flaps of his coat looked quite old. At this time, he—duke Ch'aou—was 19 years old, and he still had a boy's heart, from which a superior man could know that he would not go on well to the end.'

Par.4. This was Mang Hëzou-pih. He was succeeded by his son Hwoh ( ), known as Mang

He-tsze (孟信子), as Head of the Chungsun clan, and minister.

Par. 5. This is the first instance we have of the lord of another State coming in person to Loo to the funeral of one of its marquises. It was an innovation on the rules which regulated the intercommunion of the States. Ch'in Fooleang (陳傅良; Sung dyn.) says:—'At the second burial of duke Hwuy, the marquis of Wei came and was present, but duke Yin did not see him (See the 2d narrative after I. i. 5); for, in the beginning of the Ch'un Ts'ëw period, Loo still held fast the rules of propriety. On the death of duke King of Tsin, duke Ch'ing went to present his condolences (VIII. x. 6). By that time Loo had been brought low, and they detained him in Tsin, and made him attend the burial. None of the other princes were present, and the people of Loo felt the disgrace, for up to that time no prince of another State had been present at the funeral of the president of the States even. At the burial of king K'ang of Ts'00, the duke [of Loo], with the marquis of Ch'in, the earl of Ch'ing, and the baron of Heu, had attended it to the outside of the west gate. Thus the princes of the kingdom had been present at the funeral of [a lord of] Ts'oo; and now the viscount of Tang came to the funeral of duke Seang. In the end of the Ch'un-Ts'ëw period, it became a sort of allowable thing for one prince to be present at the funeral of another, but to hurry away to the ceremonies immediately following after death was still too great a breach of rule." The rule was, according to the old regulations, that on the death of any prince, the other States should immediately despatch an officer to express their condulences, and then despatch a great officer to attend the funeral. The Chuen says:—'Duke Ching of Ting came to be present at the burial, but he behaved rudely, while at the same time he shed many tears. Tsze-fuh Hwuy-pih said, 'The ruler of T'ang will [soon] die. Rude in his place [of mourning.] and yet showing an excessive grief, here is a premonition in the place of death: -must be not [soon] follow [our duke]?"

Par. 6. [We have here the following narrative:—'In the month of duke [Sëang's] funeral, Tsze-ch'an attended the earl of Ch'ing on a visit to Tsin. The marquis, on the pretence of the death of our duke, did not immediately give the earl an interview, on which Tsze-ch'an made all the walls about their lodging-house be thrown down, and brought in their carriages and horses. Sze Wän-pih went to complain of the proceeding, and said, "Through want of proper attention in our State to the government and the administration of the penal laws, robbers have become quite rife. For the sake, however, of the princes of the States and their retinaes, who condescend to come to him, our ruler has made his officers put in good repair the reception-houses for guests, raising high their gates, and making strong the walls around, that they might be free from anxiety [ou account of the robbers |. And now you have thrown these down, so that, though your followers may be able to guard you, how will it be in the case of other guests? Our State, as lord of covenants, has to keep the walls of those houses in good repair, with the tops of them safely covered to, be in readiness for its visitors; and if all were to throw them down, how should we be able to respond to the requirements on us? My ruler has sent me to ask what you have to say in the matter." Tsze-ch'an replied, "Through the smallness of our State, and its position between great States, whose demands upon it come we know not when, we do not dare to dwell at ease, but collect all the contributions due from us, and come to consult about the business of the times. It has happened now that your ministers are not at leisure, and we have not obtained an interview with the marquis, nor have we received any instructions, so that we might know when we should do so. We did not dare, [without a previous interview], to send in our offerings, nor did we dare to leave them exposed. If we should send them in [without that interview], they would be [but the regular] appurtenances of your ruler's treasuries:—without the display of them at it, we dare not send them in. If we should leave them exposed, then we were afraid that, through the sudden occurrence of [excessive] heat or rain, they might decay or be injured by insects, and our State be chargeable with a heavy offence.

"I have heard that when duke Wan wat lord of covenants, his own palace was low and small, and he had no prospect-towers or terraces; —that he might make the reception-houses for the princes the more lofty and large. The chambers were as large as his own, and the repositories and stables belonging to them were kept in good order. The minister of Works at the proper seasons that the roads were made in good condition. The plasterers in the same way did their duty on the apartments. Then when the visiting princes arrived, the foresters supplied the torches for the courtyards; the watchmen made their rounds about the buildings; the followers of the guests were relieved of their duties by men supplied for the purpose; there were menials, herdsmen, and grooms, to see what might be required of them to do; and the officers belonging to the various departments had the articles which they had to prepare for the guests ready for supply. 'The duke did not detain his guests, and yet there was nothing neglected. He shared with them their sorrows and joys. He examined any business [they had to lay before him], teaching them where their knowledge was deficient, and compassionating them where in anything they fell short. Guests [then] came to Tsin as if they were going home; —what calamity or distress had they to think of? They did not have to fear robbers, or to be troubled about the heat or the damp.

"But now the palace of Tung-te extends over several le, and the princes have to occupy what seem the houses of menials. The gates will not admit their carriages, and they cannot be taken over the walls. Robbers move about openly, and there is no defence against the evil influences [of heat and damp]. No time is fixed for the guests to have an interview, and they have no means of knowing when they will be summoned to it. If we are further required pot to throw down the walls, we shall have nowhere to deposit our offerings, and may lie open to the charge of a grave offence. Allow me to ask what charge you have to give us. Although your ruler has to mourn the death of [the duke of Loo, that is also an occasion of sorrow to our State. If we shall be permitted to present our offerings, and to depart after repairing the walls, it will be a kindness on the part of your ruler;—shall we presume to shrink from performing the labour diligently?"

'Wan-pih reported the result of his commission, and Chaou Wan-tsze said, "It is true. We are verily wanting in virtue. That we cause the princes to take up their residences within walls only fit for very inferior officers is our crime." Sze Wan-pih was then sent to apologize for the want of attention. The marquis saw the earl, and showed him more than ordinary courtesy. He entertained him liberally, sent him away with proofs of his friendship, and built reception-houses for the princes. Shuh-heang said, "I'hus indispensable is the gift of speech-making! Taze-ch'an has that gift, and all the States are under obligations to him. On no account may speeches be dispensed with. The words of the ode (She, III. ii. ode X. 2), Let your words be in harmony with the right, And the people will agree with them. Let your words be gentle and kind, And the people will be settled,' show that the author knew this."

'Tsze-p'e of Ch'ing sent Yin Twan to Ts'oo, to report how [the earl] had gone to Tsin:—

which was proper.'

Par. 7. The Chuen says:—'Duke Le-pe of Ken had two sons, K'eu-tsih and Chen-yu. He first declared that the succession would be in Chen-yu, and then disannulled that arrangement. He was tyrannical, and the people were distressed by their sufferings. In the 11th month, Chen-yu, with the help of the people, attacked and murdered him, and then took his place. K'eu-tsih fled to Ts'e, to which State his mother belonged, while Chen-yu was the son of a daughter of the House of Woo. The text, in saying that the people of Keu murdered their ruler, Mae-choo-ts'00, shows that he was a criminal (?)."

There follow here five narratives:—

1st. 'The viscount of Woo sent K'ëuh Hooyung (The son of Woo-shin; see on VII. vii. 5) on a complimentary mission to Tsin, to keep the way [between the two States] open. Chaou Wăn-tsze asked him, "Has Ke-tsze of Yen and Chow-lae (Ke-chah) really become your ruler? At Ch'aou you lost Choo-fan (See xxv. 10); a door-keeper killed Tae-woo (See xxix. 4):—it would seem as if Heaven had been opening [the way] for him. How is it?" The envoy replied, "He has not been appointed our ruler. That was the fate of the two kings, and not any opening [of the way] for Ke-tsze. If you speak of Heaven's opening the way. I should say it was for our present ruler, who has succeeded [to his brother]. He has great virtue, and takes [wise] measures. Virtuous, he does not lose the fattachment of the] people. Taking [wise] measures, he does not err in [the conduct of] affairs. By this attachment of the people, and by his orderly conduct of affairs, Heaven has opened the way for him. The rulers of the State of Woo must be the descendants of this ruler,—yes, to the end. Ke-tsze is one who maintains his purity. Although he might have had the State, he refused to be ruler."

2d. 'In the 12th month, Pih-kung Wän-teze attended duke Seang of Wei on a visit to Ts'oo, undertaken in compliance with the covenant of Sung; and as they passed by [the capital of] Ching, Yin Twan went out to comfort them under the toils of the journey, using the ceremonies of a complimentary visit, but the speeches appropriate to such a comforting visit. Wantaze entered the city, to pay a complimentary visit [in return]. Taze-yu was the internuncius. P'ing Këen-tsze and Tsze-t'ae-shuh met the guest. When the business was over, and [Wantsze] had gone out [again], he said to the marquis of Wei, "Ching observes the proprieties. This will be a blessing to it for several generations, and save it, I apprehend, from any inflictions from the great States. The ode says (She, III. iii. ode III. 5), > 'Who can hold anything hot? Must he not dip it [first] in water?

The rules of propriety are to government what that dipping is to the consequences of the heat. With the dipping to take away the heat, there is no distress." Tsze-ch'an, in the administration of his government, selected the able and employed them. P'ing Këen-tsze was able to give a decision in the greatest matters. Tsze-t'ae-shuh was handsome and accomplished. Kung-sun Hwuy told what was doing in the States round about, and could distinguish all about their great officers, their clans, surnames, order, positions, their rank whether noble or mean, their ability or the reverse; and he was also skilful in composing speeches. P'e Chin was a skilful counsellor;—skilful when he concocted his plans in the open country, but not when he did so in the city. When the State was going to have any business with other States, Tsze-ch'an asked Tsze-yu what was doing round about, and caused him to compose a long speech. He then took P'e Chin in his carriage into the open country, and made him consider whether the speech would suit the occasion or not. Next he told P'ing Këen-tsze, and made him give a decision in the case. When all this was done, he put the matter into the hands of Tsze-t'ae-shuh to carry it into effect, replying to the visitors [from the other States]. In this way it was seldom that any affair went wrong. This was what Pih-kung Wan-tsze meant in saying that Ching observed the proprieties.' Comp. Ans. XIV. ix.

8d.' 'A man of Ch'ing rambled into a village school, and fell discoursing about the conduct of the government.

'[In consequence], Jen-ming proposed to Tazech'an to destroy [all] the village schools; but that minister said, "Why do so? If people retire morning and evening, and pass their judgment on the conduct of the government, as being good or bad, I will do what they approve of, and I will alter what they condemn;—they are my teachers. On what ground should we destroy [those schools]? I have heard that by loyal conduct and goodness enmity is diminished, but I have not heard that it can be prevented by acts of violence. It may indeed be hastily stayed for a while, but it continues like a stream that has been danimed up. If you make a great opening in the dam, there will be great injury done,—beyond our power to relieve. The best plan is to lead the water off by a small opening. [In this case] our best plan is to hear what is said, and use it as a medicine." Jeuming said, "From this time forth I know that you are indeed equal to the administration of affairs. I acknowledge my want of ability. If you indeed do this, all Ching will be benefited by it, and, not we two or three ministers only."

When Chung-ne heard of these words, he said, "Looking at the matter from this, when men say that Tsze-ch'an was not benevolent, I do not believe it."

4th. 'Tsze-p'e wanted to make Yin Ho commandant of his city. Teze-ch'an said, "He is young, and I do not know that he can he so employed." "He is honest and careful," replied Taze-p'e. "I love him. He does not go against me. Let him go and learn, and he will by-andby know all the better how to rule." Tsze-ch'an objected, "When a man loves another, he seeks to benefit him; but when you, in your love for [this man], wish to confer a post on him, it is as if you would employ a man to cut before he is able to handle a knife;—the injury done to him must be great. If your love for a man only issues in your injuring him, who will venture to seek your love? You are the main support of the State of Ching. If the main support be broken, the rafters will tumble down. I shall be crushed beneath them, and I must therefore speak out all my mind. If you have a piece of beautiful embroidered silk, you will not employ a [mere] learner to make it up. A great office and a great city are what men depend on for the protection of their persons; and you will employ a [mere] learner to undertake them!-are they not much more important than your beautiful embroidery? I have heard that a man must first learn, and then enter on the conduct of government; I have not heard that one is to learn in the exercise of that conduct. If you do indeed do this, you are sure to do injury. Take the case of hunting:-when a man is accustomed to shoot and to drive, his hunting will be successful. If he have never mounted a chariot nor shot nor driven, he will be utterly unsuccessful; and amid his fear lest he should be overturned, what leisure will be have to think of the game?" Tsze-p'e said, I have shown myself unintelligent. I have heard that what the superior man makes it a point to know is the great and the remote, while the small man is concerned to know the small and the near. I am a small man. The garment which fits to my body I know and am careful about, but the great office and the great city, on which my body depends for protection, were far off and slighted by me. But for your words, I should not have known [my error]. On ormer day I said that if you governed the te and I governed my family, and so preved myself, it would do. Henceforth I know t I am insufficient even for this, and must allowed even in the rule of my family to act | as I shall be instructed by you." Tsze-ch'an said, "Men's minds are different just as their faces are. How should I presume to say that your face must be as mine? But if [I see] that which makes my mind, as we say, uncasy, I will tell you of it." Tsze-p'e, impressed with his faithfulness, entrusted to him the government, and thus it was that Tsze-ch'an was able to conduct the affairs of Ch'ing.'

5th. 'When the marquis of Wei was in Ts'00, Pih-kung Wän-tsze, perceiving the carriage and display of the chief minister Wei, said to the marquis, "The [pomp] of the chief minister is like that of the ruler; he must have his mind set on some other object. But though he may obtain his desire, he will not hold it to the end. The ode (She, III. iii. ode I. 1) says,

> 'All have their beginning, But there are few that can secure the

The difficulty is indeed with the end. The chief minister will not escape [an evil death]." The marquis said, "How do you know it?" Wantsze replied, "The ode (She, III. iii. ode II. 2) 88.78,

Let him be reverently careful of his dignified manner,

And he will be the pattern of the people.

But the chief minister has no dignified manner [such as becomes him], and the people have no pattern in him. Let him, in whom the people find no pattern, be placed above them, yet he cannot continue to the end." "Good!" said the duke. "What do you mean by a dignified manner?" The reply was, "Having majesty that inspires awe, is what we call dignity. Presenting a pattern which induces imitation is what we call manner. When a ruler has the dignified manner of a ruler, his ministers fear and love him, imitate and resemble him, so that he holds [firm] possession of his State, and his fame continues through long ages. When a minister has the dignified manner of a minister, his inferiors fear and love him, so that he can keep [sure] his office, preserve his clan, and rightly order his family. So it is with all classes downwards, and it is by this that high and low are made firm in their relations to one another. An ode of Wei (She, I. iii. ode I. 3) says,

'My dignified manner is mixed with ease, And cannot be made the subject of remark:

showing that ruler and minister, high and low, father and son, elder and younger brother, at home and abroad, in great things and small, all have a dignified manner [which is proper to them]. An ode of Chow (She, III. ii. ode III.4) 8ays,

> 'Your friends assisting at the service Have done so in a dignified manner,' showing that it is the rule for friends, in their instruction of one another, to exhibit a diguified manner. One of the books of Chow says, 'The great States feared his strength, and the small States cherished his virtue,' showing the union of awe and love. An ode (She, III. i. ode VII. 7) says, 'Unconscious of effort, He accorded with the example of God;' showing the union of imitation and resemblance.

'Chow imprisoned king Wan for 7 years, and then all the princes of the kingdom repaired to he place of his imprisonment, and on this Chow xcame afraid, and restored him [to his State]. This may be called an instance of how [king Wan] was loved. When he invaded Ts'ung, on is second expedition, [the lord of that State] mrrendered and acknowledged his duty as a ubject. All the wild tribes [also] led on one nother to submit to him. These may be pronounced instances of the awe which he inspired. Ill under heaven praised his meritorious services rith songs and dances, which may be proounced an instance of their taking him as a attern. To the present day, the actions of ing Wan are acknowledged as laws, which may be pronounced an instance of his power to make men resemble himself. The secret was his dignified manner. Therefore when the superior man, occupying a high position, inspires awe; and by his beneficence produces love; and his advancing and retiring are according to rule; and all his intercourse with others affords a pattern; and his countenance and steps excite the gaze [of admiration]; and the affairs he conducts serve as laws; and his virtuous actions lead to imitation; and his voice and air diffuse joy; and his movements and doings are elegant; and his words have distinctness and brilliance: -when thus he brings himself near to those below him, he is said to have a dignified manner."

In the third month, we took Yun.

In summer, K'ëen, younger brother of the carl of Ts'in, fled from that State to Tsin.

In the sixth month, on Ting-sze, Hwa, viscount of Choo, died.

- 6 Seun Woo of Tsin led a force, and defeated the Teil at Ta-loo.
- 7 In autumn, K'eu-tsih of Keu entered into that State from Ts'e.
- 8 Chen-yu of Keu fled from that State to Woo.
- 9 Shuh Kung led a force, and laid out the boundaries of the lands of Yun.
- 10 There was the burial of duke Taou of Choo.
- In winter, in the eleventh month, on Ke-yëw, Keun, viscount of Ts'oo, died.
- 12 The Kung-tsze P'e of Ts'oo fled from that State to Tsin.

We have seen, in the Chuen on par. 8 of last year, that duke Ch'aou's name was Chow (元), and that he was a son of duke Sëang by a concubine, called Ta'e Kwei (本語), of the State of Hoo (元). He was 19 years old at his accession, and still possessed a boy's heart, more fond of sport than beseemed his position. He was marquis of Loo from B.C. 540 to 509. His honorary title denotes 'In demeanour respectful and intelligent (元 集 田田).'

Chraou's 1st year synchronized with the 4th of king King (景王); the 17th of Ping (子公) of Tsin; the 7th of King (景) of Ts'e; the 3d of Sëang (夏) of Wei; the 2d of Ling (重) of Ts'ae; the 25th of Këen (首) of Chring; the 14th of Woo (武) of Ts'aou; the 28th of Gae (泉) of Chrin; the 9th of Win (文) of Ke; the 35th of Pring of Sung; the 36th of King of Tsin; the 4th of Këah-gaou (水 敖) of Ts'oo, and the 3d of E-mei (東末) of Woo.

Par. 2. For 國家 Kung-yang has 國內; for 齊惡, 石惡; for 罕虎, 軒虎. For 統 Kung has 劉, and Kuh 劉. Kwoh was in Ching. It had been the capital of the State of east Kwoh, which had been extinguished by Ching before the commencement of the Chun Ts ew period;—in the dis. of Fan-shwuy (义已

ing in Kwoh was to renew the covenant of Sung, which was repeated here, though not with all the formalities; and many critics see the 'pruning style' and mysterious meaning of the sage in making mention of the meeting only. The details in the Chuen illustrate the remarks appended to IX. xxvii. 2, 5, on the decadence of Tsin, the growing power of Ts'00, and the encroachments of the great officers on the prerogatives of the princes of the States.

The Chuen says:—'In spring, the Kung-tsze Wei of Ts-oo went on a complimentary visit to Ching, and at the same time to marry a daughter of Kung-sun Twan; Woo Keu being the assistant commissioner. They proposed lodging inside the capital, but the people of Ching were adverse to this, and sent the internuncius Tszeyu to speak with them on the subject; on which they occupied a reception-house outside. When the business of the visit was over, [Wei] proposed [entering the city], with all his company, to meet his bride. The thing troubled Tszech'an, who sent Tsze-yu to decline the proposal, saying, "In consequence of the smallness of our poor city, which is not sufficient to contain your followers, we beg to [level a piece of ground outside, and] rear a high structure where we can receive your commands." The chief minister ordered the grand-administrator, Pih Chowle, to reply, "Your ruler condescended to confer his kindness on our great officer Wei, saying that he would send the lady Fung (Fung was the surname of Kung-sun Twan) to take soothing possession of his family. Wei then set forth his offerings on the stands in the temples of [the kings] Chwang and Kung (His grand-father and father), and is come here. If the lady be given to him in the open country, it will be throwing your ruler's gift among the grass and weeds; and our great officer will not have his rank among the other ministers [of our State]. And not only this:—the proceeding will also make Wei to have deceived his former rulers, and he will not be able to retain his place as an ancient of our [present] ruler. He will not [dare to] return [to Ts'oo]. Let your great officers consider it." Tsze-yn said, "Our small State [means] no offence; its offence has been in the confidence [it has reposed in you]. Meaning to confide in your great State's desire to secure its repose and quiet, and you, on the contrary, having hid in your breasts an evil mind to scheme against it, it will have erred in its confidence, and must announce the thing to the States, moving the indignation of them all, so that they will resist your ruler's orders, and your progress will be stopped:—this is what we are afraid of. If it were not for this, our State is but a sort of keeper of a reception-house for you; would it presume to grudge you the use of the temple of the Fung family?"

'Woo Keu, knowing that they were prepared [in Ching against any hostile attempt], begged that they might enter the city, with their quivers slung upside down;—which was granted. In the 1st month, on Yih-we, [Wei] entered the city, received his bride, and went out again.

'He then went on to meet [the representatives of the States] in Kwoh, the object being to renew the covenant of Sung. K'e Woo said to Chaou Wăn-tsze, "At the covenant of Sung, the men of Ts'oo got their will, as against Tsin. The want of faith of the present chief-minister [of Ts'oo] is what all the States have heard of.

If you do not take precautions, things will turn out as in Sung. The good faith of Tsze-muh was celebrated among the States, and still he deceived Tsin, and got the advantage over it; how much more may we expect deceit from one notorious for his want of faith! If T8'00 a second time get its will as against Tsin, it will be a disgrace to Tsin. You have guided the government of Tsin, maintaining it as lord of covenants now for 7 years. Twice have you assembled the princes of the States, and three times their great officers. You brought to submission Ts'e and the Teih; you tranquillized the States of the east; you pacified the confusion of Tsin; you walled Shun-yu (The capital of Ke); yet our troops have not been exhausted; the State has not been wearied; the people have uttered no slanders nor revilings; the other States have felt no resentment; Heaven has inflicted no great calamities:—all this has been due to you. You have got a good name, and what I am afraid of is, lest you should bring shame on it in the end. Sir, you must not neglect to take precautions." Wan-tsze said, "Thank you for the lesson you have given me. But at the covenant of Sung, the heart of Tszemuh was set on injuring others, while my heart was set on the well-being of others; and it was thereby that Ts'oo got the advantage of Tsin. And now I still cherish the same heart, and Ts'oo is still assuming and arrogating. harm will result from it. Good faith shall be held by me as a fundamental thing, and I will act in accordance with it. The case will be like that of the husbandman who clears away the weeds and digs up the earth about his plants; although there may be seasons of famine or scarcity, he will, as a rule, have abundant harvests. Moreover, I have heard that he who can maintain his good faith is sure not to be below others:—I cannot fully attain to this. The ode (She, III. iii. ode II. 8) says,

'Not going beyond the right, inflicting no injury,

Seldom is it that such an one does not become a pattern to others;'

showing the power of good faith. He who can be a pattern to others, is not beneath them. My inability to attain this is my difficulty; I

'Wei, the chief minister of Ts'oo begged that they might simply use a victim, and, having read the words of the former covenant, place the writing over its [blood]. This was agreed to on the part of Tsin; and on the 3d month, on on the part of Tsin; and on the 3d month, on Këah-shin, they covenanted. Wei was in [ruler's] robes, with guards displayed [before him]. Shuhsun Muh-tsze said, "The Kung-tsze of Ts'oo is beautiful, how ruler-like!"

Tsze-p'e of Ch'ing said, "Yes, with those two spearmen before him!"

'Tsze-këa of Ts'ae said, "They are before the P'oo palace; may he not have them [here] also?"

'Pih Chow-le of Ts'00 said, "In taking leave for this journey, he borrowed them from our ruler."

'Hwuy, the internuncius of Ch'ing, said "He borrowed them, but will not return them!"

'Pih Chow-le replied, "You may find a subject for your sorrow in the rebellious, incoherent ambition of Tsze-seih." Tsze-yu rejoined, "While the designate of the peih (See the Chuen on XIII.

8) remains, do you find no subject for sorrow in the borrowing these things, and not returning them?"

'Kwoh-tsze of Ts'e said, "I commiserate the two of you."

The Kung-tsze Shaou of Ch'in said, "But for their anxious sorrow, what would they accomplish? They will have occasion for joy."

'Ts'e-tsze of Wei said, "If they know it [before-hand], although they may be sorrowful, what harm will there be?"

'The master of the Left of Sung—he of Hoh-said, "A great State commands, and a small State obeys. I know nothing but to obey."

'Yoh Wang-foo of Tsin said, ["The sentiment of] the last stanza of the Sëaou min (She, !L v. ode I.) is good; I will follow it."

'When they retired from the meeting, Tazeyu said to Tsze-p'e, "Shuh-sun was sharp, and yet mild. The master of the Left of Sung was sententious, and agreeable to propriety. You Wang-foo was loving and reverent. You and Tsze-këa held [the Mean]. You are all mea who will preserve your families for generations. But the great officers of Ts'e, Wei, and Ch'in, will not escape [an evil death]. Kwoh-taze was sorry for them; Tsze-shaou found in sorrow ground for joy; and Ts'e-tsze said that though they were sorrowful, there would be no harm. Now to be sorry before the thing happens, to find joy in what is occasion for sorrow, and to see no harm in being sorry;—all this is the way. to bring sorrow. Sorrow will come to them. The Great Declaration says, 'What the people desire, Heaven is sure to grant.' Those three officers prognosticated sorrow;—is it possible but that sorrow should come to them? This is an illustration of the saying, 'From word you know things.""

Yun,—see on IX. xii. 1, 2. The Par. 8. Chuen says:—'Ke Woo-tsze invaded Keu and took Yun. The people of Keu sent word [of the outrage] to the meeting, and Ts'oo represented to Tsin, "Before we have retired from this renewal of the covenant, Loo has invaded Keu, thus treating contumeliously our common stipulations. Allow us to execute its envoy." Yoh Hwan-tsze (Wang-foo) was in attendance on Chaou Wan-tsze; and wishing to ask a bribe from Shuh-sun, he interceded for him, and sent messenger to ask from him a sash. Shuh-sun refused it, on which Leang K'e-hing said, "Why should you grudge giving your property to protect yourself?" Shuh-sun replied, "The meeting of the States is for the defence of our altars. If I by such a method secure my own escape, yet Loo will be attacked. I shall have brought calamity on it, instead of being a defence to it. Men build walls to prevent the approach of evil. When there are cracks in a wall, or B falls to ruin, on whom will the blame be laid? If I, set for the defence [of Loo], should yet do it evil, I should be more to blame [than the wall]. Though I can resent the conduct of Kesun [in this matter], what offence has Loo committed? That the Shuh should go abroad [on missions], and the Ke remain at home, is ... established custom [of our State]:—with whom should I feel dissatisfied? But as to a gift to Wang-foo, if I do not give him something, 12 will not cease [importuning me]." With this he called the messenger, tore up a piece of silk for a lower garment, and gave it to him. saying "The sash-silk is all done."

n Chaon-mang heard of all this, he said, fortune, not forgetting his State, he is prospect of difficulties, not [wishing] ep his office, he is faithful. Forgetting of death in his interest for the State, orrupt. Holding to these three things unsels, he is righteous. Ought a man se four qualities to be executed?" : made a request to [the minister of] sying, "Although Loo be chargeable offence, its minister here has not [sought I difficult services, and [now] in awe of jesty he [is prepared] to submit reveyour orders. The chief minister feasted Chaou-mang, and sang the first stanza of the Ta ming (She, III. i. ode II.). Chaou-mang sang the second stanza of the Sëaou yuen (She, II. v. ode II.). When the feast was over, Chaou-mang said to Shuhhëang, "The chief minister looks upon himself as king. How will it be?" Shuhhëang replied, "The king is weak, and the minister is strong. His ambition will be gratified, but notwithstanding he will not die a natural death." "Why so?" "When strength overcomes weakness, and is satisfied in doing so, the strength is not righteous. Of strength which is unrighteous the doom will come quick. The ode (She, II. iv. ode VIII. 8) says, that was a case of strength which was not righteous. When the chief minister becomes king, he will be sure to ask [from Tsin] the presidency of the States; and Tsin is somewhat weakened. The States will go [to Ts'oo]; and when he has got them, his oppressiveness will be greatly increased. The people will not be able to bear it, and how shail he obtain a natural death? Taking [his position] by strength, overcoming by unrighteousness, he must look on these things as the proper course. Pursuing that course in dissoluteness and oppression, he cannot continue long."

'The majestic honoured capital of Chow Is extinguished by Paou Sze:—'

We have four narratives appended here:— 1st. "In summer, in the 4th month, Chaoumang, Shuh-sun P'aou, and the great officer of Ts'aou, entered the capital of Ch'ing, where the earl gave them all an entertainment. Tsze-p'e conveyed to Chaou-mang the notice of the time; and when the ceremony [of doing so] was over, Chaou-mang sang the Hoo yen (She, II. viii. ode VII.). Tsze-p'e went on to give the notice to Muh-shuh, and told this to him, when Muh-shuh said, "Chaou-mang wishes that there should only be one cup and the response to it. You should order it so." "How dare I?" said Tsze-p'e. "When it is what a man wishes, why should you not dare to do a thing?" was the reply. When the time came, the vessels for the ceremony of five cups were all provided under a tent. Chaou-mang declined [such a celebration, and told Tsze-ch'an apart how he had begged of the chief minister [that it might be otherwise]. On this only one cup was presented, Chaou-mang being the [principal] guest; and when that ceremony was over, they proceeded to the feast. Muh-shuh sang the Ts'ëohch'aou (She, I. ii. ode I.), when Chaou-mang said, "I am not worthy of that." The other then sang the Ts'ae fan. (I. ii. ode II.), and added, "Our small States are like that southernwood. If your great State will gather it sparingly and use it, we will in everything obey your commands." Tsze-p'e sang the last stanza of the Yay yew sze keun (I. ii. ode XII.). Chaou-mang sang the Chang-te (II. i. ode IV.), and said, "Let us who are brothers seek to rest in harmony, and that dog may be kept from barking at us." Muh-shuh, Tsze-p'e, and the great officer of Ts'aou, rose up at this, and bowed their acknowledgments. Each of them raised a cup made of a rhinoceros' horn, and said, "We small States depend on you, and know that we shall escape punishment." They then drank and were joyous. When Chaoumang went out, he said, "I shall not have a : Tose-non entered in his military dress, shot as rejectition of this sensyment?."

Ting of Law to the Ying to enopliment Chaoumang on the accomplishment of the toils of his journey; and the accompanied him; to his balging-house near a bend of the Loh. - How minirable." said the viscount of Lew. "was ! the merit of Yu! His intelligent virtue reached far. But for Yu, we should have been fishes. That you and I manage the business of the princes in our cape and rubes is all owing to Yu. Why should you not display a merit as far-reaching as that of Yu, and extend a great protection to the people?" Chaon-mang replied, "I am old, and constantly afraid of incurring guilt; how should I be able to send my regards far into the future? We can but think about our food, in the morning laying no plans for the evening, and are incapable of any long forethought." When the viscount returned [to the court], he told the king of this conversation, saying, "The common saying, 'An old man is just becoming wise, when senility comes upon him,' might be spoken of Chaou-mang. He is the chief minister of Tsin, and presides over the States, and yet he likens himself to a common servant, who in the morning has no plans for the evening, casting from him [the care of] both Spirits and men. The Spirits must be angry with him, and the people revolt from him:—how can he continue long? mang will not see another year. The Spirits, angry with him, will not accept his sacrifices; the people, revolting from him, will not repair to execute his affairs. His sacrifices and affairs both unattended to, what should he do with more years?"'

3d. When Shuh-sun returned [to Loo], Tsang Yaou drove Kc-sun to congratulate him on the accomplishment of his journey. The morning passed and mid-day came, without his coming forth. Tsang Yaou said to Tsang Fow, "[Kept here] from morning to mid-day, we know our offence. But the government of Loo goes on through the mutual forbearance [of the ministers]. Abroad he could bear [with our master], and [now] in the State he does not do so;—what is the meaning of this?" Fow (Shuh-sun's steward) said, "He has been several months abroad;—what does it harm you to be here one morning? Does the trader who desires his profit dislike the clamour [of the market-place]?" Fow then said to his master that he might come forth, and Shuh-sun pointing to one of the pillars [of his house], said, "Though I should dislike this, could it be removed?" With this he went out and saw Ke-sun.'

4th. 'Sen-woo Fan of Ching had a beautiful sister, who was betrothed to Kung-sun Tsum (Designated Tsze-nan). Kung-sun Hili (Taze-seih), however, also sent a messenger who violently insisted on leaving a goose at the house (A ceremony of esponsal). Fan was afraid, and reported the matter to Tsze-ch'an, who said, "This is not your sorrow [only]; it shows the want of government in the State. Give her to which of them you please." Fan then begged of the two gentlemen that they would allow him to leave the choice between them to the lady; and they agreed to it.

'Tsze-seih then, splendidly arrayed, entered the house, set forth his offerings, and went out.

 arrow to the left and another to the right, spring 2d. 'The king by Heaven's grace sent duke into his chariot, and went out. The lady saw them from a chamber, and said, "Toxe-seih is indeed handsome, but Tane-nan is my husband. For the husband to be the husband, and the wife to be the wife, is what is called the natural course." So she went to Taze-nan's. Taze-seih was enraged, and by-and-by went with his bow-case and in his buff-coat to see Taxe-nan, intending to kill him and take away his wife. Taze-man knew his purpose, seized a spear, and pursued him. Coming up to him at a cross road, he struck him with the weapon. Tsze-seih went home wounded, and informed the great officers, saying, "I went in friendship to see him, not knowing that he had any hostile purpose; and so I received the wound."

> 'The great officers all consulted about the case. Tsze-ch'an said, "There is a measure d right on both sides; but as the younger, and lower in rank, and chargeable with an offence, we must hold Ts'oo to be the criminal." Accordingly he [caused] Tsze-nan to be seized, and enumerated his offences, saying, "There are the five great rules of the State, all of which you have violated:—awe of the ruler's majesty; obedience to the rules of the government; honour to the nobler in rank; the service of elders; and the kindly cherishing of relatives. These five things are necessary to the maintenance of the State. Now you, while the ruler was in the city, presumed to use your weapon; —you had no awe of his majesty. You violated the laws of the State;—not obedient to the rules of government. Tsze-seih is a great officer of the 1st degree, and you would not acknowledge your inferiority;—you have not honoured the nobler in rank. Younger than he, you showed no awe of him;—not serving your elder. You lifted your weapon against your cousin;—not kindly cherishing your relative. The ruler says that he cannot bear to put you to death, and will deal gently with you in sending you to $ distance. Make an effort and take your departure quickly, so as not to incur a second offence."

> 'In the 5th month, on Kang-shin, Ching banished Yëw (Tsze-nan's clan-name) Ts'00, to Woo. When he was about to send him away, Tsze-ch'an consulted with T'ae-shuh (Yew Keib) on the subject. T'ae-shuh said, "I cannot protect myself; how should I be able to protect the members of my clan? The affair belongs to the government of the State, and is not any private hardship. If you have planned for the benefit of the State, carry out your decision. Why should you have any hesitancy? The duke of Chow-put to death Kwan-shuh, and hanished Ts ne-sliuh, not because he did not love them, but because it was necessary for the royal House. If I were to be found in any crime, you would send me away; what difficulty need you have in the case of any other Yew?"]

> Par. 4. The Chuen says :- Ilow-taze of Te'in had been a favourite with [his father, duke II wan, and was like another ruler by the side of [his brother, duke] King. Their mother said to him, "If you do not go away, I am afraid you will be found fault with." On Kwdmaon, therefore, K'een went to Tsin, with his chariots amounting to a thousand. The words of the text, "K'ëen, younger brother of the ear of Ts'in fied from that State to Tsin," are condemnatory of the earl.

'How-tsze gave an entertainment to the marquis of Tsin, when he made a bridge of boats over the Ho. His chariots were placed at stages, 10 k distant from one another, [all the way] from Yung to Këang, returning [to Tsin] to fetch the offerings for the different pledgings [at the entertainment], thereby completing the business in eight journeys back to it.

'The marshal How asked him whether those were all his chariots, and if he had no more, to which he replied, "These may be pronounced many; if they had been fewer, how should I have got to see you?" Joo Shuh-ts'e (The marshal) told this to the marquis, and added, "The prince of Ts'in is sure to return to that State. I have heard that when a superior man is able to know his errors, he is sure to take good measures in regard to them; and good measures receive the assistance of Heaven."

'How-taze visited Chaou-mang, who asked him when he would return [to Ts'in], and he replied, "I was afraid of being found fault with by my ruler, and therefore I am here. I will wait for the accession of his successor." The other then asked him about the character of the ruler of Tsin, and he replied that he was without principle. "So that [the State] will perish?" asked Chaou-mang. "How should that be?" replied he. "For one rule without principle a State will not come to an end. The State stands related to Heaven and Earth;—they stand together. Unless licentiousness has prevailed for several incumbencies, it will not come to ruin." Chaou-mang said, "Does Heaven [act in the matter]?" "Yes." "And for how long?" "I have heard," was the reply, "that when [a ruler] is without principle, and yet the yearly harvest is good, Heaven is assisting him; it is seldom it does not do so for 5 years." Chaou-mang, observing the shadows, said, "The morning may not extend to the evening, nor the evening to the morning. Who can wait for five years?" When How-tsze went out [from the interview], he said to his friends, "Chaou-mang will [soon] die. When the president of the people trifles ahout years, and desires [length of] days, he cannot endure long."'

The Kang-he editors say that the three Chuen agree in regarding the words of the text as condemnatory of the earl of Ts'in, because he had not done his duty in the training of his Younger brother; but they also quote the criticism of Kea Heuen-ung (家 鉉 翁; end of Sung dyn.), who finds a condemnation of K'ëen in it as well;—and of this view they approve. But both the views are imported into the text, we may believe. Certainly the latter is. A more serious difficulty presents itself to my mind in connexion with the text. Admitting the narrative in the Chuen, though parts in it are not casy to believe or understand, the going of K'een to Tsin was of a very different character from all the departures from one State and flights to another which we have yet met with. A faithful and accurate chronicler would have varied his language to mark that difference.

We have appended here:—'Because of the troubles connected with the affair of Yëw Ts'oo in Ching, in the 6th month, the earl and his great officers made a covenant in the house of

Kung-sun Twan. Han Woo, Kung-sun Këaou, Kung-sun Twan, Yin Twan, Yëw Keih, and Sze Tae, privately covenanted together outside the Kwei gate, which was in fact [the covenant of] Heun-suy. Kung-sun Hih violently insisted on taking part in the covenant, and made the grand-historiographer write his name, and enter the phrase—"the seven officers." Tsze-ch'an did not attempt to punish him.']

大原; and Kuh observes that the place or tract was called by the former name among the Teih, and by the latter among the States of the kingdom. The name of Tae-yuen remains in the dis. and dep. so called, in Shan-se.

The Chuen says:—'Chung-hang Muh-tsze defeated the Woo-chung and other tribes of the Teih in Tae-yuen, through collecting the men attached to the chariots and making them foot-When they were about to fight, Wei Shoo said, "They are all foot-men, while our force consists of chariots. We must meet them, moreover, in a narrow pass. Let us substitute ten men for each chariot, and we shall overcome them. Even though straitened in the pass, we shall do so. Let us all turn ourselves into footmen. I will begin." Accordingly, he put aside his chariots, and formed the men into ranks. five chariots furnishing three ranks of five men each. A favourite officer of Seun Woo (The Chung-hang Muh-tsze) was not willing to take his place among the soldiers, and Shoo beheaded him, and made the execution known through the army. Five dispositions were then made at a distance from one another:—lëang, in fronts woo, behind; chuen, on the right horn; ts'an, on the left; and p'in, in the van. This was done to deceive the Teih, who laughed at the arrange-The troops of Tsin then fell on the enemy before they could form in order, and inflicted on them a great defeat."

Parr. 7, 8. See on IX. xxxi. 7. The Chuen here says:—'When Chen-yu succeeded to the rule of Keu, he deprived all the sons of previous rulers of their offices. In consequence of this, they called K'eu-tsih from Ts'e; and in autumn, the Kung-tsze Ts'oo of Ts'e instated him in Keu, while Chen-yu fled to Woo.' Kung and Kuh

Par. 9. The Chuen says:—'Shuh Kung led a force, and laid out the boundaries of the lands of Yun;—taking advantage of the disorder in Keu. At this time, Woo Low, Mow Hoo, and the Kung-tsze Mëeh-ming, fled to Ts'e, offering to that State the cities of Ta-mang and Chang-e-mei. The superior man will say that Chen's not maintaining himself in Keu was owing to his throwing men from him. Can men be thrown away? The ode (She, IV. i. [i.] ode IV.) says, "Nothing gives strength more than [the use of right] men."

The sentiment is good.'

Par. 10. This is the first time that we meet, in the Ch'un Ts'ëw, with the burial of a prince of Choo; and the same thing is recorded also, for the 1st time under duke Ch'aou, in reference to rulers of T'ang, Sëeh, and Ts'in. The entries mark the decay of Loo, now seeking by such an attention to ingratiate itself with small States like Choo, T'ang, and Seeh, and with a distant State like Ts'in.

[We have here the two following narratives:—

1st. 'The marquis of Tsin being ill, the earl of Ching sent Kung-sun Kiesou to Tsin on a complimentary visit, and to inquire about the marquis's illness. Shuh-hëang then asked K'ëaou, saying, "The diviners say that our ruler's illness is inflicted on him by [the Spirits] Shih-ch'in and Tae-t'ae, but the historiographers do not know who these are. I venture to ask you." Tsze-ch'an said, "Anciently, [the emperor Kaou-sin had two sons, of whom the elder was called Oh-pih, and the younger Shih-ch'in. They dwelt in K'wang-lin, but could not agree, and daily carried their shields and spears against each other. The sovereign emperor (Yaou) did not approve of this, and removed Oh-pih to Shang-k-ëw, to preside over the star Ta-ho (See the Chuen on IX. ix. 1). The ancestors of Shang followed him [in Shangk'ëw], and hence Tu-ho is the star of Shang. [Yaou also] removed Shih-ch'in to Ta-hëa, to preside over the star Sin (? in Orion]. The descendants of Tang (Yaou) followed him, and in Ta-hëa served the dynasties of Hea and Shang. The prince at the end of their line was Tang Shuh-yu. When Yih Këang, the wife of king Woo, was pregnant with T'ae-shuh, she dreamt that God said to her, "I have named your son Yu, and will give Tang to him,—Tang which helongs to the star Sin, where I will multiply his descendants." When the child was born, there appeared on his hand the character Yu [by which he was named accordingly]. And when king Ch'ing extinguished [the old House of] T'ang, he invested T'ae-shuh with the principality; and hence Six is the star of Tsin. From this we may perceive that Shih-ch'in is the Spirit of Sin.

"[Again], anciently, among the descendants of the emperor Kin-t'ëen was Mei, chief of the officers of the waters, who had two sons, Yun-kih and T'ae-t'ae. T'ae-t'ae inherited his father's office, cleared the channels of the Fun and T'aou, and embanked the great marsh, so as to make the great plain habitable. The emperor (Chuen-heuh) commended his labours, and invested him with the principality of Funch'uen. [The States of] Ch'in, Sze, Juh, and Hwang maintained sacrifices to him. But now Tsin, when it took on itself the sacrifices to the Fun, extinguished them. From this we may perceive that T'ae-t'ae is the Spirit of the Fun.

"But these two Spirits cannot affect your ruler's person. The Spirits of the hills and streams are sacrificed to in times of flood, drought, and pestilence. The Spirits of the sun, moon, and stars are sacrificed to on the unseasonable occurrence of snow, hoarfrost, wind, or rain. Your ruler's person must be suffering from something connected with his movements out of the palace and in it, his meat and drink, his griefs and pleasures; what can these Spirits of the mountains and stars have to do with it?

"I have heard that the superior man [divides the day] into 4 periods:—the morning, to hear the affairs of the government; noon, to make full inquiries about them; the evening, to consider well and complete the orders [he has resolved to issue]; and the night, for rest. By this arrangement [of his time], he attempers and dissipates the humours [of the body], so that they are not allowed to get shut up, stopped, and congested, so as to injure and reduce it. Should that take place, his mind loses its intelligence, and all his measures are pursued in a dark and confused way. But has not [your ruler] been making these four different periods of his time into one? This may have produced the illness.

"I have heard again that the ladies of the harem should not be of the same surname as the master of it. If they be, their offspring will not thrive. When their first admiration for each other [as relatives] is exhausted, they occasion one another disease. On this account the superior man hates such unions, and one of our Books says, 'In buying a concubine, if you do not know her surname, consult the tortoise-shell for it.' The ancients gave careful attention to the two points which I have mentioned. husband and wife should be of different surnames is one of the greatest points of propriety; but now your ruler has in his harem four Kes:—may it not be from this [that his illness has arisen]? If it have come from the two things [I have mentioned], nothing can be done for it. If he had seldom to do with the four Kes, he might get along; if that be not the case, disease was the necessary result."

'Shuh-hëang said, "Good. I had not heard of this. But both the things are so." When he went out, the internuncius Hwuy escorted him, and Shuh-hëang asked him about the affairs of Ch'ing, and especially about Taze-seih. "He will not remain long," was the reply. "Unobservant of propriety, and fond of insulting others; trusting in his riches and despising his superiors,—he cannot continue long."

When the marquis heard of what Taze-ch'an had said, he remarked that he was a superior man of vast information, and gave him large gifts.' 2d. 'The marquis of Tsin asked the help of a physician from Ts'in, and the earl sent one Ho to see him, who said, "The disease cannot be cured, -according to the saying that when women are approached, the chamber disease becomes like insanity. It is not caused by Spirits nor by food; it is that delusion which has destroyed the mind. Your good minister will [also] die; it is not the will of Heaven to preserve him." The marquis said, "May women [then] not be approached?" The physician replied, "Intercourse with them must be regulated. The ancient kings indicated by their music how all other things should be regulated. Hence there are the five regular intervals. Or alow or quick, from beginning to end, they blend in one another. Each note rests in the exact intermediate place; and when the five are thus determined, no further exercise on the instruments is permitted. Thus the superior man does not listen to music where the hands work on with licentious notes, pleasing the cars but injurious to the mind, where the rules of equable harmony are forgotten. So it is with all things. When they come to this, they should stop; if they do not do so, it produces disease. The superior man repairs to his lutes, to illustrate his observance of rules, and not to delight his mind [merely].

'[In the same way] there are six heavenly influences, which descend and produce the five tastes, go forth in the five colours, and are verified in the five notes; but when they are in

In their , they form the four seasons; in r, they form the five [elementary] then any of them is in excess, there amity. Was it possible ardship, paying no regard to moderatime, not to come to this?"

[the physician] went out, he told and said to Chaou-mang, who asked intended by "the good minister." "You have been chief us the reply. Tsin now for 8 years. On this he returned [to the capital], leaving Woo Keu to proceed to Ching. On the 11th month, on Keyëw, he entered [as if] to inquire about the king's illness, and strangled him. He then proceeded to put to death the king's two sons, Moh and P'ing-hëa. Tsze-kan, director of the Right, fled to Tsin; and Tsze-seih, director of the royal stables, fled to Ching. [Wei] put to death the grand-administrator, Pih Chow-le, in Këah; and there he buried the king, whom he called in consequence Këah-gaou. He sent an announcement [of the king's death] to Ch'ing, and Woo Keu asked what was said about who ought to be the successor. "Our great officer, Wei," was the reply, which Woo Keu changed into "King Kung's Wei is the first [in the line]."

'When Tsze-kan fled to Tsin, he had 5 chariots with him. Shuh-hëang caused him to receive the same allowance as the prince of Ts'in,—enough to each to support 100 men, on which Chaou Wan-taze observed that the prince of Ts'in Shuh-hëang replied, "Allowances was rich. are made according to the virtue [of the parties]; where their virtue is equal, according to their years; where their years are equal, according to their rank; to the sons of rulers of States, according to the State. I have not heard that they are to be regulated by a consideration of their wealth. Moreover, that [the prince of Ts'in left his State with 1000 charists shows how strong and powerful he was. And the ode (She, III. iii. ode VI. 5) says,

'He does not insult the wifeless or the widow' He does not fear the strong or the powerful.,

Ts'in and Ts'oo are peers." In accordance with this, How-tsze and Tsze-kan were made to take place according to their years. The former declined, saying, "I was afraid of being found fault with, and the prince of Ts'oo could find no safety [in his State]. We are therefore both here, and it is for you to assign us our places according to your pleasure. And does it not seem improper that I should be made equal to him who is a stranger? The historiographer Yih said, 'To whom will you show respect if not to a stranger?'"

'When king Ling of Ts'oo came to the rule of that State, Wei P'e was made chief minister, and Wei K'e-këang grand-administrator. Yëw Keih of Ch'ing went to Ts'oo to the funeral of Këah-gaou, and on a complimentary visit to the new ruler. On his return, he said to Tsze-ch'an, "Make all your preparations for travelling. The extravagance of the king of Ts'oo is excessive, and he is delighted with his position. He is sure to call the States together. We shall be going there in no time." Tsze-ch'an replied, "He cannot do that till some years have elapsed."

Par. 12. The Kung-tsze P'e here is the Tsze-kan mentioned in the Chuen on the prec. par. Chan Joh-shwuy ( ; Ming dyn.) says that this entry makes it clear that the death of the king of Ts'oo was a deed of atrocious wickedness. But the criticism is a very lame attempt to excuse the silence of the classic in reference to the true nature of that event.

[There is appended here:—'In the 12th month, when [the marquis of] Tsin had offered the winter sacrifice, Chaou-mang went to Nan-yang, to be present [at the sacrifice to] Mang Tsze-yu

2 In summer, Shuh Kung went to Tsin.

- 3 In autumn, Ching put to death its great officer, the Kungsun Hih.
- 4 In winter, the duke was going to Tsin, but when he got to the Ho, he returned; and K'e-sun Suh went to Tsin.

Par. 1. Han K'e was a son of Han Keueh or Han Hëen-tsze (韓厥, 韓原子), who retired from public life in the 7th year of duke Seang, and a younger brother of Han Woo-ke (韓無忌), known as Kung-tsuh Muh-tsze (公族母子). He is frequently mentioned as Han Seuen-tsze (韓宣子), and, on the death of (Thaou Woo in the end of last year, had succeeded to him as the principal minister of Tsin.

The Chuen says:—'The marquis of Tsin sent Han Scuen-taze on this complimentary visit (With reference to duke Chaou's accession), and he came also to inform Loo that the administration of Tsin was now in his hands;—which was acc. to rule. When he looked at the [yarious] documents in the charge of the grand historiographer, and the Ch'un Ts'ëw of Loo, he said, "The institutes of Chow are all in Loo. Now, indeed, I know the virtue of the duke of Chow, and how it was that [the House of] Chow altained to the royal dignity." The duke gave him an entertainment, at which Ke Woo-taze sang the last stauza of the Mëen (She, III, i. ode III.), and Han-tsze sang the Këoli kung (She, II. vii. ode IX.). [When Han-tsze had done], Ke Woo-tsze bowed to him saying, "I venture to make my acknowledgments for the kind seeling you express to our poor State. Our ruler may [now] have hope;" and he went on to sing the last stanza of the Tseeh (She, II. iv. ode VII.).

'When the entertainment was over, [Hantsze] went to a feast at Ke's, and praised a beautiful tree [in the garden]. Woo-tsze said, "Shall I not encourage the growth of this tree, so as not to forget the Këoh kung?" And he sang the Kan-t'ang (She, I. ii. ode V.), on which the other said, "I am not worthy of this. It is impossible for me to attain to be like the duke of Shaou."

'[From Loo] Seuen-tsze went on to Ts'e, and presented the marriage-offerings [of the marquis]. Visiting there Tsze-ya (the Kung-sun Tssou), [that prince] called [his son] Tsze-k'e and introduced him, when Seuen-tsze said, "Ho is not one who will preserve his family. He has not the air of a subject." Visiting Tsze-we (the Kung-sun Ch'ae), [that prince] introduced [his son] K'eang to him, of whom he said, "He is like Tsze-k'e." Many of the great officers laughed at these remafks, but Gan-tsze believed them, and said, "He is a superior man. A superior man is to be believed; he has means of knowing what he says."

'From Ts'e [Scuen-tsze] went on a complimentary visit to Wei, the marquis of which gave him an entertainment. Pih-kung Kwohtsze sang the Ke yuh (She, I. v. ode. I.), and Scuen-tsze the Muh kwa (I. v. ode X.)'

Tso-she says above that this visit of Han K'e was 'according to rule.' But he is in error. There is no other instance in the classic of the chief minister of the leading State going on a complimentary mission. It was below his dignity to do so. Han K'e probably took the step, thinking thereby to gratify the States and confirm their attachment to the failing fortunes of Tsin.

It is mentioned in the narrative that K'e presented the marriage offerings in Ts'e, the marquis of Tsin, heedless of the warnings of Tsze-ch'an and the physician of Ts'in, having now arranged to give a new mistress to his harem in the person of a lady of Ts'e. The sequel is appended:—'In summer, in the 4th month, Han Seu (Son of K'e) went to Ts'e to Ch'in Woo-yu meet the [marquis's] bride. escorted her—the young Këang—to Tsin, and was to be there till the completion of the marriage. She obtained favour with the marquis, who called her the young Ts'e. Thinking, however, on the circumstance that Woo-yu was not of the rank of minister, he seized him in Chung-too, but the young Këang pleaded for him saying, "The escort was chosen according to the rank of your officer who met me. [Ts'e] stood in awe of your great State, and thought that it also might make a change, and so the disorder arose."

Par. 2. The Chuen says:—'Shuh Kung [now] went to Tsin, to return the visit of Senen-tsze. The marquis sent to comfort and refresh him after the toils of his journey in the suburbs, but he declined the honour, saying, "When my ruler sent me to continue the old friendship [between our States], he gave me a strict charge that I should not presume to take the position of a guest. Let me communicate my message to your ministers, and the favour to our poor State will be great. I dare not trouble a messenger to come to the suburbs. Let me decline the honour." When a reception-house was assigned to him, he declined it, saying, "My ruler commissioned me to come here to continue the old friendship [between our States]. If I can but establish the friendly union, that is my reward. I dare not accept this great reception-house." Shuh-hëang said, "Tsze-shuh-tsze knows the rules of propriety. I have heard that loyalty and good faith are vessels containing the [principle of propriety, and that humility and submission are essential things in it. In declining [the honours offered to him], he is not forgetful of his State;—thus showing his loyalty and good faith. His State is the first consideration with him, and himself the last;—thus showing his humility and self-abasement. The ode (She, III. ii. ode IX. 3) says,

'Be reverently careful of your demeanour, In order to approximate to the virtuous.'

He is one who approximates to virtue."

Par. 3. The Chuen says:—'In autumn, the Kung-suu Hih was about to raise an insurrection, desiring to remove the chief of the Yëw clan, and to take his place [in the govt.]. His wound (See the 4th narrative after par. 3 of last year), however, broke out afresh, and he did not carry out his purpose. The Sze and the other great officers wished to put him to death; and when Tsze-ch'an, who was in the borders, heard of it, he was afrajd he should be too late, and hurried by rapid stages to the capital. [Arrived there], he sent an officer to enumerate in the following away his offences to Hih:—" At the time of the insurrection of Pih-yew (IX. xxx. 7), being occupied with the business of the great State, we did not punish you; but your insubordinate disposition is insatiable, and the State cannot endure you. Your taking it on yourself to attack Pihyëw was one offence; your contention with your cousin about his wife (See the 4th nar. after par. 8 of last year) was a second; your acting as if you had been the ruler at the covenant of Heun-suy (See the nar. after par. 4 of last year) was a third. With those three capital offences, how can the State endure you? If you do not quickly die [by your own hand], the great punishment will come upon you." Hih bowed twice with his head to the ground, and replied, "Death may occur any morning or evening; but do not you aid [the act of] Heaven by cruelty." Tsze-ch'an said, "Who of men is exempted from death? but that bad men should not die a natural death, is the appointment. He who does bad villainous things is a villain. If we do not aid Heaven, shall we aid him?" Hih then begged that [his son] Yin might be made superintendent of the market, and Tazech'an replied, "If Yin have ability, the ruler will give him office; if he have not, he will [at any time] follow you, morning or evening. You have no consideration of your offences; how do you continue making such requests? If you do not quickly die, the minister of Crime will visit

'In the 7th month, on Jin-yin, Hih strangled himself, and his body was exposed in the street of Chow-she, with [an inscription on] a board by it.'

Par. 4. The Chuen says:—'The young Këang, [married to the marquis] of Tsin, having died, the duke was proceeding to Tsin; but when he had gone to the Ho, the marquis sent Sze Wänpih to meet him, and decline his visit, saying, "She was not my equal wife. I beg you will not condescend to come further." On this the duke returned, and Ke-sun Suh proceeded to Tsin to present the grave-clothes [for the deceased.]

'Shuh-hëang spoke to the marquis about Ch'in Woo-yu, saying, "Of what offence was he guilty? You sent [a great officer of] a ducal clan to meet your bride, and [Ts'e] sent a great officer of the highest rank to escort her; and if you still say that was not respectful, you desire what was excessive. It was our State which was not respectful, and in scizing the messenger [of Ts'e], you are punishing him unjustly:—how can you thus be the lord of covenants? The young Këang moreover, explained and interceded for him." In winter, in the 10th month, Ch'in Woo-yu returned [to Ts'e]. In the 11th month, Yin Twan of Ch'ing went to Tsin, to present the condolences of that State.

Evidently duke Ch'aou was going to Tsin at this time, contrary to precedent and rule, demeaning himself to curry favour with the marquis; and he returned on receiving the rebuke. Kung-yang and the glossarist of Kuh-lëang strangely imagine that he returned because he was afraid that Tsin had an intention to seize him, and hold him a prisoner.

In the [duke's] third year, in spring, in the k month, on Ting-we, Yuen, viscount of T'ang,

In summer, Shuh Kung went to T'ang.

In the fifth month, there was the burial of duke T'ăng.

In autumn, the viscount of Little Choo came to 4 of Loo.

In the eighth month, there was a grand sacrifice 5

In winter there was a great fall of hail. K'wan, earl of North Yen, fled from his State to

The Chuen gives here the following narrative, which comes in before the death of the viscount of T'ang:—'In the 1st month of this year, Yew Keih of Ching went to Tsin, to attend the funeral of the young Keang, and was visited by Leang Ping and Chang Teili. The former said to him, "It is [too much] that you should have come here on this account." Tsze-t'ae-shuh (Yëw Keih) replied, "Could I have stopped away? Formerly, under the presidency of Wan and Seang, they made it their object not to trouble the States [too much], ordering the princes once in three years to send a complimentary visit, once in five years to appear in person at their court, to meet when there was business [to be done], and to covenant when there were cases of discordant [States to be dealt with]. When a ruler died, a great officer [was sent] to present condolences, and a minister to assist at the burial. When a ruler's wife died, a [simple] officer presented condolences, and a great officer attended the funeral. These rules were sufficient to illustrate the ceremonial observances, for orders as to what business was to be done, and to take measures in reference to the shortcomings [of States]. Nothing more was required; no extraordinary commands were given. But now, on the death of [this] favourite lady, we must not presume to regulate our services by her rank, but they must be the same as are due to a wife, the keeper [of the harem]. We are only afraid of being found offenders, and dare not shrink from any trouble. But as this young Këang found favour, and has died [thus soon], Ts'e is sure to propose a successor to her; and then on that occasion I shall come again to offer our congratulations, and shall not have had this journey only." Chang Teih said, "Good! I have heard your statement; but after this you will have nothing to do. This case may be illustrated by [the star] ho, according to the culmination of which the cold or the heat retires. Now the case has come to an extreme: —must there not be a recession? Tsin will lose the States. Though it seek to trouble them, it will not be able to do so." On this the two great officers withdrew; and Tsze t'ae-shuh | favour and admire it."

said to his people, "Chang Teih i place is notwithstanding, I app rear of superior men."

Tso-she says, 'The viscount been associated in covenants (1 [Seang] of Loo), and therefore t his name.'

Tso-she introduces here the narrative:—lst. 'The marquis of Ying to Tsin with the following s to be allowed to supply a successor [to the young Keang]:—"My rul to say, 'I wish to serve your lord and evening without tiring, and w presents and offerings so as no season; but there have been man my State, so that I have not beer myself]. 'Han Seuen-tsze made Shuh-l reply, saying, "It is the desire He is not able to discharge alone his altars; but being now in mo not ventured to prefer a request [ to the young Këang]. No kin greater than the message which has condescended to send. If y regard our poor State, and co giving a mistress to its harem, only, but all his ministers as we the benefit of your gift. Yea, fr downwards. [our former rulers]

'When the marriage was settled, Gan-tsze received the courtesy [of an entertainment], from which Shuh-heang followed him to the jesst. When they conversed together, Shuhbeing asked about the state of affairs in Ts'e, and Gan-taze replied, "This is its last age. know nothing but this,—that Ts'e will become the possession of the Chin family. The duke is throwing away his people, and they are turning to the Chin. Ts'e from of old has had four measures, the tow, the gow, the foo, and the chang. shing make a tow, and up to the foo, each measure w four times the preceding; and then ten foo make a chang. The Ch'in family makes each of the [first] three measures once again greater, so that the chang is [very] large, lending according to their own measure, and receiving back again according to the public measure. The wood on their hills and that in the markets is charged the same price, so that it costs no more in the market than on the hill. Their fish, salt, and Trogs cost the same [in the market as at the water]. The produce of the people's strength is divided into three parts, two of which are paid to the State, while only one is [left to them] for food and clothes. The [grain in the] ducal stores rots and is eaten by insects, while the three [classes of the] old are cold and starving. in all the markets of the State, [ordinary] shees are cheap, while those for criminals whose we have been cut off are dear. The common people and others groan bitterly [for all this], and there is one who shows an ardent sympathy for them. He loves them as a parent, and they go to him as a flowing stream. Though he wished not to win them to himself, how shall he escape doing so? There were Ke-pih, Chih-

Ping, Yu-suy, and Pih-he, whose help was given to duke Hoo and Tae-ke, and [now, in their spiritual influence,] they are [all] in Ts'e." 'Shuh-hëang said, "Yes; and even with our ducal House, this also is the last age. The warhorses are not yoked; the ministers never take the field. There are no men over the duke's chariots, no [proper] officers over the soldiers. The multitudes of the people are weary and worn, while the duke's mansions are multiplied and most costly. The people [feel], when they hear the duke's commands, as if they must escape from robbers and enemies. The Lwan, the Keoh, the Seu, the Yuen, the Hoo, the Suh, the King, and the Pih, are reduced to the Position of menials. The government is ordered by the Heads of the clans. The people have none on whom to rely. The ruler goes on from day to day without stop, burying all sorrow in pleasure. No future day need be waited for the humiliation of the ducal House. The inscription on the tripod of Ch'an says, 'You may get up early in the morning and become greatly distinguished, but in future generations your descendants] will still become idle.' Much more may we say that he who holds on [an evil course] from day to day without stopping cannot continue long." Gan-tsze then asked him what would become of himself, and Shuh-hëang replied, "The ducal clans of Tsin are at an end. I have heard that when the ducal House is about to be brought low, its clan-branches first fall to the ground, and that then the duke follows them. Of the same ducal ancestry with me were eleven clans, and only son. In the lawless course of the ducal House, I shall be fortunate if I die a natural death, for I shall have none to sacrifice to me."

'Before this, duke King had wished to change the residence of Gan-tsze, saying, "Your house is near the market, low, small, noisy, and dusty. You should not live in it. Let me change it for you for one bright and lofty." The officer, however, declined the offer, saying, "Your lordship's former minister, [my father], could bear it. I am not fit to be his successor; [the change which you propose] would be extravagance in me. And besides, a small man like me, living near the market, can get what I desire morning and evening, which is a benefit." I dare not trouble the people of the neighbour-The duke laughed and asked him whether, through his nearness to the market, he knew what things were cheap and what dear. "Since it is to my advantage to do so," was the reply, "should I dare not to know that?" "What things then are cheap, and what dear?" pursued the marquis. Now duke King punished so many that there were people who sold shoes for those whose toes had been cut off. Gan-taze therefore answered, "Shoes for people whose toes have been cut off are dear, and [other] shoes are cheap." As he had told this to his ruler, he mentioned it in his conversation with Shuh-hëang.

'In consequence of this remark, duke King more rarely inflicted punishments. The superior man may say, "How widely extends the benefit of a benevolent man's words! By one word of Gan-tsze the marquis of Ts'e was led to reduce the number of his punishments;—an illustration of the words of the ode (She, II. v. ode IV. 2),

'If he were to rejoice [in the words of the wise],
The disorder perhaps would disappear.'"

'When Gan-tsze [on this occasion] went to Tsin, the duke changed his house into a new one, so that it was completed on his return. After he had made his acknowledgments, however, [for the kindness], he pulled the house down, rebuilt the dwellings in the neighbourhood as they had been before, and sent to the old residents to return to them. [When they declined to do so], he said, "There is the common saying, 'It is not about the house that the tortoise-shell is consulted, but about the neighbours.' My friends, the tortoise shell was formerly consulted about this neighbourhood. To go against the divination is inauspicious; and that the superior man do not violate the rules of propriety, while smaller men do not incur the risk of what is inauspicious, is an old regulation; --- shall I dare to disobey it?" In the end, he brought them back to their old houses. The duke refused his sanction, but he granted it, when Gan-tsze got Ch'in Hwan-tsze to intercede with him.'

ping cannot continue long." Gan-tsze then sked him what would become of himself, and Shuh-hëang replied. "The ducal clans of Tsin are at an end. I have heard that when the ducal House is about to be brought low, its clan-branches first fall to the ground, and that then the duke follows them. Of the same ducal ancestry with me were eleven clans, and only the Yang-sheh remains. I moreover have no it, and do not forget it, and [now] bestow on you the lands of Chow, as a recompense for the old services of your [father]." Pih-shih bowed twice, with his head to the ground, received the tablet, and went out. The superior man will say on this, "How important to a man are the rules of propriety! Here was an extravagant man like Pih-shih, and to his once observing those rules in Tsin he was indebted for dignity and wealth in that State. Here surely was an illustration of what the ode (She, I. iv. Ode VIII. 3), says, 'If a man be not observant of propriety, Why does he not quickly die?'"

Before this the district of Chow had belonged to Lwan P'aou; and on the ruin of the Lwan family, Fan Seuen-tsze, Chaou Wan-tsze, and Han Seuen-tsze, all wished to have it. Wan-tsze said, "All Wan (Chow had once been part of it) belongs to me." The two Seuen-tsze said, "Since the time of Këoh Ch'ing, [Chow] has been handed down, separate [from Wan], in three There are other districts in Tsin, families. separated [in this way], and not Chow only; who can get the right to take the rule of them?" Wan-taze was vexed by this, but gave Chow up. The other two ministers said, "We ought not, having given a correct decision [in reference to his claim to take it to ourselves;" and so they all gave it up. When the administration [of Tsin] came into the hands of Wan-tsze, Chaou Hwoh advised him to take Chow, but he said to him, "Begone! The words of those two were righteous, and to oppose righteousness is the way to misery. I cannot rule properly my own district; of what use would Chow be to me? I should only thereby occasion misery to myself."

'The superior man may say on this, "His case is hard who does not know [whence misery will arise]. When one knows this and does not act accordingly, nothing can exceed the misery. There was a saying that [the possessor of] Chow was sure to die."

'Fung-she (Kung-sun Twan), according to his wont, was a guest with Han-she. His getting Chow was upon the request of Han Seuen-tsze in his behalf, to be the ground of his taking it [himself] again.'

Par. 2. The viscount of Tang had come to Loo to the funeral of duke Seang, and Loo now returns the compliment by sending a minister to attend his funeral. The one proceeding and the other were contrary to rule and precedent. The Chuen says:—'In the 5th month, Shuh Kung went to Tang, to the burial of duke Ching, Tsze-fuh Tseaou being the assistant commissioner. When they got to the suburbs, it happened to be the anniversary of the death of E-pih (Tsëaou's uncle), and King-tsze (Shuh Kung) proposed not to enter the city. Hwuhpih (Tsëaou), however, said, "We are on public business. Where there is a public benefit, there should be no recognition of one's private deathdays," With this he preceded the other, and received the reception-house [assigned to them]. King-tsze coming after him." See a somewhat different account of this matter in the Le Ke, II. ii. Bk. II. 26.

[We have two narratives appended here:—
1st. 'Han K'e of Tsin went to Ts'e, to meet the [marquis's] bride, when Kung-sun Ch'ae, because of the favour which the young Këang had found, substituted a daughter of his own for the duke's, whom he gave in marriage [to another husband]. Some people told Han K'e of the deceit put upon Tsin by Tsze-wei, and said that he should not accept the lady; but that minister replied, "I want to get [the adherence of ] Ts'e; and if I keep the favourite [minister] away from us [in that way], will the favourite come to us?"

2d. 'In autumn, in the 7th month, Han Hoo of Ching went to Tsin, to offer congratulations on the marquis's marriage. At the same time he made the following announcement; - "The people of Ts'oo are daily summoning our State, because we have not been to the court of their new king. If we go to Ts'oo, we are afraid of your ministers, lest they say that our ruler has done so because his heart is indeed set on that other alliance; while, if we do not go, there is the covenant of Sung. Whether we advance or retreat, we may be held offenders; and my ruler has instructed me to lay the case before you." Seuen-tsze made Shuli-hëang reply, "If your ruler condescends to be true to ours, his being in Ts'oo will do no harm;—it will be but observing the covenant of Sung. If he thinks of that covenant, our ruler knows that he will escape any charge of doing wrong [in regard to it]. If your ruler is not true [in heart] to ours, although he were to condescend morning and evening to come to our poor State, our ruler would be suspicious of him. If he be indeed true in heart, there was no necessity for the trouble of this message. Let your ruler go to Ts'oo. If he be true to ours, his being in Ts'oo is the same as if he were in Tsin."

'[At this time], Chang Teih sent a messenger [to Ch'ing], to say to T'ae-shuh, "After you went back [to Ch'ing], I removed the dirt from the poor cottage of my father, saying to myself that you would be coming [again]; now it is Tsze-p'e who has come, and I am disappointed." T'ae-shuh replied, "My rank was too mean to get to come [on this occasion]. We were in awe of your great State, and [wanted] to honour the [new] wife; and moreover you said that I should have nothing [more] to do. It has nearly proved so with me."']

Par. 4. This was duke Muh (程 公) of Little Choo, who appeared now at the court of Loo, to congratulate duke Ch'aou on his accession. The Chuen says:—' Ke Woo-tsze proposed to give the viscount a very slender reception; but Muh-shuh said, "No. Since Ts sou, Ting. and the two Choos, do not forget their old friendship with us, we should meet them with respect, and even more, fearful of their being alienated from us. And moreover, if we receive in a humbling way one of those friendly States, we shall provoke the others, our friends, [10] fall away]. We should show greater respect than in any former time. It is said in a Book, 'No calamities befal the respectful;' and also, 'They who meet the comer respectfully receive blessing from Heaven.'" Ke-sun followed this advice.

Par. 5. Tso-she says that there was now 'a drought.' Of the 21 instances of this sacrifice for rain, which are mentioned in the classic, 7 occur during the time of duke Ch'aou, and Tso leaves only the one in the 8th year unnoted as a time of 'drought.'

[We have a narrative appended with reference to the fortunes of Loo-poor Picel whose banish.

the northern borders of Ts'e is mentioned d narrative appended to the Chuen on iii. 6:— The marquis of Ts'e was hunt-Këa, when Loo-poo Pëch sought an ction to him, and begged with tears night be permitted to return], saying, my hair so short and thin, what can I o?" The marquis replied, as if assentt he would inform the two ministers of did tell them accordingly on his return, e-wei was willing that P'ech should be to come back, but Tsze-ya objected, " His hair may be short, but his heart long. Perhaps he will [still] make our his beds (See the Chuen on IX. xxviii. the 9th month, Tsze-ya drove Loo-p'oo North Yen.'

Here and in par. 1. of next year, the ne verb. The hail, we must understand, y large; and we must also remember ough it was now the winter of Chow, braced two months of autumn.

The Chuen says:—'Duke K'ëen of I many favourites, and wanted to make ith all the great officers, and appoint urites in their room. The great officers in consequence], and killed those favourwere of other surnames than their own. to was frightened, and fled to Ts'e. The style of the text, that "The earl of Yen, K'wan, fled to Ts'e, is condemnatory of him." The K'ang-he editors object to this judgment of Tso-she on the words of the text, and expunge it from their edition of the Ch'un Ts'ëw. They will not have it supposed that the sage could, on any grounds, sanction a proceeding of rebellious opposition to a ruler.

There are here two narratives:—

ist. 'In the tenth month the earl of Ching went to Ts'oo, with Tsze-ch'an in attendance on him. The viscount entertained him, and sang the Keih jih (She, II. iii. ode VI.) When the entertainment was over, Tsze-ch'an proceeded to make the preparations for a hunt. The king then hunted along [the marsh of] Mung (See on the Shoo, III i. Pt. i. 50), on the south of the Këang, [having the earl] with him.'

2d. 'Kung-sun Tsaou of Ts'e having died, Tsaou, minister of War, visited Gan-tsze, and said, "We have further lost Tsze-ya." Gantsze replied, "Alas! [his son] Tsze-k'e will not escape [an evil end]. It is a perilous time! The House of Këang is weak, and that of Kwei will begin to flourish. While the two [grandsons of duke Hwuy were strong and vigorous, they might make head, and now there is the weakness induced by the loss of this one. The

1 In the [duke's] fourth year, in spring, in the king's first month, there was a great fall of hail.

In summer, the viscount of Ts'oo, the marquises of Ts'ae and Ch'in, the earl of Ch'ing, the baron of Heu, the viscounts of Seu, T'ang, Tun, Hoo, Shin, and Little Choo, Tso, heir-son of Sung, and [the chiefs of] the wild tribes of the Hwae, had a meeting in Shin.

3 The people seized and held the viscount of Seu.

In autumn, in the seventh month, the viscount of Ts'oo, the marquises of Ts'ac and Ch'in, the baron of Heu, the viscounts of Tun, Hoo, and Shin, and [the chiefs of] the wild tribes of the Hwae, invaded Woo.

5 They seized King Fung of Tsie, and put him to death.

6 They then went on to extinguish Lae.

7 In the ninth month, we took Tsang.

8 In winter, in the twelfth month, on Yih-maou, Shuh-sun P'aou died.

Par, 1. Too says that there ought now to have len snow and not hail, and the fall of the hail recorded as a calamity. Kaou K'ang connects par, with the 6th of last year, and supposes the hail had continued to fall all the winter. Its would account reasonably for the notice the phænomenon.

The Chuen says:—Ke Woo-tsze asked Shining whether the hail could be stopped, and was swered, "When a sage is in the highest place, ere is no hail; or if some should happen to li, it does not amount to a calamity. Anciently, they stored up the ice, when the sun was in his northern path; and they brought it out when he was in his western, and [the Kwei ( ) constellation] was seen [in the east] in the morning. At the storing of the ice, they took it from the low valleys of the deep hills, where the cold was most intense and as it were shut in; and when it was brought out, the dignitaries and place-men of the court, in their entertainment of guests, for their food, on occasions of death and of sacrifice, shared in the use of it. At the storing of it, a black bull and black millet were presented to the Ruler of cold; and when it was brought out, a bow of peach wood and arrows of thorn were employed to put away calamitous influences. For the delivery and the storing of it there were their seasons; and it was given to all who were entitled by their station to eat flesh. Great officers and their declared wives used it in their washings on occasions of death. deposited with a sacrifice to the [Ruler of] cold; the depositories were opened with the offering The duke first used it, and when of a lamb. Ho made its appearance, it was [star] the From the commissioned [great] distributed. officers and their wives, down to officers retired from age or illness, all received the ice. The commissioners of hills took it; the officers of districts sent it on; the cart-men received it; and the inferior servants stored it. Now it is the [cold] wind which makes the ice strong; and it was when the [warm] winds [prevailed], that it was brought forth. The depositories were made close; the use of it was very extensive. In consequence there was no heat out of course in the winter; no lurking cold in the summer; no biting winds in the spring; and no pitiless rains in the autumn. When thunder came, it was not with a shaking crash. were no calamitous hoarfrosts and hail. Pestilences did not descend [on the land]. people died no premature deaths.

'But now the ice of the streams and pools is what is stored up; [much also] is cast away and not used. The winds go abroad as they ought not to do and carry death with them; so does the thunder come with shaking crash. Who can put a stop to this plague of hail? The last stanza of the Ts'ih yuch (She, I. xv. ode I.) shows the method of storing ice."

[We have here a long narrative about a fur-ther step on the part of Ts'00 towards wresting the presidency of the States from Tsin :- 'In the 1st month, the baron of Heu went to Ts'oo, where the viscount detained him, going on also to detain the earl of Ching, with whom he again hunted on the south of the Këang, having the baron of Heu with them. [At the same time] he sent Tsëaou Keu to Tsin, to ask from that Power the attendance of the States, the above two princes waiting in Ts'oo for the answer. Tsëaou Keu delivered his message in the followregard new derivered his message in the following terms:—"My ruler has sent me to say in his own words, 'Formerly your lordship's kindness granted the covenant of Sung, by which it was agreed that the States which adhered to Tsin and Ts'00 respectively should appear at the courts of both. Because of the troubles occurring from year to year, I wish to knit more closely a good understanding with the princes, and have sent Keu to ask from you an opportunity to do so. If your lordship have no anxiety in regard to the States around you, I wish to borrow your favour to make a request of the various princes." The marquis of Tsin wanted to give a refusal to this application, but the marshal How said to him, "Do not do so. The [course of the] king of Ts oo is extravagant. Heaven perhaps wishes, by gratifying his ambition, to increase the poison of his [mood], and send down punishment on him. That we cannot know, nor can we know whether it means to grant him a [peaceful] end. But Tsin and Ts'oo depend on the aid of Heaven for the superiority of the one over the other. Let us not quarrel with it, but let your lord-hip grant the [king's] request, and cultivate your virtue, while we wait and see to what he will turn. If he turn to virtue, even we will serve him, and how much more will the States do so! If he go on to licentiousness and oppression, Ts'oo itself will abandon him, and we shall have no one to contend with."

'The marquis said, "Tsin has three securities against peril, and needs not to fear an enemy. There are the mountainous passes of the State; its many horses; and the many troubles of Ts'e and Ts'oo. With these three securities, we must be successful in every direction." The marshal replied, "Trust in mountains and in horses, and to calculate on the difficulties of neighbouring States, are three sources of peril. The four Yoh, San-t'oo, Yang-shing, T'ae-shih, mount King, and Chung-nan, are the most difficult mountains of the 9 provinces, and they do not all belong to one surname. The northern region of K'e is most noted for its production of horses, but no [distinguished] State has there A trust in mountains and horses cannot be considered a sure one. So it has been from of old, and therefore the ancient kings made the cultivation of virtue their object, in order to affect both Spirits and men. I have not heard that they made it their object to have difficult mountains and horses. And [the result of] the difficulties of neighbouring States cannot be calculated on. They may have many difficulties, which will issue [only] in strengthening them and the enlargement of their boundaries; or they may have no difficulties, and the result will be their ruin, and their losing the boundaries of which they were in charge. How is it possible to foresee the [issue of such] difficultiee? Ts'e had the troubles with Chung-sun (The Kungsun Woo-che, who was marquis of Ts'e for a month; see the 9th year of duke Chwang), and the result was that it got duke Hwan, whose influence on it extends till now. Tsin had the troubles of Le and P'ei (Le K'ih and P'ei Ch'ing; see the 9th and other years of duke He), and the result was that it got duke Wan, through whom it became lord of covenants. Wei and Hing had no troubles [of the same kind], and yet their enemies brought them to ruin. The yet their enemies brought them to ruin. difficulties of others therefore cannot be calculated on. If you trust in the three things you have mentioned, and do not diligently attend to the duties of government and to virtue, we shall find that the danger of ruin leaves us no leisure for anything but to escape from it:-how can you speak of our being sure of success? Let your lordship grant the request [of Ts'00]. Chow acted licentiously and oppressively, while king Wan behaved kindly and harmoniously, and the result was the fall of Yin and the rise of Chow. How then should you quarrel about the States?"

'Accordingly, [it was resolved to] grant the request of Ts'00, and Shuh-hëang was appointed to give the following reply, "Our ruler, being occupied with the business of his altars, has not been able always to visit [your court] in spring and autumn. Your ruler in fact has the States; there was no necessity to take the trouble of your message." Tsëaou Keu then proceeded to beg a marriage with a daughter of Tsin [on the part of his king], to which the marquis agreed.

'The viscount of Ts'oo asked Tsze-ch'an whether Tsin would grant him the States. "It will," said that minister. "The ruler occupies himself only with small matters, and does not think about the States. His great officers have many desires of their own, and not one seeks to correct his ruler's [errors]. At the covenant of Sung it said also that [Tsin and Ts'00] were as one. If it do not grant your request, of what use will that [covenant] have been?" The king further asked whether the States would come [at his call]. "They are sure to come," replied Isse-ch'an. "In obedience to the covenant of Sung; to gratify your lordship; not standing in fear of the great State:—why should they not come? Perhaps Loo, Wei, Ts'aou, and Choo may not come. Ts'aou stands in fear of Sung; Choo stands in fear of Loo; Loo and Wei are pressed on by Ts'e, and the best-affected to Tsin. Only these will not come. The others are under your influence;—what one of them will not come?" The king said, "Then, may I succeed in all that I seek for?" "Not," was the reply, "if you seek from others for your own gratification; but if you seek what they and you wish and can share together, you will be entirely successful." ']

Par. 2. We have here the result of Ts'oo's application to Tsin for the presidency of the States. Of the northern States, however, only Ts'ae, Ch'in, Ch'ing, and Heu responded to its call, for Little Choo is hardly to be taken account of, and the princes of Ch'ing and Heu were in a manner detained and obliged to be present at the meeting.

At the commencement of the Ch'un Ts'ëw period, Shin was a marquisate, held by Këangs, having for its capital Sëay ( ), 20 le to the north of the dep. city of Nan-yang, Ho-nan. In the Chuen at the end of I!I. vi. we find it invaded by the then king of Ts'oo, who seems to have extinguished it, and incorporated it with his own State.

The Chuen says:—'In summer, the [other] princes of the States went to Ts'oo, but those of Loo, Wei, Ts'aou and Choo did not attend the meeting, Ts'aou and Choo declining on account of troubles, the duke on the ground of the seasonal sacrifice, and the marquis of Wei on the ground that he was ill. The earl of Ch'ing preceded the others, and was waiting at Shin, where in the sixth month, on Ping-woo, the viscount of Ts'oo assembled the States.

'Taësou Këu said to him "I have heard that with the States the thing which regulates their preference and adhesion is the ceremonies which are observed to them. Your lordship has now got them for the first time, and must be careful of your ceremonies. Whether you will secure the Presidency of the States or not depends on this meeting. K'e of the Hea dynasty gave the entertainment of Keun-t'ae; T'ang of the Shang dynasty gave his commands at King-poh; Woo of Chow issued his declaration at Mang-tsin; [king] Ch'ing had the review at K'e-yang; [king] K'ang held his audience in the palace of Fang; [king] Muh had the meeting at mount Tion; Hwan of Tsie had the campaign of Shaou-ling; and Wan of Tsin had the covenant of Tseen-t'oo:—the ceremonies of which of those occasions will your lordship use? Hëang Seuh of Sung and Kung-sun K'eaou of Ch'ing are both here, the hest men of all the States. Let your lordship make a choice." The king said, "I will use those employed by Hwan of Ts'e."

'The king sent to ask the master of the Left and Tsze-ch'an about the ceremonies. master of the Left said, "They are what a small State practises, what a large State emplays. I will describe them according to my knowledge." He then exhibited six ceremonies for a duke assembling the States. Tsze-ch'an said, "A small State [like ours] discharges its duties. I will describe what we have observed." He then exhibited six ceremonies to be observed by earls, viscounts, and barons, at meetings with a duke. A superior man will say that the master of the Left—he of Hoh—knew well how to guard [the rules of] former dynasties. and that Tsze-ch'an knew well how to aid and direct a small State. The king caused Tseaou Keu to stand behind him, to regulate any errors [which they might make]; but the whole thing was concluded without any correction. The king asked him the reason, and he replied, "Those six ceremonies I had never seen; how could I make any correction?"

'The eldest son of [the duke of] Sung was late in arriving, and the king was then hunting in Woo-shing, so that he was long in giving him an interview. Tsësou Keu begged that he would send an explanation [of the delay], on which the king sent him to say, "It happens that we are engaged in the business of the ancestral temple at Woo-shing. My ruler must bury the offerings set forth [in the temple]:—I venture to apologize for the delay in seeing you." The viscount of Seu was the son of a daughter of Woo; and [the viscount of Ts oo], thinking that he was disaffected, caused him to be seized in Shin. He also displayed his extravagance to all the princes. Tsëaou Keu said to him, "The instances of the six kings and two dukes, [which I adduced], all illustrated the courtesy which they showed to the States, and were the reason of the States' accepting their commands. Këch of the Hëa dynasty held the meeting of Jing, and, the prince of Min revolted from him. Chow of the Shang dynasty held the review of Le, and the E of the east revolted from him. Yew of Chow made the covenant of Tae-shih, and the Jung and the Teih revolted from him. In all these cases, [those kings] showed to the States the extravagance [of their aims], and so it was that the States cast their commands away from them. Since your majesty is now showing your extravagance, will it not interfere with your success?"

'The king would not listen to him; and Tszech'an, seeing the master of the Left, said to him, "I am not troubled about Ts'oo. So extravagant, and deaf to remonstrance, [the king] will not endure more than ten years. The master of the Left replied, "Yes, but without ten years' extravagance his wickedness will not have reached far. When that has reached far, he will be cast off. So it is with goodness. When goodness has reached far, there ensue advancement and prosperity."

It deserves to be mentioned further that at this first meeting of the States called by Ts'oo we find that the wild tribes of the east were represented. We met before with an instance of the Teih being present at one of the meetings called by Tsin; but our knowledge of the fact was derived from the Chuen. No notice of it was taken in the text of the classic.

Parr. 4, 6. The Chuen says:- 'In autumn, in the 7th month, the viscount of Ts'oo, taking the princes [who had been present at Shin] with him, invaled Woo. The prince of Sung, however, and the earl of Ching returned to their States, before [the expedition set out]; but Hwa Fei-suy of Sung and a great officer of Ching accompanied it.

'[The viscount] made K'euh Shin lay siege to Choo-fang, which was reduced in the 8th month on Kësh-shin. King Fung was then seized (See the Chuen on IX. xxviii. 6), and the members of his clan exterminated. When [the viscount] was about to execute King Fung, Tsëaou Keu said to him, "I have heard that [only] he who is without flaw may [safely] execute another [publicly]. King Fung is here because of his opposition to [his ruler's] orders:—will he be willing to submit [quietly] to be executed? Of what use is it to publish his case before the States?" The king would not listen to this counsel, but made Fung go round [the encampment of ] the various States, with an axe upon his shoulder, and ordered him to say, "Let no one follow the example of King Fung of Ts'e, who murdered his ruler, despised the weakness of his young successor, and imposed a covenant on the great officers." King Fung, however, said, "Let no one follow the example of Wei, son by a concubine to king Kung of Ts'oo, who murdered Keun, his ruler and the son of his elder brother, and went on to impose a covenant upon the States." The king caused him to be quickly put to death; and then he proceeded with [the forces] of the States to extinguish Lac. The viscount of that State repaired to the army of the centre, with his hands bound behind him, and a peih in his mouth, followed by officers with the upper part of their bodies half-bared, and by a carriage with a coffin in it. The king asked Tsëaou Keu [what this meant], and was answered, "When king Ching reduced Heu (See the Chuen at the end of V. vi.), duke He of Heu appeared before him in this manner. The king loosed his bonds, received his peih, and burned his coffin." The king followed this example, and removed [the prince and people of ] Lae to Yen. As he wished to remove Heu to Lae, he made Tow Wei-kwei and the Kung-tsze K'e-tsih wall the city [for Heu], and returned [to Ts'00].

'Shin Woo-yu said, "The beginning of Ts'00's calamity will be here. [The king] called the princes, and came with them here, invading States and vanquishing them, and walling cities on the borders, while no one offered any opposition. The king will allow no resistance to his will; but will the people dwell [here quietly]? When the people refuse to dwell [quietly], who will be able to endure him? From that inability to endure the king's commands, calamity and dis-order will ensue."

For 賴 Kung and Kuh have 蘆. It was a small State, whose principal city was in the pres. dis. of Shang-shing (商城), in Kwang Chow ( ), Ho-nan.

Par. 7. Tsang; —see on IX. vi. 5, where it is said that Keu extinguished the State of Tsang.

Tsang from Keu. The Chuen says:- '[The words | that " in the 9th month we took Tsing, indicate the ease [with which the thing was Keu had been in confusion, and when done]. duke Choo-k'ëw obtained the rule of it, be showed no kindly treatment to Taking. In consequence of this, [the commandant of] Taking revolted, and came with it to Loo. Hence it is said, "We took it." Any reduction of a city where soldiers were not employed is expressed by this phrase.'

The Chuen takes us here to Ching and Taze-ch'an, and to Woo:—'Taze-ch'an of Ch'ing made [new and harder regulations for the] contributions from the k'èw (See on VIII. i. 4), on which the people of the State revited him, saying, "His father died on the road, and he himself is a scorpion's tail Issuing such orders for the State, what will the State do under them?" Tsze-kwan reported these remarks to Tsze-ch'an, who said, "There is no harm in it. If it only benefit the altars, I will either live or die. Moreover, I have heard that when the gooddoer does not change his measures, he can calculate on success. The people are not to be gratified in this; the measure must not be altered. The ode (A lost ode) says,

'If one's rules and righteousness be not in error.

Why regard the words of people.'

I will not change it."

Hwan Han (Tsze-k'wan) said, "The Kwoh, I apprehend, will be the first [of the families of Ching] to perish. The superior man makes laws with slight requirements. The danger is of his still desiring more. If he makes his laws at first under the influence of that desire, what will the danger not be? Of the Ke among the various States, Ts'ae, with Ts'aou and Tang, are likely to perish first. They are near [to great States] and observe no rules of propriety. Ching will perish before Wei, for it is near [to the great States], and has no [good] laws. If the government do not follow the [established] laws, but one may make new ones according to his own one may make new ones according to ms own mind, every one of the people has a mind of his own;—what place will be left for the ruler?" 'In winter, Woo invaded Ts'00, and entered [the cities of ] Keih, Leih, and Ma:—in return for the campaign of Choo-fang. Shay, director of Shin, hurried away with orders [from the King] to Hëa-juy. E-këw, director of Remonstrances, fortified Chung-le. Wei K'e-k'ëang fortified Ch'aou. Jen Tan fortified Chow-lae. The places in the east of the State could not be fortified because of the water. Pang-sing withdrew the troops from Lae.']

Par. 8. Shuh-sun Paou had been actively engaged in the business of the State from the 2d year of duke Seang. On the way in which he became Head of the Shuh-sun clan, see on VIII. xvi. 14. The Chuen here gives a strange narrative of his life :—'At an early period [of his life], Muh-tsze left [his brother], the Head of the Shuh-sun family, [and went to Tse]. When he had got to Kang-tsung [on his way], he met a woman, whom he asked to prepare some food for him, and then passed the night with her. She asked him where he was going; and when he told her all about it, she wept and said that Keu extinguished the State of Tsang. escorted him [part of the way]. He then went What Loo now took, therefore, was the city of to Ts'e, and married there a lady of the Kwoh family, by whom he had Mang-ping and Chungjin. [One night], he dreamt that the sky came down upon him, and [when he tried to hold it up], he was not able to do so. Looking round, he saw a man, black and hump-backed, with deep-set eyes, and a pig's mouth, to whom he called out, "Nëw, help me!" and on this he was able to hold the sky up. In the morning, he called all his followers, but there was no such man among them. He told them, however, to remember the circumstances, [which he had mentioned].

'When [his brother] Seuen-pih fled to Ts'e, he supplied him with food. Seuen-pih said to him, "Out of regard to [the services of] our father, Loo will preserve our ancestral temple, and is sure to call you back to it. If it call you, what will you do?" "It is what I have desired for long." was the reply. The people of Loo did call him, and he returned, without informing [his brother].

'When he had been appointed [a minister], the woman of Kang-tsung, with whom he had spent the night. [came and] presented him with a pheasant; and when he asked her whether she had a son, she replied, "My son is a big boy; he was able to carry the pheasant and follow me." Muh-tsze called for him, and as soon as he saw him, lo! it was the person he had seen in his dream. Without asking him, he called out to him,—"Nëw!" and the boy answered, "Here I am!" He then called all his followers, and made them look at him, after which he made him his waiting boy. The lad became a favourite with him, and, when grown up, was entrusted with the management of his house.

'The Kung-sun Ming had known Shuh-sun in Ts'e, and when, after his return [to Loo], he did not send for [his wife] Kwoh Kënng, Tszenning took her to himself. This enraged Shuh-sun, and it was not till his sons [by her] were grown up, that he sent for them.

'llaving hunted [on one occasion] in K'ëw-yëw, he became ill in consequence. The waiting-boy New had wanted to create a confusion in the nouse and get possession of it, and tried to force Mang to act with him, but he refused to do so. [Now]. Shuh-sun made a bell for Mang, [to celebrate the declaration of him as his successor], and said to him, "You have not yet had any intercourse with the great officers. them to an entertainment at which you may consecrate it." When all was made ready for this, [Mang-ping] sent New to ask his father to fix a day for the entertainment. New went in to the house, but did not see Shuh-sun, and then came out and appointed a day. When the guests arrived, [Shuh-sun] heard the sound of the bell, and New said to him, "Mang has got [the husband of] your northern wife as his guest." The father, in a rage, wanted to go to Mang's apartment], but New prevented him. However, when the guests were gone, he caused him to be seized and put to death outside [the house].

'New then tried likewise to force the second son to act with him, but he [also] refused. [Once], this Chung was looking about the duke's palace with the duke's charioteer, Lae-shoo, when the duke [saw him, and] gave him a ring. He sent New with it to show it to his father, and New went into the house, but did not show it; and when he came out, he told Chung, [as from his father], to wear it at his girdle. New then said to Shuh-sun, "Why did you introduce Chung [at the court]?" "What do you mean?" asked Shuh-sun. New replied, "If you did not introduce him, he has introduced himself. The duke gave him a ring, and he wears it at his girdle." On this Shuh-sun drove out Chung-jin, who fled to Ts'e.

'When his illness became severe, he ordered [Nëw] to call Chung [from Ts:e]. Nëw promised, but did not do it. Too Sëeh went to see Shuhsun, who told him how he was suffering from hunger and thirst, and gave him a spear, [with which to kill Nëw]. But Sëeh replied, "If you desire anything it will be brought you. Why must you seek to make away with him?"

'Nëw, giving out that the master was very ill and did not wish to see any one, made the attendants place the food in the two side-chambers, and retire; while he himself, instead of taking it in, emptied the dishes, replaced them, and ordered them to be removed. From Kweich'ow of the 12th month to Yih-maou, when he died, Shuh-sun had nothing to eat, Nëw raised [his son by a concubine], Ch'aou-tsze, to his place, and acted as manager and helper to him.

The duke commissioned Too Seem to bury Shuh-sun, but the waiting-lay New bribed Shuh-chung Ch'aou-tsze and Nan E, and got them to make Seëh odious to Ke-sun, and have him removed. Seeh was going to convey the coffin to the grave in the carriage [which the king had given to Muh-tsze], and to use all the ceremonies proper to a minister. Nan E, however, said to Ke-sun, "Shuh-sun never rode in this carriage; what is the use of employing it at his funeral? A carriage moreover, is not used at the funeral of our chief minister; is it not improper to use it at the funeral of an assistant-minister? Ke-sun said, "Yes," and ordered Seeh to leave the carriage out. But that officer would not do so. "The master," he said, "received his commission in the court, and went on a complimentary mission to the king. The king, thinking of the ancient services of his family, conferred this carriage upon him. When he returned with the report of his mission, he surrendered it to our ruler; but he did not dare to go against the king's order, and returned it, making the three [great] officers make a record of the matter. You were minister of Instruction, and wrote the name. master was minister of War, and made the chief of his subordinate officers write the royal gifts. Mang-sun was minister of Works, and recorded [my master's] service. If now that he is dead we do not use the carriage, we shall be casting away our ruler's orders. Since the record is in the public repository, if we do not use it, we shall be setting at nought the three [great] officers. When alive he did not presume to wear the robes given to him by the king, and if we do not put them on him, now that he is dead, of what use were they?" Accordingly, the carriage was used at the funeral.

'Ke-sun took counsel to do away with the army of the Centre; and Nëw said, "The master did certainly wish to do away with it."'

In the [duke's] fifth year, in spring, in the king's first month, we disbanded the army of the centre.

Ts'oo put to death its great officer, K'euh Shin.

The duke went to Tsin. 3

In summer, Mow-e of Keu came a fugitive [to Loo], giving 4 over to it [the cities of] Mow-low, Fang, and Tsze.

In autumn, in the seventh month, the duke arrived from 5 Tsin.

On Mow-shin, Shuh Kung led a force, and defeated an army 6 of Keu at Fun-ts'euen.

The earl of Ts'in died.

In winter, the viscount of Ts'oo, the marquises of Ts'ae and Ch'in, the viscounts of Tun and Shin, an officer of Seu, and an officer of Yueh, invaded Woo.

Par. 1. See the account of the formation of : 3d or army of the centre under IX. xi. 1. © Chuen here says:—'The disbanding of the my of the centre was to reduce [still] lower e ducal House. The disbanding was [promed] at the house of the She family, and elermined on at that of the Tsang.

'Formerly, when the army of the centre was irst constituted, the ducal House was [as it rere] divided into three parts, each [of the three amilies] having one of them. The Ke family look to itself all the men and contributions of its part. The Shuh-sun made [only] the lons and younger brothers of its part to be its subjects. The Mang took the one half. When they[now]disbanded that army, they divided [the prerogative of ] the ducal House into four parts, of which the [head of the] Ke family took two, and each of the other ministers one; but they all took the entire control of the men and their contributions, paying [only] a tribute to the duke. They gave a notice to Too Seeh, and required him to announce it to [Muh-tsze in] his coffin, to this effect, "You did desire the disbanding of the middle army. We have disbanded it, and therefore announce the thing to you." Too Sëeh said, "But my master did not wish the army to be disbanded, and therefore he insisted on the covenant at the gate of He's temple, and the imprecations in the street of Woo-foo (See on IX. xi. 1)." He then took the notice, and threw it on the ground, led [to the coffin] the officers [of Muh-taze], and wept over it.

'Shuh-chung-tsze said to Ke-sun, "I received a charge from my father Shuh-sun, that, in burying [a minister] who had not died a natural death from age, the coffin should be taken from the western gate [of the court.]" Ke-sun gave orders accordingly to Too Seeh; but that officer said, "The coffin of a minister, according to the rules of Loo, is taken from [the principal gate of ] the court. The government of the State is in your hands, but you have not changed this rule. If we notwithstanding [now] depart from it, we are airaid of dying [for it], and dare not follow your order." When the funeral was over, Seeh went away.

'[Soon after,] Chung [-jin, the second son of Muh-tsze by his Ts'e wife], arrived from Ts'e (See the Chuen at the end of last year), and Kesun proposed to appoint him in his father's place. Nan E, however, said to him, "The stronger the Shuh-sun, the weaker the Ke-sun. You had better simply take no knowledge of the disorder in that family." At the same time Nan E made the people of the State assist Nëw in an attack in the open space before the grand arsenal on Chung, who received an arrow in one of his eyes from the superintendent of the palace, and died. Nëw then took 30 towns in the eastern borders, [belonging to the Shuh-sun], and gave them to Nan E.

'Ch'aou-tsze [finally] succeeded to his father's place, when he gave audience to all the members of his clan, and said. "The waiting boy New has done evil to the House of Shuh-sun, and thrown into confusion the grand [principle of] natural order. Having put to death the children by the wife, and secured the succession to the son of a concubine, he has gone on to distribute its towns, that he might thereby get forgiveness for his offences. His crimes could not be more heinous, and we must quickly put him to death." Nëw got frightened, and fled to Ts'e, where he was killed, outside the gate between the two States, by the sons of Mang and Chung, who threw his head into a thorn tree near Ning-fung. Chung-ne said, "The conduct of Shuh-sun Ch'aou-tsze in not being influenced by services done to himself is what [few] could attain to." [The historiographer] Chow Jin has said, "The administrator of government does not reward services done to himself, nor does he punish his private wrongs." As the ode (She, III. iii. ode IL 2) says,

> "To an evident virtuous conduct All States render their homage!"

'At an earlier period, on the birth of Muhtaze, [his father] Chwang-shuh, consulted the Chow Yih by the reeds about him, and got the diagram Ming-e (明夷; 些), which then became K'ëen (講; 三). He showed this to the diviner Ts'oo K'ëw, who said, "This [son] will have to leave [the State], but he will return and offer the sacrifices to you. The entrance of a slanderer, of the name of New, will be sufficient to make him die of starvation. [The diagram] Ming-e relates to the sun. The solar numbers are 10. Hence there are 10 periods in the day, which correspond also to the ten ranks. Reckoning from the king downwards, the rank of duke is the 2d, and that of minister is the 3d. The highest point of the day is when the sun is in the meridian. When it is meal time. that represents the 2d rank; and early dawn represents the third. Ming-e's becoming K'ëen represents brightness, but that which is not yet fully developed,—corresponding, we may presume, to the early dawn. Therefore I say, [this child will be minister and] offer the sacrifices for you. [The diagram for] the sun's becoming K'ëen has its correspondency in a bird. Hence we read (On the lowest line of the diagram Ming-e), 'The brightness is injured in its flight.' And as the brightness is not fully developed, we read, 'It droops its wings.' There is an emblem of the movement of the sun, and hence we read, 'The superior man goes away.' This happens with the third rank, in the early dawn, and hence we read, "Three days he does not eat."

"[Again] Le (——, the lower half of Ming-e) represents fire, and Kin (___, the lower half of K'ëen) represents a hill. Le is fire; fire burns the hill, and the hill is destroyed. But applied to men, [Kin] denotes speech, and destroying speech is slander. Hence we read, 'He goes whither he would; and to him, the lord, there is speech.' That speech must be slander. In [the diagram of the double Le (==) there is [mention made of ] a cow. The age is in disorder and slander overcomes; the overcoming goes on 10 dismemberment; and therefore I say, "His name will be Nëw ( bull or cow).' K'een denotes insufficiency. The flight is not high-Descending from on high, the wings do not reach far. Hence, while I say that this child will be your successor, yet you are the second minister, and he will fall somewhat short of your dignity."

Par. 2. The Chuen says:—'The viscount of Ts'00, considering that K'ëuh Shin was disaffected and leant towards Woo, put him to death. He then made K'euh Sang the Moh-gaou, and sent him, along with the chief minister, Tszetang, to Tsin to meet his bride. As they parsed by [the capital of] Ch'ing, the earl sent to pay the compliments of the journey to Tszetang at Fan, and to K'ëuh Sang at T'00-she. The marquis of Tsin escorted his daughter to Hing-k'ëw, where the earl of Ch'ing had an interview with him, with the attendance and under the direction of Tsze-ch'an.'

Par. 3. The Chuen says:—'The duke went to Tsin; and from his reception in the suburbe to the gifts at his departure, he did not fail in any point of ceremony. The marquis of Tsin said to Joo Shuh-ts'e, "Is not the marquis of Loo good at propriety?" "How does the marquis of Loo know propriety?" was the reply. "Wherefore [do you say so]?" asked the marquis. "Considering that, from his reception in the suburbs to the gifts at his departure be did not err in a single point, why should you #7 that he does not know propriety?" "That was deportment" said Shuh-ts'e, "and should not be called propriety. Propriety is that by which [a ruler] maintains his State, carries out his governmental orders, and does not lose his people. Now the government [of Loo] is ordered by the [three great] clans, and he cannot take it [from them]. There is Tsze-kea Ke, (A descendant of duke Chwang, called elsewhere Time këa E-pih) and he is not able to employ him. He violates the covenants of our great State, and exercises oppression on the small State [of Keu]; He makes his gain of the distresses of others, and is ignorant of his own. The [patrimony] of his House is divided into four parts, and [like of of ] the people he gets his food from others No one thinks of him, or takes any considers. tion for his future. The ruler of a State, calamity will come upon him, and he has no regard to what is proper for him to do. The beginning and end of his propriety should be in these matters fand in small particulars he practises deportment, as if that were all-important: is it not far from correct to say that he is well acquainted with propriety?"

The superior man will say that Shuh-how howed by these remarks that he knew propriety.' We have now a long narrative of a visit to Ts'oo by Han K'e and Shuh-hëang:—'Han Seven-tsze of Tsin went to Ts'on as escort to [the king's] bride, Shuh-hëang being the assistant commissioner. Tsze-p'e and Tsze-t'ae-shuh of Ching visited them on their journey at Sohshe, and the latter said to Shuh-hëang, "The extravagance of the king of Ts'oo is excessive; you must be on your guard against it." "His excessive extravagance," replied Shuh-hëang, "will be calamitous to himself, but how can it affect others? If we present our offerings, and be careful of our deportment, maintaining our good faith, and observing the rules of propriety, reverently attentive to our first proceedings and thinking at the same time of our last, so that all might be done over again; if we comply [with his requirements ] so as not to lose our decorum, and, while respectful, do not lose our dignity; if our communications be according to the lessons [of wisdom], our service be performed according to the laws of antiquity, and our duty be discharged according to [the rules of] the ancient kings, and regulated by a consideration of [what is due to our two States, however extravagant he be, what can he do to us?"

'When they arrived at [the capital of ] Ts'oo, the viscount gave audience to his great officers, and said, "Tsin is my enemy. If I can get my Will, I have no regard to anything else. who are now come from it are its highest minister and a great officer of the highest rank. If I [cut off his feet, and] make Han K'e a Janitor, and [castrate] Yang-sheh Heih and make him superintendent of my harem, that will be enough to disgrace Tsin, and I shall get my will. May it be done?" None of the great officers gave any reply, till Wei K'e-k'ëang said, "It may. If you are prepared for it, why may it not be done? But a common man may not be put to shame without preparations for 15, and how much less a State! On this account the sage kings made it their object to observe the rules of propriety, and did not seek to put People to shame. For appearances at court and complimentary visits there were the jade tokens of mak; for entertainments and receptions there were the semi-tokens; the small (= all the Princes) had to make a report of their duties; the great one (= the king) had to make tours to observe the merits [of the princes]; when the benches were spread [with the dishes], there was no leaning forward on them, and when the cup was filled, there was no drinking of it, [till the time came]; for feasts there was the provision of good gifts; for meals there were double the usual number of dishes; on the arrival of guests they Were met in the suburbs and condoled with on the toils of their journey, and at their departure, there were gifts presented to them. These embrace the most important usages of ceremony. The ruin of States and families has been from the neglect of these, which has given occasion to miseries and disorders.

'After the battle of Shing-puh, Tsin made no Preparations against Ts'00, and was defeated at Peih. After the battle of Peih, Ts'00 made no Preparations against Tsin, and was defeated at Yen. Since Yen, Tsin has not neglected its preparations, and has added to them the observance of propriety and a double measure of harmony in itself, so that Ts'oo had not been able to retaliate [for that defeat at Yen], but has sought marriage with Tsin. You have obtained that affinity of marriage, and you wish further to put Tsin to shame, thereby calling forth its violent animosity:—what preparations have you made for such an issue? If you have the men [to meet it], well:—put Tsin to shame. If you have them not, your lordship should consider well what you propose to do. In my opinion, the service which Tsin has done to you may be pronounced sufficient. You sought the States from it, and they have all come to you; you sought marriage with it, and it has sent you its daughter. Its ruler himself escorted her. Its highest minister and a great officer of the highest rank have come to the completion of the union; and still you wish to put it to shame. You must surely be prepared for such a thing; if you are not, what will be the consequences?

(Dalam Ham Mar Alama and Fin Ch

'Below Han K'e there are [in Tsin] Chaou Ching, Chung-hang Woo, Wei Shoo, Fan Yang, and Che Ying. Below Yang-sheh Heih there are K'e Woo, Chang Teili, Tseih T'an, Joo Ts'e, Lëang Ping, Chang Koh, Foo Leih, and Meaon Fun-hwang;—all of them the choice of all the States. Han Sëang is great officer of a ducal clan; Han Seu receives his ruler's orders, and goes forth with them to other States; Ke Sëang, Hing Tae, Shuh-k'in, Shuh-tsëaou, and Tsze-yu, all belong to great families. The Han draw their levies from seven cities, round each of which is a full district. The Yang-sheh embraces 4 clans, all consisting of strong families. If the people of Tsin lose Han K'e and Yang Heih, those 5 [other] ministers, and 8 [other] great officers, will give their aid to Han Seu and Yang-sheh. From their 10 families and 9 districts they can raise 900 chariots of war, while 4000 charlots will be left to guard the remaining 40 districts [of the State]. With their martial rage all in fury, they will come to be revenged for the great disgrace [put upon them]. With Pih-hwa to direct their plans, and with Chung-hang Pih and Wei Shoo to lead on their armies, they are sure to be successful. Your lordship intends to change the friendship of marriage for enmity, and violate all propriety to accelerate the approach of the enemy; and if you have not made preparations for such an issue, you will be sending all of us your servants, and leaving us to be captured, to gratify yourself. But what is there in this that may not be done?" The king said, "It was my error. Do not you, my great officers, trouble yourselves [any further]." He then treated Han-tsze with courtesy. He wished, however, to get a triumph over Shuhhëang on matters he might not be acquainted with, but was not able to do so; and he also showed great courtesy to him.

'When Han K'e was returning, the earl of Ch'ing came to Yu, to show him there the compliments of the journey; but Han declined to be introduced to him:—which was according to rule.'

There is another short narrative:— 'Han Hoo of Ching went to Ts'e, to marry a daughter of Tsze-we. Gan-tsze paid him frequent visits, and when Chin Hwan-tsze asked the reason, he replied, "He is able to employ good men;—he is a fitting lord of the people."

Par 8. Here for the first time in the text of the classic there appears the great State of Yuch, which was held by viscounts, who had the surname of See (1), and claimed to be descended from king Shaou-k'ang of the Headyn. Their capital was Hwuy-k'e (1), in the present dis. of Shan-yin (11) (2), dep. Shaou-hing (11), Cheb-këang. Yuch was helpful to Ts'oo, as a counterpoise to the power of Woo, and became subsequently a powerful antagonist of Ts'oo itself.

The Chuen says:—'In winter, in the 10th month, the viscount of Ts'00, along with several princes and [the chiefs of] the eastern E, invaded Woo, in retaliation for that State's taking Keih, Leih, and Ma (See the 2d narrative after par. 7 of last year). Wei Shay joined him with the army of Fan-yang at Hea-juy. Chang Showkwo, a great officer of Yueh, joined him with a force at No. Hearing that the army of Woo had come forth, Wei K'e-k'ëang led a force and pursued; but in his hurry he did not make [sufficient] preparations, and the men of Woo defeated him at Ts'eoh-gan. The viscount came by hasty stages to the bend of the Lo, and there the viscount of Woo sent his brother, Kwei-yaw, with refreshments for the troops. The people of Ts'oo seized him, and were about to smear their drums with his blood, when the king caused him to be asked whether he had consulted the tortoise-shell if his coming would be fortunate. Kwei-yew replied, "[We were told it would be fortunate. My ruler having heard that your learning was going to segulate your liste endrung was heritanens starit van en especie in this way. — I will as more send a member with milesiments to the servy [of Is'ee], and ak um to manditherve whether the king's saget be intime or slow, that we may make preparation mentionery. Hyenr heddiglid herr process, and received me, the mesenger, in a irenily way, that would have incread the feeling of case and indifference in our State, and it would have frequences that its rain night som kappen. Dat now your hedship is furiou, surcharged with tage as with thunder and ignining. You have spacemively seized me, and are gring to smear your drams with my blood: —Was will thus know what preparation to make. Feeble though our State is, with all its equipment pur early in good order, it may secut rest for its sensy. To be prepared alike for a difficult or for an easy contest may be said to to THE PERSON.

And moreover, the tortoise-shell was consulted with reference to the alters of Woo, and not for a single individual. If my blood be used to smear the drams of your army, and our Stage thereby knows to make preparations to meet all casualties, what could be more fortunate than this? The State has its carefully guarded shell, which in all things it consults. Who can calculate on the regularity of the good fortune or the evil? Sking-puh gave an ones, and the answer to it was at Peih. As to this present journey of mine, [Woo] will keep it in mind to make you a return for it." After this the envoy was not put to death.

'The army of Ts'oo crossed the river at the bend of the Lo, when Chih, director of Shin, effected a junction with the viscount at mount Lac. Wei Ke-k cang then led forward the arm of Fan-yang, and entered Nan-hwae, while the [rest of] the army followed as far as Joo-tring; but it was found that Woo could not be penetrated. The viscount therefore made [simply] a display of his troops at the hill of Ch'e-ke. 11 this campaign, Woo had made early preparations, so that Ts'oo was obliged to return without effecting anything, [only] taking Kwei-yĕw back with it. The viscount, being afraid of Woo, made Shay, the director of Shin, wait for order from him at Ch'aou, and Wei K'e-k'cang do the same at Yn-low:—which was according to rule."

[We have a short notice here about the prince of Ts'in, who fled to Tsin in the duke's lst year:—'How-taze of Ts'in returned again to his position in Ts'in;—in consequence of the death of duke King.']

- 1 In the duke's sixth year, in spring, in the king's first month, Yih-koo, earl of K'e, died.
- 2 There was the burial of duke King of Ts'in.

3 In summer, Ke-sun Suh went to Tsin.

- 4 There was the burial of duke Wan of K'e.
- 5 Hwa Hoh-pe of Sung fled from that State to Wei.
- 6 In autumn, in the ninth month, there was a grand sacrifice for rain.
- 7 Wei P'e of Ts'oo led a force and invaded Woo.
- 8 In winter, Shuh Kung went to Ts'oo.
- 9 The marquis of Ts'e invaded North Yen.

'ar. 1. Yih-koo is the viscount of K'e, who is to the court of Loo in the 29th year of ing. Here he is mentioned with the rank of L. The marquis of Tsin, interested in K'e ough his mother, had probably obtained the rancement of rank for the viscount.

Iso says, 'Duke Wan of K'e now died, and e duke] sent his condolences to that State as deceased ruler had covenanted with a marquis Loo:—which was according to rule.'

Par. 2. The Chuen says:—'A great officer nt to Ts'in, to attend the funeral of duke 1g;—which was according to rule.' This is first instance in the classic where the ial of an earl of Ts'in is mentioned. It was how, with the progress of time, the interirse between States at a considerable distance m one another was increasing.

We have here the following narrative about rocceding of Tsze-ch'an in Ch'ing:—'In the month, they cast [tripods] in Ching, with criptions [of crimes and their] punishments on them]. In consequence of this, Shuhug sent a letter to Tsze-ch'an, saying, "At * I considered you [as my model], but now The ancient kings 12 re ceased to do so. iberated on [all the circumstances], and ermined [on the punishment of crimes]; y did not make [general] laws of punishnt, fearing lest it should give rise to a contious spirit among the people. But still, as mes could not be prevented, they set up for m the barrier of righteousness, sought to ng them all to a conformity with their own titude, set before them the practice of proely, and the maintenance of good faith, and rished them with benevolence. They also tituted emoluments and places to encourage in to follow [their example], and laid down ictly punishments and penalties to awe them in excesses. Fearing lest these things should insufficient, they therefore taught the people e principles of ] sincerity, urged them by scriminations of conduct, instructed them what was most important, called for their vices in a spirit of harmony, came before in a spirit of reverence, met exigencies th vigour, and gave their decisions with firm-have sage and wise persons in the highest positions, intelligent discriminating persons in all offices, that elders should be distinguished for true-heartedness and good faith, and teachers for their gentle kindness. In this way the people could be successfully dealt with, and miseries and disorder be prevented from arising.

"When the people know what the exact laws are, they do not stand in awe of their superiors. They also come to have a contentious spirit, and make their appeal to the express words, hoping peradventure to be successful in their argument. They can no longer be managed. When the government of Hea had fallen into disorder, the penal code of Yu was made; under the same circumstances of Shang, the penal code of T'ang; and in Chow, the code of the nine punishments:—those three codes all originated in ages of decay. And now in your administration of Ching, you have made [your new arrangements for] dykes and ditches (See the narrative at the end of IX. xxx.), you have established your [new system of] governmental [requisitions], which has been so much spoken against (See the 1st narr. after iv. 7), and you have framed [this imitation of ] those 8 codes, casting your descriptions of [crimes and their] punishments:—will it not be difficult to keep the people quiet, as you wish to do? The ode (She, IV. i. [i.] ode VII.) says,

'I imitate, follow, and observe the virtue of king Wän,

And daily there is tranquillity in all the regions;'

and again (III. i. ode I. 7),

'Take your pattern from king Wan, And the myriad States will repose confidence in you.'

yours. I have heard the saying that 'When a State is about to perish, there will be many new enactments in it.' Is your proceeding an illustration of it?"'

'To this letter Tsze-ch'an returned the following reply, "As to what you say, I have not the talents nor the ability to act for posterity; my object is to save the present age. I cannot accept your instructions, but I dare not forget your great kindness."

'Sze Wän-pih said, "The Ho (Fire) star has made its appearance. Is there going to be fire in Ch'ing? Before the appearance of the Ho, it made use of fire to cast its punishment-tripods. If the Ho is an emblem of fire, must we not expect fire [in Ching]?"'].

Par. 3. The Chuen says:—'Ke-sun Suh went to Tsin, to make our acknowledgments for the lands of K'e, [which Mow-e had given over to Loo. The marquis gave him an entertainment at which there was more than the usual number of dishes. (In seeing this, he retired, and sent an internuncius to say, "In its service of [your] great State, [our] small State, if it can [only] escape measures of punishment, does not seek for any gifts. I should get no more than three rounds of the cup. But now there are more dishes than are sufficient for that, and I dare not accept [such distinction]:—would it not be an offence if I did so?" Han Scuen-tsze said, "Our ruler intended to promote your joy;" but [Woo-tsze] replied, "It is what my ruler would not [accept]; how much less dare I, who am but as a menial servant of [your] ruler, listen to such an addition to his gift!" He then firmly requested that the additional dishes might be removed, and only when that was done did he return to the completion of the entertainment. The people of Tsin, out of respect to the knowledge of propricty [which he thus showed], made the [usual] offerings of friendship to him very large.

Par. 5. The Chuen says:—'Lëw, master of the eunuchs, of Sung was a favourite, but was hated by Tso, [the duke's] eldest son; and Hwa Hoh-pe undertook to kill him. Lëw heard of it, dug a hole, killed a victim and buried [its blood], with the tablets [of a covenant] over it." He then informed the duke, saying, "Hoh-pe is about to bring back the fugitive (Hwa Shin; see on IX. xvii. 6) and his family, and has made a covenant to that effect in the northern suburbs." The duke sent to see, and [the evidence] was found, on which he drove out Hwa

Hoh-pe, who fled to Wei.

'On this, Hwa Hae (Younger brother of Hohpe) wished to get the office of master of the Right in the room [of Hoh-pe], and by agreement with the eunuch Lëw, came and gave confirmatory evidence, saying that he had heard of his brother's purpose for a long time; so the duke gave him the appointment. [Having received this], he went to see the master of the Left, who said to him, "A fellow like you is sure to come to ruin. You have ruined the members of your own House. What part have you in men, and what part have men in you? The ode (She, III. ii. ode X. 7) says,

'The circle of relatives is like a wall.

Do not let your wall be destroyed;

Do not, solitary, be consumed with terrors.'

You have reason to live in such terror!"'
[We have here two narratives:—

1st. 'In the 6th month, on Ping-seuh, a fire broke out in Ching (See the conclusion of the narrative after par. 2).'

2d. 'The Kung-tsze K'e-tsih went to Tin,to return the visit of Han-tsze. As he wu passing by [the capital of ] Ching, Han Hoo, Kung-sun K'ëaou, and Yëw Keih followed the earl to pay him the compliments of the journey & Cha; but he declined and would not presume to see them. [The earl], however, earnestly begged that he would do so, [which he did], behaving [w the earl] as if he were having an interview with [his own king]. [Afterwards] he had a private audience of [the earl], with eight of his change [as his offering]; he saw Tsze-p'e, as if he were seeing the highest minister [of Ts'00], with an offering of 6 horses; Tsze-ch'an, with 4; and Tset'ae-shuh with 2. He forbade his foragers, grooms, and fuel-collectors to go into the fields. No trees were to be cut down for fuel; no grain nor vegetables were to be gathered; no houses were to be unroofed; there was to be no violent begging. He made a declaration that whoever should violate his orders, if he were an officer, he should be dismissed, and if he were a smaller man, he should be reduced still lower. His men were to exercise no oppression where they lodged; hosts should not be troubled by their guests. In going and returning he observed these rales The three ministers of Ching all knew the he would [yet] be king [of Ts'oo].

When Han Seuen-tsze went to Ts'00, the did not meet him; and now when the Kung-ts K'e-tsih was come to the borders of Tsin, the marquis intended in the same way not to me him. Shuh-heang, however, said, "Ts'00 perverse, and we are correct:—why should initate its perversity? The ode (She, II. vi ode IX. 2) says,

'What you teach The people all imitate.'

Let us follow our own way; should we imitate the perversity of others? The Shoo says, 'The sage forms a pattern.' Instead of taking good men for our pattern, shall we find it in men where are perverse? If an ordinary man do what is good, the people will take him for their pattern—how much more will they do so in the case of the ruler of a State!"

'The marquis of Tsin was pleased, and control to meet the envoy accordingly'].

Par. 6. This sacrifice was offered because as Tso says, there was now 'a drought.'

Par. 7. The Chuen says:—'E-ts'00, of Seame on a complimentary visit to Ts'00, where he was seized by the viscount; but he effected his escape and returned home. The viscount fearing that Seu would revolt, sent Wei Sechtonivade it, when a body of men from Woo went to its aid. On this, Tsze-tang, the chief ministered has a force and invaded Woo. He collected his troops at Yu-chang, and halted at Kau-k'e-The men of Woo defeated his army at Fang chang, taking prisoner K'e-tsih, director of the palace stables. Tsze-tang laid the blane [1] the defeat] on Wei Seeh, and put him to death.

Par. 8. The says this was a complimental visit, and to offer Loo's condolences on the defeation would be condolenced on the defeation.

Par. 9. The Chuen says:—'In the 11's month, the marquis of Ts'e went to Tsin, to a leave to invade North Yen, when Sze Kae, in 'They will not enter [the capital of] Yen. Yen which was according to rule. The marquis having given his assent, in the 12th month the marquis of Ts'e invaded North Yen, intending to re-instate duke Këen. Gan-tsze said, has a ruler, and the people are not disaffected to him. or State knows its guilt, and dares not but sten to your orders. With some worthless <sup>ticles</sup> of our former rulers, we beg to apologize four offence." Kung-sun Seih said, "Having <sup>ceived</sup> its submission we can return; and when occasion is presented we can make [another] Ovement." In the 2d month, on Mow-woo, a Venant was made at Seu-shang. The people Yen sent to the marquis a daughter of their ling House, and the bribes of a yaou vase, a sket of jade, and a white jade goblet with h. He then returned [to Ts'e], without havsucceeded in his [professed] object.

According to this Chuen, the peace made in text was between North Yen and Ts'e, and must be supplied from the concluding r of last year. Kung-yang and Kuh-lëang, vever, took a different view, and supposed <sup>11</sup> Loo and Ts'e were the parties in the pacition;—a view in which they have been lowed by a host of critics. Certainly there many paragraphs in the classic where 'Loo' we' has to be supplied as the subject; and far this would be in analogy with them.

Par. 1. The Chuen says:—'This peace was Still there is no evidence of there being any hat Ts'e sought for. On Kwei-we, the mar-strife between Loo and Ts'e at this time, which halting at Kwoh, and the people of Yen | could furnish a reason for their making peace; ade proffers of accommodation, saying, "Our and considering the allusions to a peace between Yen and Ts'e in subsequent narratives, the view of Tso-she is decidedly to be preferred. No stress is to be laid on the use of , which simply - 1/2. The critics, who find mysteries in the terms of the classic, say that 🎉 is used from the standpoint of Loo, and E from the standpoint of the other party with which Loo has covenanted; that when Loo has taken the initiative, K is used, and where it has followed suit, we find 图.

There is here appended the following narrative about the king of Ts'00: -- 'When the viscount of Ts'00 was chief minister of the State, he had made for himself a royal flag which he used in hunting. The Woo-director, Woo-yu, broke [the staff of ] it, saying, "Two rulers in one State!this is what no one can endure." When the chief minister became king, he built the palace of Chang-liwa, and recalled [a number of] exiles to fill [the offices in] it, and among them was a janitor of Woo-yu, whose master tried to seize him. The [kings] officers would not give the man him. The [king's ] officers would not give the man up, saying, "It is a great offence to seize a man in the royal palace;" and with this they seized [Woo-yu, and carried him off], to lay the matter before the king. The king was about to fall to drinking, and Woo-yu defended himself, saying, "The dominion of the Son of Heaven extends everywhere; the princes of States have their own defined boundaries. This is the ancient within the State and the kingdom what rule;—within the State and the kingdom, what ground is there which is not the ruler's? What individual of all whom the ground supports is there that is not the ruler's subject? Hence the ode (She, II. vi. ode I. 2) says,

> Under the wide heavens All is the king's land. Along the coasts of the land All are the king's servants.

The day has its ten divisions of time, and of men there are the ten classes; and so it is that inferiors serve their superiors, and that superiors perform their duties to the Spirits. Hence, the king makes the duke (—the prince of a State) his servant; the duke, the great officer; the great officer, the [simple] officer; the officer, the lictor; the lictor, the crowd of underlings; the underling, the menials: the menial, the labourer; the labourer, the servant; the servant, the helper. There are also grooms for the horses, and shepherds for the cattle;—and thus there is provision for all things.

"Your officers say, 'Why do you seize a man in the king's palace?' but where else should I seize him? A law of king Wan of Chow says, "Make great inquisition for fugitives; and it was thus he got the kingdom. Our former ruler king Wan made the law of Puh-gow, which says, 'He with whom the thief conceals his booty is as guilty as the thief;' and it was he who extended his boundary to the Joo. If we are to accept what your officers say, we shall have no means of apprehending runaway servants; if we are to let them go without trying to apprehend them, we shall have no servants at all. There is surely some misconduct of your majesty's affairs here.

"Formerly when king Woo was enumerating the crimes of Chow, for the information of the princes, he said, 'Chow is the host of all the vagabonds under heaven, who collect about him as fish in the deep (See the Shoo, V. iii. 6).' On this account every one was willing to go to the death [against Chow). You, our ruler and king, have just begun to seek [the adherence amy, have just begun to seek the adherence of the States;—does it not seem improper in you to be imitating Chow? If we are to apprehend them according to the laws of the two Wan, there is [another] thief here!" The king said, "Take your servant and begone. That [other] thief is a favourite, and cannot yet be got!" With this he predend [Weenvil?]

this he pardoned [Woo-yu].']
Par. 2. The Chuen says:-

-'When the viscount of Ts'oo had completed the tower of Chang-hwa, he wished to have the princes of the States present at the inauguration feast. The grand-administrator Wei K'e-k'ëang, having said that he could secure the attendance of the marquis of Loo, came to Loo to call the duke, and made the following speech, "Your former ruler, duke Ching, gave his commands to our former great officer Ying-ts'e, to the effect that he would not forget the friendship between his predecessors and our rulers, and would send Hang-foo on a brightening visit to Ts'oo, to support and comfort its altars, in order that the peace of its people might be secured. Ying-ts'e received his commands at Shuh (See on VIII. ii. 9), brought them along with him, careful that nothing should be lost, and made an announcement of them in our ancestral temple. From that time our ruler, king Kung, looked with outstretched neck to the north, from day to day and month to month hoping [that the ruler of Loo would come to his court] In the order of succession four kings have since given our State one to the other, and the acceptable kindness [of Loo] has not come to us. Duke Seang alone condescended to come to the funeral [of our last king], and then our ruler and his ministers, in the grief of their hearts, were not able to take proper measures. They had not leisure to attend to the business of the altars, and much less were they able to show how they cherished and thought of his kindness. If now your lordship will direct your gemmeous steps, and condescend to visit our ruler, and extend your favouring influence to our State, so as to make good the agreement at Shuh, and reach to us with your acceptable kindness, our ruler will have received your favour, and not presume to look for anything like what was promised at Shuh. The Spirits of his predecessors will be pleased also, and feel their obliga-tion;—not he only will be indebted to you. If your lordship will not come, let me ask the time when we must put ourselves in motion. Our ruler will bring his hostages and offerings, and see you in Shuh, to beg from you the gift promised by your predecessor."

When the duke was about to go, he dreamt that duke Seang was offering [for his safe iourney] the sequidants the Selician for the safe iourney] journey] the sacrifice to the Spirits of the way.
[On this], Tsze Shin said, "You must not carry out the purpose of going. When duke Sēang was going to Ts'oo, he dreamt that the duke of Chow offered this sacrifice for him, und went accordingly. And now he himself is offering it for you. Your lordship must not go." Tszefuh Hwuy-pih, however, said, "You must go. Our former ruler had never gone to Ts'oo, and therefore the duke of Chow offered the sacrifice to lead him on. Duke Seang went to Ts'oo; and now he offers the sacrifice to lead you on the way. If you do not go [to Ts'oo], where should you go to?"

'In the 8d month, the duke went to Ts'oo. The earl of Ching paid him the compliments of the journey at Sze-che-lëang. Mang Hetsze, who was with the duke as assistant, could not direct the observances to be employed; and when they arrived at Ts'oo, he could not respond properly at the complimentary meeting in the suburbs.'

Par. 8. For 🚖, here and afterwards, Tso-she and Kuli-leang have 12. This was the son of Shuh-sun P'aou or Muh-tsze, raised to succeed his father by the 'waiting-boy New,' as related in the narrative at the end of the 5th year. Heis called generally in the Chuen by his posthumous title of Ch'aou-tsze (昭子).

,—see on V. iii. 6. Those who contend that the peace in the 1st par. was between Loo and Ts'e press this notice in support of their view, and understand that the covenant here was in confirmation of that peace. Tso-she says nothing on this par. is not decisive in the case. It is sometimes employed of the renewal or confirmation of a covenant (秦盟); but we find it employed also where there had been no previous agreement.

Par. 4. This eclipse took place in the forenoon of March 11th, B.c. 534.

The Chuen says:—'The marquis of Tsin asked Sze Wan-pih in whom [the omen of] the eclipse would be fulfilled, and was answered, "Loo and Wei will both feel its evil effects;-Wei to a greater extent, and Loo to a less "Why so?" said the marquis. "It went," sa Wan-pih, "from Wei on to Loo. There will be calamity in the former, and Loo will also feel it. The greater evil indicated is to light, perhaps, on the ruler of Wei, and [the less] on the highest minister of Loo." The marquis said, "What does the ode (She, II. iv. ode IX. 2) mean, when it says.

> 'When the sun is eclipsed, How bad it is!'

The officer replied, "It shows the effects of bad government. When there is not good govt. in a State, and good men are not employed, it brings reproof to itself from the calamity of the sun and moon. Government, therefore, must not in any wise be neglected. The three things to be specially attended to in it are-1st, the selection of good men [for office]; 2d, consideration of the people; and 3d, the right observance of the seasons."

[We have five narratives appended here:-

1st. 'An officer came to Loo from Tsin to settle the question about the lands of K'e (See on IX. xxix. 7), and Ke-sun was about to give Ching [up] to him. Seay Seih, who was holding that city for Mang-sun, objected, saying, "There is a saying that though a man have only knowledge enough to carry a pitcher, as he is in charge of it, he must not lend it to another; and it expresses what is proper. My master is and it expresses what is proper. My master is in attendance on our ruler; and if I lose the city of which I am in charge, [during his absence], even you yourself will be suspicious of me." Ke-sun replied, "Our ruler's being in Ts'00 is held by Tsin to be an offence; and if [in this matter] we do not listen to Tsin, Loo's offence will be aggravated. The army of Tsin will be upon us, and I am not prepared for it. We had better give the city [up], and when Tsin affords an opportunity, we can take it [again] from K'e. I will give you T'aou [instead];—when Ch'ing is got back, who will dare to hold it [but Mangns got back, who will dare to hold it [but Mang-sun]? You will thus get two Ching. Loo will not have to sorrow, and Mang-sun will have an additional city. Why should you be distressed [by what I propose]?" Seay Seih objected to Taou, because there was no hill near it, on which Ke-sun gave him the hills of Lae and He then removed to T'aou, and the officer of Tsin took Ching in behalf of Kie.

2d. 'The viscount of Ts'00 entertained the duke in his new tower, having a man with a long beard to direct [the ceremonies]. His gift of friendship [to the duke] was the [bow called] Ta-k'ëuh. He repented afterwards that he had Ta-këuh. He repented afterwards that he had given it, and Wei Ke-këang, having heard that he did so, visited the duke, who told him about it, on which he bowed, and offered his congratulations. "What is there to congratulate me about?" said the duke. "Ts'e, Tsin, and Yueh," replied K'e-k'ëang, "have wished to get this [bow] for a long time. Our ruler could not make up his mind to which to give it, and now he has given it to you. You must be prepared. he has given it to you. You must be prepared to withstand [the attempts of ] those three neighbours [to take it from you], and carefully guard the precious treasure." The duke on this got frightened, and returned the article.

8d. 'Tsze-ch'an having gone on a compli-mentary visit to Tsin, the marquis was then ill, and Han Seuen-tsze met the guest, and had a private conversation with him. "Our ruler." said he, "has been ill in bed, now for 3 months. We have been all running about and sacrificing to all the hills and streams in Tsin, but his illness has got worse instead of better. He has now dreamt that a yellow bear entered the door "With a prince so intelligent as your ruler," replied Tsze-ch'an, "and with the government in your hands, what evil devil can there be? Anciently, when Yaou put K wan to death on mount Yu, his spirit changed into a yellow bear, which entered into the abyss of Yu. He was under the Hea dynasty the assessor at its sacrifice to Heaven, and in fact the three dynasties all sacrificed to him. Tsin, though lord of covenants, has perhaps not yet sacrificed to him." Han Seuen-tsze on this offered the Hea sacrifice to Heaven, when the marquis became somewhat better, and gave to Tsze-ch'an the two square tripods of Keu.

'Tsze-ch'an, in behalf of Fung She, restored the lands of Chow (See the 2d narr. after iii. 2) to Han Seuen-tsze, saying "Formerly, your ruler, from regard to the ability with which Kung-sun Twan discharged his duties, conferred on him the lands of Chow. Now he has, unforon him the lands of Chow. Now he has, unfor-tunately, died an early death, and has not been able to enjoy long your ruler's kindness. His son does not presume to hold the lands. I do not presume to represent the matter to your ruler, and privately surrender them to you." Seuen-taze declined the proffer, but Tsze ch'an said to him, "People have the saying, 'The father split the firewood, and the son was not able to carry it.' She will be afraid lest he should not be able to sustain the weight of his father's office; how much less can he sustain the weight of that gift from your great State. Though it might be possible for him to do so, while the govt. is in your hands, yet with other men that will follow you, if there should come to be any words about border matters, our poor State will be held to be an offender, and the Fung family will experience the weight of [l'sin's] indignation. If you will take [back] Chow, you will save our poor State from any charge of offence, and you will make the Fung family stronger:—I venture to make it my request that you will do so." Seuen-tsze on this received Chow, and informed the marquis of it, who gave it to him. Because of what he had said before (See the narrative already referred to), however, he was distressed by the idea of holding it, and exchanged it with Yoh Ta-sin for the district of Yuen.'

4th. 'The people of Ching frightened one another about Pih-yëw (See on IX. xxx. 7), saying, "Pih-yëw is here!" on which they would all run off, not knowing where they were going In the 2d month of the year when the descriptions of punishments were cast (I.e., the last year), one man dreamt that Pih-yew walked by him in armour, and said, 'On Jin-taze I will kill Tae, and next year, on Jin-yin, I will kill Twan.' When Sze Tae did die on Jin-tsze, the terror of the people increased. [This year], in the month that Ts'e and Yen made peace, on Jin-yin, Kung-sun Twan died, and the people were still more frightened, till in the following month Tsze Ch'an appointed Kung-sun Seeh (Son of Tin-yew), las successors to death in the 19th year of duke Sëang), and Lëang Che (Son of Pih-yew), las successors to their fathers], in order to soothe the people, after which [their terrors] ceased. Tsze-t'se-shuh asked his reason for making these arrangments, and Tsze-ch'an replied, "When a ghost has a place to go to, it does not become an evil spirit. I have made such a place for the ghost." "But why have you done so with Kung-sun Seeh?" pursued T'me-suh. "To afford a reason for my conduct," was the reply, "I contrived that there might be such a reason, because of the unrighteousness [of Pih-yew]. The administrator of government has his proper course; and if he takes the con-trary one, it is that he may give pleasure [to the people]. If they are not pleased with him, they will not put confidence in him; and if they do not put confidence in him, they will not obey

'When Taze-ch'an went to Tsin, Chaou Kingtaze asked him whether it was possible for Pih-yew to become a ghost. "Yes," replied Tsze-ch'an. "When a man is born, [we see] in his first movements what is called the animal soul. After this has been produced, it is developed into what is called the spirit. By the use of things the subtle elements are multiplied, and the soul and spirit become strong. go on in this way, growing in etherealness and brightness, till they become [thoroughly] spirit-ual and intelligent. When an ordinary man or woman dies a violent death, the soul and spirit are still able to keep hanging about men in the shape of an evil apparition; how much more might this be expected in the case of Lëang Scaou, a descendant of our former ruler duke Muh, the grandson of Tsze-lcang, the son of Tsze-urh, all ministers of our State, engaged in its government for three generations! Although Ching be not great, and in fact, as the saying is, an insignificant State, yet belonging to a family which had held for three generations the handle of government, his use of things had been extensive, the subtle essences which he had imbibed had been many. His clan also was a great one, and his connexions were dis-tinguished. Is it not entirely reasonable that, having died a violent death, he should be a ghost?

5th. 'Among the members of Tsze-p'e's clan there were measureless drinkers, in consequence of which there arose enmity between Ma-sze and Tsze-p'e. In the month when the army of Ts'e

Han T'uy (a brother of Tsze-p'e), and fled to Tsin. Han Seuen-tsze asked Tsze-ch'an what rank should be assigned to him, and was answered, "He is a refugee with your ruler. If he be received by you so that he shall escape death, what rank will he dare to seek? It is the ancient rule, that when a minister withdraws [from his State], his rank becomes that of a great officer, and that criminals descend according to their crimes. In our State Soh was a great officer of the second degree. His office was that of Master of the Horse (Ma-sze, 馬 師). He fled after the commission of a crime. Assign to him whatever place you, as administrator of the govt-[of Tsin], please. If he escape death, your kindness will be great. How dare he beyond that ask for any rank?" Han Seuen-taze, out of regard to the ability of Tsze-ch'an, made Soh be ranked among great officers of the lowest degree. The Chuen says:—'In the 8th month, duke Seang of Wei died. One of the great officers of Tsin spake to Fan Ilëen-tsze, saying, "Wei's service of Tsin has been most faithful, and Tsin has not treated it with courteous propriety. It has protected its rebel (Sun Lin-foo; see on IX. xxvi. 2, et al.], and accepted his territory, causing disaffection among the States. The ode (She, II. i. ode iv. 3 and 2) and again,

'There is the wagtail on the plain;-A brother brings swift succour in difficulty :'

'On the dreaded occasions of death and mourning,
They are brothers who will greatly sym-

If we do not cultivate harmony with [the States of ] our brethren, and so do not condole with them [in their sorrows], how much more will we behave so to States that are not related to us! and who will seek our alliance? If now we go on to show discourtesy to the heir of that State is sure to revolt from us,-we shall be cutting ourselves off from the States." Hëen-tsze reported these remarks to Han Seuentsze, who was pleased with them, and sent Hëen-tsze to Wei to offer condolences, and also restored to it the lands of Ts'eih.

'Ts'e Goh of Wei went to announce the duke's death in Chow, and also begged an expression of [the king's] favour. The king sent duke Keen of Ching to Wei to present his condolences, and gave the following expression of his favour to the deceased duke Seang :- "My uncle has ascended in his reverence, and is at the right and left of the kings, my predecessors, to assist them in the service of God. I dare not forget [our ancestors] Kaou-yu and A-yu."' Par. 6. The Chuen says:—'In the 9th month, the duke arrived from Ts'oo. Mang He-tsze felt distressed that he had not been able to direct the ceremonial observances (See on par. 2), and set about learning them. If there were any one well skilled in them, he would repair to him. [Afterwards], when he was about to die, he called to him his great officers, and said to them, "[A knowledge of] propriety is the stem of a returned from Yen, Han Shoh (Ma-sze) killed man. Without it, it is impossible for him to stand firm. I have heard that there is arising a man of vast intelligence, called K'ung K'ëw, a descendant of the sage [T'ang], but whose family was driven [to Loo] from Sung. His antestor Fuh-foo Ho might have possessed Sung, but he resigned it to duke Le. After him there was Ching K'aou-foo who gave his aid to [the dukes Tae, Woo, and Seiten. He rose to the third degree of office, and with every step his humility increased. Hence the inscription on the tripod [in his ancestral temple] said, "When he got the 1st appointment, he walked with his head boweddown. When he got the 2d, with his shoulders bent; when he got the 3d, with his whole body bent. In this way he hurried along the walls, [aying to himself], "Thus no one will presume to despise me. I will have congee in this [boiler]; I will have gruel in this [boiler].—to satisfy my hunger (See the prolegomena to vol. IV., par. 18)." Such was his humility. [Now], Tung-sun Heih used to say, 'If a sagely man of brilliant virtue do not get distinguished in his time, among his posterity there is sure to be some one of vast intelligence.' This is now to be verified, probably, in K'ung K'ëw. If I get to die a natural death, you must put Yueh and Ho-ke under his charge, making them serve him and learn ceremonial observances from him, in order that they may be established in their places."

'In this way Mang E-tsze (Ho-ke) and Nankung King-shuh (Yueh) became disciples of Chung-ne. Chung-ne said, "He who can mend his errors is a superior man. The ode (She, II. i. ode I. 2) says,

'The officers have in them a model for imitation.'

Ming He-tsze may serve for such a model."'

[There is here a brief notice:—' Hëen, viscount of Shen, threw on one side his relatives, and employed refugees. This winter, in the 10th month, on Sin-yëw, the clans descended from [the dukes] Sëang and King, put duke Hëen to death, and appointed [his younger brother], duke Ching, in his room.']

Par. 7. The Chuen says:—'In the 11th month, Ke Woo-tsze died. The marquis of Tsin said to Pih-hëa, "What you said, when I asked you about the eclipse of the sun, has been fulfilled. May such verification be constantly calculated on?" "No," was the reply. "The six things are not the same. People's minds are not one. The order of things is not similar. Offices and duties are not of the same pattern. The beginning may be the same, and the end different. How can the verification be constantly calculated on? The ode (She, II. vi. ode I. 4) says,

'Some enjoy their ease and rest;
Some are all-worn in the service of the State.'

Such may be the difference of the end." "What do you mean by the six things?" said the marquis. Pih-hëa replied, 'The year, the seasons, the days, the months, the stars, and the zodiscal spaces." The duke continued, "Teil me more. What do you mean by saying that the zodiscal spaces are not the same?" "The conjunctions of the sun and moon," was the answer, "form what are called the zodiscal spaces. Hence they serve to order the regulation of the days [of the months]."

Par. 8. The Chuen says:—'The lady Këang, wife of duke Sëang of Wei, had no son, but his favourite, Chow-goh, bore to him, first of all, Chih. K'ung Ch'ing-teze dreamt that K'ang-shuh (The 1st marquis of Wei) told him that he must secure the succession to Yuen, adding, "I will make Ke's grandson Yu, and Sze Kow, his ministers." Sze Chaou also dreamt that K'ang-shuh said to him, "I will appoint your son Kow, and Yu, the great-grandson of K'ung Ching-ts'oo, to be ministers to Yuen." Chaou went to see Ch'ing-tsze, and told him this dream,—agreeing with that which he had had.

with that which he had had. 'In the year that Han Seuen-tsze became chief minister of Tsin, and went paying comp limentary visits to the States, Chow-goli bore a [second] son, and gave him the name of Yuen. The feet of Mang-chih were not good, so that he was feeble in walking. K'ung Ch'ing-taze consulted the Chow Yih by the recals, propounding the inquiry whether Yuen would enjoy the State of Wei, and preside over its altars; and he got the diagram Chun ( , ). propounded the inquiry whether he should set up Chih, and if this appointment would be acceptable, in answer to which he got Chun and then P'e (上人, 三三). He showed these results to Sze Chaou, who said, "Under Chun we have the words, 'Great and penetrating (元 亨; as if 'Great' were the name Yuen);' after this, can you have any doubts?" "But is it not," said Ch'ing-tsze, "a description of the elder?" "K'ang-shuh," was the reply, "so named him, and we may therefore interpret it of the superior. Mang is not a [complete] man; he cannot have a place in the ancestral temple; he cannot be pronounced the superior. And moreover, under Chun it is said, 'A prince must be set up.' If the heir were lucky, no other would have to be set up. That term indicates another, and not the heir. The same words occur in both your divinations. You must set up Yuen. K'ang-shuh commanded it, and both your diagrams direct it. When the reeds accorded with his dream, king Woo followed them. If you do not do so, what will you do? He who is feeble in walking must remain at home. The prince has to preside at the altars, to be present at sacrifices, take the charge of the people and officers, serve the Spirits, attend at conferences and visit other courts; how is it possible that he should remain at home? Is it not right that each [of the brothers] should have what is most advantageous to him?" In consequence of this, K'ung Chring-tsze appointed [Yuen or] duke Ling in his father's place; and in the 12th month, on Kwei-hae, duke Scang was buried.'

VIII. 1 In the [duke's] eighth year, in spring, Shaou, younger brother of the marquis of Ch'in, put to death Yen-sze, heir-son of the State.

In summer, in the fourth month, on Sin-ch'ow, Neih, marquis of Ch'in, died.

3 Shuh Kung went to Tsin.

4 The people of Ts'oo seized Kan Ching-sze, the messenger of Ch'in, and put him to death.

5 The Kung-tsze Lew of Ch'in fled from that State to Ch'ing.

6 In autumn, we held a review in Hung.

7 The people of Ch'in put to death its great officer, the Kung-tsze Kwo.

8 There was a grand sacrifice for rain.

In winter, in the tenth month, on Jin-woo, an army of Ts'oo extinguished Ch'in, seized the Kung-tsze Shaou and banished him to Yueh, and put to death K'ung Hwan.

10 There was the burial of duke Gae of Ch'in.

Parr. 1, 2, 4, 5. [The Chuen has a narrative of a stone talking, which has place here:—'This spring, a stone spoke in Wei-yu of Tsin. The marquis asked the music-master Kwang why it was that it did so, and was answered, "Stones cannot speak. Perhaps this was possessed [by a Spirit]. If not, then the people heard wrong. And yet I have heard, that when things are done out of season, and discontent and complaints are stirring among the people, then speechless things do speak. Now palaces are reared, lofty and extravagant, and the strength of the people is tasked to an exhausting degree. Discontent and complaints are everywhere rife, [people feeling that their life is not worth preserving. Is it not right that in such circumstances stones should speak?" At this time the marquis was engaged in building the palace of Sze-k'e.

'Shuh-hëang said, "The words of Tsze-yay (The music-master) show him to be a superior man. The words of a superior man are true and supported by evidence, so that they keep enmity far from his own person; but the words of a small person are false and without evidence, so that enmity and blame come upon himself. Herein we have an illustration of what is said in the ode (She, II. iv. ode X. 5),

'Alas that right words cannot be spoken,
Which come not from the tongue [only]!
The speakers of them are sure to suffer.
It is well for the words that can be spoken;
The artful speech flows like a stream,
And the speakers dwell thereby in prosperity.'

When this palace has been completed, the States are sure to revolt, and our ruler will bear the blame. This [the music-master] is aware of."']

This brother of the marquis of Ch'in appears in i. 2, as the Kung-tsze Shaou. The Chuen says:—'The head wife of duke Gae of Ch'in, a Ke of Ching, bore to him Yen-sze, [known as] Taou the eldest son. The second wife bore him the Kung-tsze Lëw, and the third bore him the Kung-tsze Shing. The second wife was the favourite, and Lew in consequence had more regard shown to him [than his brothers had], and was entrusted to the care of Shaou, minister of Instruction, and the Kung-tsze Kwo. [At this time], duke Gae was suffering from an incurable disease, and in the 3d month, on Këah-shin, the Kung-tszes Shaou and Kwo killed Taou the eldest son, Yen-sze, and raised the Kung-tsze Lew to his place.

'In summer, in the 4th month, on Sin-hae, duke Gae strangled himself.

'Kan Ching-sze went to Ts'oo to announce the marquis's death], and the appointment of a [new ruler]. The Kung-tsze Shing [at the same time] accused him to Ts'oo, where they seized and put him to death, on which the Kung-tsze Lëw fled to Ch'ing.

'The words of the text, "Shaou, brother of the marquis of Ch'in, killed its heir-son Yen-sze," show the guilt of Shaou, while the statement that "The viscount of Ts'oo seized Ch'n's messenger Kan Ching-sze, and put him to death," shows that the guilt did not rest on the messenger (?)

messenger (?).'

Par. 3. The Chuen says:—'Shuh Kung went to Tsin, to offer congratulations on [the completion of the palace of] Sze-k'e. Yëw Keih attended the earl of Ch'ing to Tsin, also to offer similar congratulations. The historiographer Chaou visited him, Tsze-t'ae-shuh, and said, "Most excessive is the delusion you practize on one another. The thing is matter for condolence, and yet you offer congratulations on it." The other replied, "How is it matter for condolence? It is not we only who offer congratulations on it. [All the States] under heaven are sure to do the same."

Par. 6. The Chuen says that at this review the leather or war-chariots, collected from Kinmow (On the east of Loo) to the borders of Shang (I. e., Sung) and Wei, amounted to a thousand. Hung was in Loo, but where it was exactly remains a matter of doubt. It is the name of the spring hunting, and many of the critics find matter for remark in the employment of the name for what was done in autumn, to the hunting in which the term is appropriate. But these terms are interchanged (Maou; in the sense which is the has here of a military review. Too explains it by ments of the army, and an examination of the chariots and horses.' Similarly, Kung-yang;—fin fit. Too thinks that the character 'grand' has been inadvertently omitted at the beginning of the par. Other critics call attention to the omission of , characteristic of this and other subsequent similar notices, accounting for it from the fact that the military power of Loo was now in the hands of the three families, and the ruler had nothing to do with it.

[We have a narrative here about affairs in Ts'e:—'In the 7th month, on Këah-seuh, Tszewe of Ts'e died. Tsze-k'e, wishing to take the regulation of his House, on Ting-ch'ow put we death Lëang Ying (Tsze-we's steward). In the 8th month, on Käng-sēuh, he drove out Tsze-ch'ing, Tsze-kuug, and Tsze-keu, all of whom came fugitives to Loo; and he then appointed a [new] steward for Tsze-lëang (Tszewe's son). [Tsze-lëang's] servants, however, said, "Our young master is grown up. His taking the direction of our House shows that he wishes to absorb it." They gave out the buff-coats, and were proceeding to attack

'Chin Hwan-tsze had been on good terms ith Tsze-we, and also gave out his buff-coats, tending to assist [the servants of Teze-leang]. ne told Tsze-k'e [of all this], and he did not elieve it; but when several men repeated the formation, he was about to go [to Tszeang's]. On the way several others brought in the same news, when he went to Ch'in's. wan-taze was then about to go out; but when e heard [that Tsze-k'e was coming to him], he urned back, put on his garments of ease, and net him. ['I'sze-k'e] begged him to tell him where he was going]. "I had heard," replied e, "that K'ëang [Tsze-lëang] had given out is buff-coats, and was going to attack you, Have you heard it?" Being answered, "No," he continued ], "Why should you not also give out your buff-coats, and allow me to follow you?" Tsze-kie said, "Why should you do so? l have instructed that young gentleman, and, apprehensive lest that should not be enough, I have also shown him the favour of appointing [a skeward] for him. How would four quarreling] appear to his father? Why should you not tell him this? One of the Books of Chow (Shoo, V. ix. 6) says, ' Be kind to the unkindly, and stimulate the sluggish;'—it was thus that the doings of K'ang-shuh became so great." Hwan-tsze bowed with his forehead to the Found, saying, "[I'he dukes] K'ing and Ling will bless you. I also hope you will do thus. He then made peace between [the two families], as there had been before.']

Parr. 7, 9, Kung-yung has for fa. The Chuen says:—'The Kung-tsze Shaou of Chin laid the blame [of the murder of Yen-sze] on the Kung-tsze Kwo, and put him to death.

'In the 9th month, the Kung-tsze K'e-tsih of Ts'00 led a force, [as if] in support of [the Kung-] sun Woo (Yen-sze's son), and laid siege to [the capital of ] Ch'in, where he was joined by Tae Goh of Sung. In winter in the 11th month, on Jin-woo, he extinguished Ch'in. Yuen Kih a great officer of the lowest degree, master of [the duke's] chariots, [wanted to] kill horses and break articles of jade in pieces, bury [with the duke]. The people of Ts'oo rould have put him to death, when he asked cave to let the horses and jade alone. Afterards, he also begged that he might privately do his duty to his late ruler's corpse]; and aving done so in a tent, he wrapt a mourning and about his head, and fled.

'[The king of Ts'oo then] appointed Ch'uenang Seuh duke of Ch'in, saying it was because Seuh had not flattered him in the affair at Shing-keun (See after IX. xxvi. 4). When he was sitting near the king as they were drinking, the king said to him, "At the affair of Shing-keun, if you had known that I would reach my present position, would you then have given place to me?" Sëuh replied, "If I had known that you would reach your present position, I would have done my duty to the death, to secure the peace of the State of Ts.00.

'The marquis of Tsin asked the historiographer Chaou whether Chin was now indeed to perish, and was answered that its end was not yet. "Why [do you say so]?" asked the duke. The historiographer replied, "[The house of] Ch'in is a branch of the descendants of Chuenheuh. When the year [i. c.,-star, Jupiter] was in Shun-ho, [the dynasty of Chuen-heuh] was thereby extinguished; and the extinction of Ch'in will happen similarly. Now it is in Seih-muli, at the ford of the Milky Way;—[Chin] will still again arise. Moreover, the branch of the House of Ch'in which is in Ts'e will get the government of that State, and not till after that will Ch'in perish. From Moh to Koo-sow there was not [a chief of the family] who acted contrary to the laws [of Heaven]. Shun then renewed the family by his brilliant virtue, which secured the establishment [of his descendants] in Suy. From age to age they kept that State, till Chow conferred his surname on duke Hoo because of his freedom from all excess, and made him sacrifice to the emperor Yu (Shun). I have heard that sacrifices to [an ancestor of] complete virtue continue for a hundred generations. The number of the generations of Yu is not yet complete. The continuation of them will be in Ts'e;—there are sufficient indications of that."

Many critics read the 10th par. as belonging to the preceding one, so that the burial of the marquis of Ch'in was the act of Ts'oo. There would be no difficulty in accepting this construction, but for the account in the Chuen, which ascribes the burial to Yuen Kih, an inferior officer of the deceased marquis. Too Yu understands the notice in the same way as the many similar ones of burials in this classic, and says that Loo sent a great officer to be present at it. The Kiang-he editors allow that the notice is to be accepted according to the analogy of similar ones, and yet they say that Loo did not by a representative take any part in the funeral! The entry was made, they fancy, 'by a change of the rule' for such notices, to disallow Ts'oo's extinction of the State of Ch'in!

1 In the [duke's] ninth year, in spring, Shuh Kung went to an interview with the viscount of Ts'oo in Ch'in.

2 Heu removed [its capital] to E.

3 In summer, in the fourth month, there was a fire in [the capital of] Ch'in.

4 In autumn, Chung-sun Këoh went to Ts'e.

5 In winter, we enclosed the park of Lang.

Par. 1. The Chuen says:—'This spring, hub Kung, Hwa Hae of Sung, Yëw Keih of hing, and Chaou Yen of Wei, had a meeting

This was not one of the formal meetings tunmoned by the ruling State, and therefore he text does not give the names of the ministra of other States who now repaired to Ch'in see the king of Ts'oo. His dealing with him had fluttered them all, and they hurried pay their respects to him. Compare VII. To mark the difference between this nd the other usage of , I have translated the am differently.

Par. 2. We saw, in VIII. xv. 11, how Heu, becape the pressure of Ching, moved from is original capital in the present Heu Chow, do-nan, to Sheh, which is still the name of a listrict, in Nan-yang dep. of the same province. The same cause operated to produce a removal, fill farther south and nearer to Ts'oo, to E, which had formerly been called Shing-foo, 70 south-east from Poh-chow ( ), dep. Ing-chow ( ), in Gan-hwuy. The move-int was carried out by Ts'oo but originated the desire of Heu itself: and hence the text the desire of Heu itself; and hence the text ribes it to Heu.

The Chuen says:—'In the 2d month, on ng-shin, the Kung-tsze K'e-tsih of Ts'oo noved [the capital of ] Heu to E i e to ng-shin, the Kung-tsze K'e-tsih of Ts'oo noved [the capital, of] Heu to E, i.e., to ing-foo, and took the lands of Chow-lae on north of the Hwae to increase its territory. O Keu delivered over those lands to the On of Heu; and [at the same time] Jen Tan oved the people of Shing-foo (I.e. E) to in, giving them in addition the lands of E on west of the Puh He also removed the people side [Ts'oo's] barrier wall to [the old capital Heu.'

We have here a narrative about the relations ween Chow and Tsin:—'The commandant Kan in Chow had a quarrel with Këa, the mandant of Yen in Tsin, about the lands of en; on which Lëang Ping and Chang Teih of ain led the Yin Jung to attack Ying. The ing then sent Hwan-pih of Chen to address he following remonstrance to Tsin:—"We [of how], from the time of the Hëa dynasty, in consequence of [the services of] How-tselh, had Wei, T'ae, Juy, K'e, and Peih as our territories on the west. When king Woo subdued Shang, P'oo-koo and Shang-yen were our territories on the east; Pa, Puh, Ts'oo, and Tang, our territories on the south; Shuh-shin, Yen, and Poh, our territories on the north:—no narrow limits could be assigned to our boundaries. When Wan, Woo, Ching, and Kiang granted fiefs to their own brothers, that they might be fences and screens to Chow, it was also as a precaution against weakness and losses [in the future]:—was it that they should be like the [first] cap for the hair which is subsequently thrown away? The ancient kings located T'aou-wuh in [one of ] the four distant regions, to encounter the sprites and other evil things (See on VI. xviii. 9), and so it was that the villains of the surname Yun dwelt in Kwa-chow. When [our] uncle, [your] duke Hwuy, returned from Ts'in (In the 15th year of duke He), he induced them to come in this direction (In He's 22d year), so that they have since pressed on all our Ke States, and entered our suburbs and the districts beyond them;—these the Jung have taken to themselves. That the Jung have thus [a footing in] the Middle State, whose is the blame? How-tseih [taught how to] divide the lands and sow grain all under heaven, and now the Jung regulate them after their own fashion; —is not the case a hard one? Let my uncle well consider it. I am to you as the cap or crown to the other garments, as the root to the tree, or the spring to the stream, as their counsellor to the people. If you tear the cap and break the crown in pieces, tear up the root, stop up the spring, and take it on you to cast the counsellor away, what can be expected by me, the One man, from the Jung and the Teili?"

'Shuh-hëang said to Seuen-tsze, "Even Wän, as leader of the States, was not able to change the order of the kingdom. He acted as the supporter of the son of Heaven, showing towards him extraordinary respect. Since the time of Wän, our virtue has decayed generation after generation, and we have tyrannized over and reduced lower and lower the Head of Chow, thereby proclaiming the extravagance of our course. Is it not right that the States should become disaffected to us? And moreover the king's words are right Do you consider the case well." Seuen-tsze was pleased; and as the king was then in mourning for one of the queen's kindred, he sent Chaou Ch'ing to Chow to offer condolences, and to surrender the lands of Yen, and present an offering of grave-clothes. He also sent back the captives of Ying. The king on his part made Pin Hwah seize Sëang, the commandant of Kan, to please Tsin, where, however, they treated him with courtesy, sending him afterwards back [to Chow].']

Par. 8. Kung and Kuh have here k instead of ...

The Chuen says:—'In the 4th month, there was a fire in Ch'in. P'e Tsaou of Ch'ing said, "In 5 years the State of Ch'in will be re-established; and after 52 years of re-establishment, it will finally perish." Tsze-ch'an asked the reason [of his saying so], and he replied, "Ch'in, (As representing the dynasty of Chuen-heuh), belongs to [the element of] water. Fire is the antagonistic [element] to water, and is under the regulation of Ts'oo (The rulers of Ts'oo being descended from Chuh-yung). Now the Ho [star] has appeared, and kindled this fire in Chin, [indicating] the expulsion of Ts'oo and the establishment of Chin. Antagonistic elements are ruled by the number five [in their conjunctions]; and therefore I say in 5 years. The year [-star] must five times come to Shun-ho, and then Chrin will finally perish, and Ts'oo be able to keep it in possession. This is the way of Heaven, and therefore I said 52 years."

Acc. to the explanation of Too, Jupiter was this year in Sing-ke (Sagittarius-Capricorn). In 5 years (Inclusive of the 1st and last), it would be in Ta-lëang (Aries-Taurus), when Chrin would be re-established; and in 4 years after it would be in Shun-ho (Cancer-Leo). When in 48 years it had been again 4 times in Shun-ho, these added to the above 4 years, give the 52 years mentioned.

In this par. and the 1st, as well as in the concluding par. of last year, the text continues to speak of Ch'in as if that State were still existing, after its extinction by Ts'oo. There would appear to be, it is thought, in this way of writing, some indication of Confucius' disapprobation of the procedure of Ts'oo.

[The Chuen appends here a narrative, which we find, with some differences, in the Le Ke, II., Pt. II. ii. 12:— Seun Ying of Tsin had gone to Ts'e, to meet his bride; and as he was returning, be died, in the 6th month, at He-yang. While his coffin remained unburied in Këang, the marquis was, [one day], drinking and enjoying himself, when the chief cook, Too Kwae, rushed into the apartment, and asked leave to assist the cupbearer. The duke having granted it, he proceeded to fill a cup, which he presented to the music-master, saying, "You are the ruler's cars, and should see to his hearing well. If the day be Tsze-maou, it is called an evil day, and the ruler does not feast on it nor have music, and learners give up their study [of music] on it;—because it is recognized as an evil day. The ruler's ministers and assistants are his limbs. If one of his limbs be lost, what equal occasion for sorrow could there be? You have not heard of this, and are practising your music here; showing that your hearing is defective." He then presented another cup to the inferior officer of the Exterior, the officer Shuh, saying, "You are the ruler's eyes, and should see to his seeing clearly. The dress is intended to illustrate the rules of propriety, and those rules are seen in the conduct of affairs. Affairs are managed according to the things [which are the subject of them]; and those things are shown in the appearance of the person. Now the rulers appearance is not in accordance with the [great] thing [of to day], and you do not see this:your seeing is defective." He also drank acup himself, saying, "The combination of flavours [in diet] is to give vigour to the humours [of the body], the effect of which is to give fulness and stability to the mind. The mind is thus able to determine the words in which the order of the government are given forth. To me belongs that combination of flavours, and as you two in attendance here have failed in the duties of your offices, and the ruler has given no orders [condemnatory of you], I am charge able with the crime."

'The marquis was pleased, and ordered the spirits to be removed. Before this, he had wished to remove the Head of the Che family (Seun Ying) from his office, and to give it to a favourite officer of an extraneous clan; but in consequence of this incident he repented of his purpose and gave it up. In autumn, in the 8th month, he made Seun Leih (Ying's son) assistant-commander of the 3d army, by way of apology [for his dislike of the family].']

Par. 4. This Chung-sun Këoh is the Ming He-tsze of whose ignorance of the rules and observances of propriety we read under the 7th year. For twenty years, since the 20th year of Sëang, there had been no interchange of complimentary visits between Loo and Ts'e. The present mission was therefore, dispatched on a grand scale. The Chuen says:—'Mang He-tsze went to Ts'oo, to pay a complimentary visit of the completest order ( ):—which was proper.'

Par. 5. This par. is literally, 'We built the park of Lang.' But the 'building' must refer principally to the enclosing walls, and I have therefore translated by 'enclosed.'

The Chuen says:—'We enclosed the park of Lang. Ke Ping-tsze (Grand-son of Suh of Ke Woo-tsze) wished the work to be quickly completed; but Shuh-sun Ch'aou-tsze said, "The ode (She, III. i. ode VIII. 1) says,

'When he planned the commencement, [he said], "Be not in a hurry;"
But the people came as if they were his children.'

Why must it be quickly completed? That would tend to destroy the people. We can get on without a park; but can we get on without the people?" Lang,—see I. ix. 4, et al.

In the [duke's] tenth year, it was spring, the king's first X. month.

In summer, Lwan She of Ts'e came to Loo a fugitive.

In autumn, in the seventh month, Ke-sun E-joo, Shuh Kung, and Chung-sun Këoh, led [our] army and invaded Keu.

On Mow-tsze, Pëw, marquis of Tsin, died.

In the ninth month, Shuh-sun Shay went to Tsin, to the burial of duke P'ing.

In the twelfth month, on Këah-tsze, Ching, duke of Sung, 6 died.

Par. 1. [The Chuen gives here an astrological narrative:—'This spring, in the king's first month, a [strange] star appeared in [the ] constellation] Woo-neu. P'e Tsaou of Ch'ing | the zodiacal sign of Heuen-heaou, or Capricon.

said to Tsze-ch'an, "In the 7th month, on Movtsze, the ruler of Tsin will die. This year, the year [-star] is in the heu of Chuen-heuh (1.4 sarius). The Houses of Këang and Jin (I. e., Is'e and Sëeh) are the guardians of the terry corresponding thereto. Right at the commining constellation of that sign, there is cominous star;—with a communication evily to Yih Këang, the ancestress of the use of Tsin. [The constellations of] heaven arranged in sevens; and it was on Mowethat duke Fung [anciently] ascended on h, when a [strange] star appeared in this me place. Thus it is that I make this obvation."]

Par. 2. Instead of 齊 Kung-yang has 晉, ring confounded the Lwan clan of Tsin, which d played a prominent part in the former riod of the Ch'un Ts'ëw, with that of Ts'e. The Chuen says:—'The chiefs of the families Lwan and Kaou, which were descended from ke Hwuy of Ts'e, were both addicted to ink, gave credit to women's stories, and had my animosities. They felt themselves strongthan the families of Chin and Paou, and ted them. This summer, some one told Ch'in van-tsze that Tsze-k'e (Lwan She) and Tszemg (Kaou K'ëang) were about to attack the rinand the Paou; and similar information was areyed to the chief of the Paou. Hwan-taze n this] gave out his buff-coats, and proceeded the house of Paou, when [on the way] he met e-leang, dashing along in his chariot drunk. e went on, however, and saw Wan-tsze (Paou woh), who also gave out his buff-coats, while ey sent to see what the two chiefs were doing. tuned out that they were setting to to drink, it Hwan-tsze said, "Although our informant u not correct, yet when they hear that we ive given out our buff-coats, they will be sure we take the initiative and attack them."

'Ch'in and Paou were then on the best of ms, and accordingly they proceeded to attack e Lwan and Kaou. Taze-lëang said, "If we m get [the countenance of ] the duke, where n Chin and Paou go to?" [The duke refusg to see them], they attacked the Hoo gate. an Ping-chung took his place outside it in scourt robes. The four clans all called him. If he would not go to any of them. His folwen asked him whether he would help Ch'in 14 Paou, but he said that they had no good-🛰 to make him do so. Would he help Lwan id Kaou then? They were no better, he said. fould he then return to his own house? When the ruler is attacked," said he, "how lould I return?" [By and by] the duke called in, and he entered the palace, where the duke nsulted the tortoise-shell, as to whether he loud give Wang Hih the [banner] Ling-koosand order him to lead forth his troops. he answer being favourable, that officer asked are to cut off 3 feet [from the border], and took 'In the 5th month, on Käng-shin, they fought ar the altar of [How-] tseih, when Lwan and son were defeated. They were defeated again the Chwang [street], pursued by the people, id defeated a third time near the Luh gate, ter which Lwan She and Kaou K'ëang fled to oo. Ch'in and Paou divided all their promy between themselves, but Gan-tsze added Hwan-tsze to surrender it to the duke, lying, "Courteons deference is the essential lint of virtue. It is an admirable quality. All who have blood and breath have a disposition to quarrel with one another, and hence gain is not to be sought for by violence. It is better to think of righteousness. Righteousnes is the root of gain. The accumulation of gain produces misfortune; let me advise you for the present not to seek such accumulation. You will find such a course conduce to the growth of your superiority." On this Hwan-tsze gave up everything to the duke, and asked leave. as being old, to retire to [the city of ] Keu. [Subsequently], he called Taze-shaou (Who, with Tsze-shang and Tsze-chow, had been driven away in Sëang's 21st year) [back to Ts'e], privately provided for him tents and articles of furniture, and clothes and shoes for his followers, and restored [his city of] Keih. So he dealt by Tsze-shang, restoring his city; and by Tsze-chow, giving him [the city of] Foo-yu. He brought back [also] Tsze-shing, Tsze-kung, and Kung-sun Tseeh (Driven out by Tsze-k'e in Ch'aou's 8th year), and increased the emoluments of them all. To all the sons and grandsons of former rulers, who had no revenues, he gave cities of his own; and to all the poor and straitened, the orphans and widows, in the State, he distributed of his grain, saying. "The ode (She, III. i. ode I. 2) says,

'He displayed his gifts in every direction."

So was [King Wan] able to dispense his bounties; and it was in this way that duke Hwan became the leader of the States."

'The duke [wanted to] give to Hwan-tsze the city adjoining Keu, but he declined it. Muh Mäng-ke (The duke's mother) begged Kaou-t'ang for him; and the Ch'in family began to be greater than it had been.'

The text mentions the flight of Lwan She only, as Kaou K'ëang was not a minister of Ts'e.

Par. 3. Here and afterwards Kung-yang has in for in the E-joo is Ke Ping-tsze, who was now chief of the House of Ke-sun. The whole expedition was under him, but the text mentions the other commanders also, because they were all three ministers. Hoo Gankwoh confounds Shuh Kung with the chief of the Shuh-sun House. He may also have been in this expedition as assistant-commander to one or other of the others.

The Chuen says:—'In the 7th month, P'ingtaze invaded Keu, and took Käng. In presenting his captives, he for the 1st time sacrificed a human victim at the altar of Poh. When Tsang Woo-chung heard of this in Ts'e, he said, 'The duke of Chow will not accept the sacrifice of Loo. What he accepts is righteousness, of which Loo has none. The ode (She, II. i. ode I. 2) says,

'Their virtuous fame is grandly brilliant; They show the people not to be mean.'

The disregard of the people in this must be pronounced excessive. Thus using men as victims, who will confer a blessing [on Loo]?'

Par. 4. The Chuen says:—'On Mow-tsze, duke Ping of Tsin died. The earl of Ching was going [in consequence] to Tsin; but when he had got to the Ho, the people of Tsin declined his visit and Yëw Keih then went on to Tsin.'

Par. 5. The Chuen says:—'In the 9th month, Shuh-sun Ch'eoh (I. q. Shay), Kwoh Joh of Ts'e, Hwa Ting of Sung, Pih-kung He of Wei, Han Hoo of Ching, an officer of Heu, an officer of Ts'aou, an officer of Heu, an officer of Choo, an officer of Seeh, an officer of K'e, and an officer of Little Choo, went to Tsin to the burial of Tsze-p'e (Han Hoo) of Ching duke Ping. wished to take silks and other offerings with him expecting to have an audience of the new marquis]; but Tsze-ch'an said, "On a funeral occasion how [can you think of] using such offerings? If you take offerings, you must have 100 carriages, which will require 1000 men. When the 1000 men have got there, you will find that [what you intend] cannot be done; and when that cannot be done, you will be sure to use the whole [in some other way]. How many times could you take 1000 men with you, and the State not be ruined?" Tsze-p'e, however, urgently begged that he might go [as he proposed].

'After the funeral, the great officers of the States wished to take the opportunity to see the new marquis; and though Shuh-sun Ch'aoutsze said it was contrary to rule to do do so, they would not listen to him. Shuh-hëang, however, declined their proposal, saying, [as if from the marquis], "The business of you, great officers, is ended; and still you have your orders for me. But I am in the deepest mourning, wearing the unhemmed clothes and head-band. were to put on the auspicious garments to see you, the rites of mourning are not yet finished; and if I were to see you in my mourning robes, I should be receiving your condolences a second time:—what would you think of that?" The officers had no words with which to urge their request for an interview, and Tsze-p'e had to dispose of all his offerings. When he returned to Ching, he said to Tsze-yu, "It is not the knowing a thing that is difficult, but it is the acting accordingly. He, our master, knew [that my purpose was impracticable], but I was not capable [of taking his advice]. The words of the Shoo (IV. v. Pt. II. 3), 'By my desires I was setting at nought the rules [of conduct]; by my self-indulgence I was violating the rules of propriety,' might be spoken of me. He knew both of those rules; but I gave way indulgence and desires, and was not a myself."

'When Ch'sou-tsze arrived from T great officers visited him. Kaou K'ë came to see him, and when he ha Ch'aou-tsze said to the great office careful ought a son to be! Forme K'ing Fung was driven into exile received many cities, a few of which to his ruler. The marquis of Ts'e cons loyal, and made him a great favourit he was near his death, he was taken marquis's palace; and when he was home in a hand carriage, the marqu assisted in pushing it along. His son sustain his office, and therefore he i tive] here. [The father's] loyalty excellent virtue, but the son could not [in the same way], and the charge of | moreover on him;—the evil was th not careful. He has ruined what his: achieved, thrown away his virtue, an his ancestral temple, involving also person;—is not the injury he has don To him we may apply the words of the iv. ode VII. 2), > [Why was this time] not before 1 Or [why was it] not after me?"

Par. 6. For Kung-yang has historiographers appear to have ina omitted the character 3, 'in the the beginning of this par.

The Chuen says:—'In winter, in month, duke Ping of Sung died. B [his son], duke Yuen, had hated th the eunuchs, Lew, and wished to p death (See on vi. 5). In the [duke's] eleventh year, in spring, in the king's second month, Shuh Kung went to Sung, to the burial of duke Ping.

In summer, in the fourth month, on Ting-sze, K'ëen, 2 viscount of Ts'oo, beguiled Pan, marquis of Ts'ae, to Shin, and there put him to death.

The Kung-tsze K'e-tsih of Ts'oo led an army and laid siege to [the capital of] Ts'ae.

In the fifth month, on Këah-shin, the lady Kwei, wife [of duke Sëang], died.

We celebrated a grand review in P'e-p'oo.

Chung-sun Këoh had a meeting with the viscount of Choo, when they made a covenant in Ts'in-ts'ëang.

In autumn, K'e-sun E-joo had a meeting with Han K'e of Tsin, Kwoh Joh of Ts'e, Hwa Hae of Sung, Pih-kung To of Wei, Han Hoo of Ching, and officers of Tsiaou and K'e, in Keueh-yin.

In the ninth month, on Ke-hae, we buried our duchess Ts'e Kwei.

In winter, in the eleventh month, on Ting-yew, the army of Ts'oo extinguished Ts'ae, seized Yew, heir-son of the State, and carried him back [to Ts'oo], where he was sacrificed as a victim.

For 二月 Kung-yang has 正月. repeats the words of the par., with ly alteration; for what reason it would o say, unless the last four characters ragraph have been introduced into it Chuen.

The name of the king of Ts'oo orias Wei (屋), but he had changed it

The mention of the name in the quite anomalous. That the name of uis of Ts'ae should appear is in accordh the general practice in the case of illed, or dying, or driven from their it the name of the prince inflicting the the banishment only appears in this learly half a dozen different explanahe thing have been propounded, but it rth while to adjudicate among them, or bout for any new solution. Kuh-lëang or 废, and 班 for 般.

thuen says:—'The king King asked wang which of the princes would be s year, and which would suffer evil in as answered, "It will be disastrous for his is the [return of the] year in which marquis of Ts'ae, murdered his ruler xxx. 2). The year [-star] is [again] rei (Aquarius-Pisces); he will not go is year. Ts'oo will possess Ts'ae;—but xumulation [of its own wickedness]. year [-star] reaches Ta-lëang (Aries-Ts'ae will be restored, and Ts'oo will unity;—this is the way of Heaven." scount of Ts'00, being in Shin, called the ing of Ts'se to come to him. When the marquis was about to go, the great officers of the State said, "The king is greedy, and has no good faith. He is full of indignation against Ts'ae. Now his offerings are great and his words are sweet;—he is beguiling us. You had better not go." The marquis, however, would not be stopped.

'In the 3d month, on Ping-shin, the viscount of Ts'oo entertained the marquis of Ts'ae in Shin, having [previously] placed soldiers in concealment, who seized the marquis when he was drunk. In the 4th month, on Ting-sze, [the viscount] put him to death, and killed [also] his officers, to the number of 70 men."

Par. 8. The Chuen says:—'The Kung-tsze K'e-tsih having led an army and laid siege to [the capital of] Ts'ae, Han Seuen-taze asked Shull-hëang whether Ts'00 would succeed in taking it. "It will succeed," was the reply. "The marquis of Ts'ae was a criminal against his ruler, and he was not able [to conciliate] his people. Heaven will borrow the agency of Ta'(x) to destroy [the State]. Why should it not succeed? But I have heard that success which happens to be gained through want of good faith cannot be repeated. The king of Ts'oo took the [Kung-] sun Woo with him, when he went to punish Ch'in, saying, "I will settle your State;" on which the people of Chin accepted his orders;—and he proceeded to reduce that State to be a district of Ts'oo. Now he has further beguiled Ts'ae, put its ruler to death, and gone on to besiege its capital. Although he may chance to reduce it, he is sure to receive an evil retribution;—he cannot continue long. Keeh vanquished the prince of Min, but thereby lost his kingdom. Chow vanquished the E of the east, but thereby lost his life. Ta'oo is [comparatively] small and its rank is low, but its [ruler's] acts of tyranny are more than those of those two kings;—is it possible he should not suffer for his evil? When Heaven borrows the assistance of the bad, it is not blessing them; it is increasing their evil and wickedness, and will then send down punishment upon them. We may use [in such a case] this comparison:—There are five kinds of materials supplied [to men] by Heaven. They will use them till their substance is exhausted, and then they are worn out. In consequence of this there is no help for them; they are done with, and cannot be repaired."

Par. 4. From par. 8, and the Chuen on IX. xxxi. 8, we understand that this lady was the mother of duke Ch'aou. But according to Tsoshe, she was not the wife proper of duke Sëang, though in this par. she appears as such. Ho Hëw, on Kung-yang, contends that she was the proper wife. It has been thought that there is some confirmation of this view in the fact that the text nowhere mentions the death of any other wife of duke Sëang. We need not, however, discredit the account of Tso-she. On the elevation of duke Ch'aou, his mother would be raised to the place of the proper wife.

Par. 5. Too does not attempt to fix the situation of P'e-p'oo. It is generally understood to have been somewhere in the south of Loo.

I.,—see on viii, 6. We have here the description of this as 'a grand review,' when everything connected with the defences and army of the State was regulated. Tso-she says that this review was 'contrary to rule;' meaning that it was improper to hold it when the duke must have been mourning for his mother. The poor duke, however, would have very little to do with it. It was ordered and conducted, no doubt, by the three clans.

Par. 6. Neither does Too identify Ts'ints'ëang; but its site is to be sought somewhere in the pres. dis. of Tsze-yang (滋婦), dep. Yen-chow. Kung-yang has 食羊.

The Chuen says:—'Mang He-tsze had a meeting with duke Chwang of Ts'aou, when they made a covenant in Ts'in-ts'ëang, to cultivate the good relations [between the two States]:— which was according to rule. [Before this], the daughter of a man of Ts'euen-k'ëw dreamed that with her curtains she made a tent for the temple of the Mang family, after which she sought the company of He-tsze, accompanied by one of her companions. They had made a covenant at the altar of Ts'ing-k'ëw, that, when they had sons, they would not abandon each other. He-tsze made them act as assistants to [his concubine] of the family of Wei. When he was now returning from Ts'in-ts'ëang, he passed the night at the house of this lady Wei, and by the young woman of Ts'euen-k'ëw he had [two sons], E-tsze and Nan-kung King-shuh. Her companion had no child, but she was employed to bring up King-shuh.

Par. 7. Kung-yang has 隱 for 意, 的 for 房, 軒 for 罕, and 屈 銀 for 厥 恕.

Where Keueh-yin exactly was is not known.
The Chuen says:—'When the army of Ts'oo was in Ts'ae, Seun Woo of Tsin said to Han

Seuen-tsze, "We were not able to save Ch'in, and again we are not able to save Ts'ae; under such circumstances we shall have none to adhere to us. Tsin's want of power may be known [from this]. We are lord of covenants, but what is the use of our being so, when we show no regard for States that are perishing?"

'The meeting in the autumn at Keuch-yin was to consult about relieving Ts'ae. When Tsze-pe of Ch'ing was about to set out for it, Tsze-ch'an said to him, "You will not go far; we are not able to save Ts'ae. Ts'ae is small, and has behaved unreasonably. Ts'oo is great, and has not virtue. Heaven will cast away Ts'ae, to let the [wicked-ness of] Ts'oo accumulate; and when that is full. It will punish that State. Ts'ae is sure to perish. It is seldom, moreover, that [the State] can be preserved when the ruler is lost. But in three years, his evil will come on the king. When good or evil has gone its round [of 12 years], there is a revolution. The wickedness of the king will then have gone its round."

king will then have gone its round."

'The people of Tsin sent Hoo Foo to beg of Ts'oo to spare Ts'ae, but the request was refused.'

[The Chuen appends here:- 'The viscount of Shen had an interview with Han Seuen-taze in Ts'eih. His looks were bent downwards, and his words came slow and low. Han Seven-ter said, "The viscount of Shen will, probably, die soon. The places at audiences in the court are definitely fixed; those at meetings abroad are marked out by flags. There is the collar of the upper garment, and the knot of the sash. The words spoken at meetings and audiences must be heard at the places marked out and determined, so that the order of the business may be clearly understood. The looks must be fixed on the space between the collar and the knot, in order that the bearing and countenance may be fitly regulated. The words are intended for the issuing of orders; the bearing and countenance to illustrate them. Any error in either of these is a defect. Now the viscount of Shen is the chief of the king's officers; and when giving his instructions about business at this meeting, his looks did not light above the sash, and his words did not reach beyond a foot. countenance showed no regulation of his bearing, and his words gave no clear intelligence. The absence of such regulation was a want of respect; the absence of such intelligence was a want [in his words] of accordance [with reason]:—he has not breath to preserve his life."']

Par. 8. The Chuen says:—'At the burial of Ts'e Kwei, the duke showed no grief. The officer of Tsin who had come to attend the funeral told this, on his return, to the historiographer Chaou, who said, "He is sure to become [a resident] in the suburbs of Loo (I. e., he will te driven from the capital)." His attendants asked him why he said so, and he replied, "He is the son of Kwei. As he does not think of his parent, his ancestors will not protect him." Shuh-hëang said, "The House of the dukes of Loo is low indeed! Though the ruler had so great a death [m his family], the State would not give up a review; though he was bound to mourn for 3 years, he could not show one day's grief. The State's paying no regard to [his mother's] death showed that it stands in no awe of the ruler; his having no appearance of grief shows that he had no regard for his parents.

the State does not stand in awe of the and the ruler has no regard for his parents. ssible that he should not be reduced low? Il almost lose the State."

. 9. Kuh-leang makes the name of the of Ts'ae 友. The Chuen calls him 隱, thumous title, connected with his melan-fate. 用 is used here as in V. xix. 4; tah explains it by 楚以音性用 chuen says:—'In the 11th month, the ant of Ts'oo extinguished Ts'ae, and sacrithe marquis's eldest son Yin on mount. Shin Woo-yu said, "This is inauspithe five animals used as victims cannot uployed one for another; how much less prince of a State be employed as a victims will have occasion to repent of

e have here two narratives:-

- . 'In the 12th month, duke Ch'ing of Shen -verifying Shuh-hëang's remarks in the tive after par. 7.
- 'The viscount of Ts'oo walled, [on a large, the old capitals of ] Ch'in and Ts'ae, and lang, and appointed K'e-tsih duke of Ts'ae. Iten asked Shin Woo-yu what he thought 'e-tsih's being in Ts'ae. That officer re-, "For choosing among his sons no one is equal to the father; for choosing among his ministers no one is equal to the ruler. Chwang of Ching walled Leih, and placed Tsze-yuen in it, the consequence of which was that duke Ch'aou could not maintain himself in the State (See on II. xv. 9; but we cannot explain the whole of this statement). Duke Hwan of Ts'e walled Kuh, and placed Kwan Chung in it (See on III. xxxii. 1); and to the present day that State feels the benefit of the proceeding. I have heard that the five great [subjects of a State] should not be located in its borders, and that [subjects of ] the five small [classes] should not be in the court. The [ruler's] relatives should not be away from the court, and refugees should not be in it. But now K'e-tsih is abroad, and Tan of Ching (See on IX. xix. 12) is in the court. You ought to be a little careful."

'The king again [further] asked him what he thought of having great cities [besides the capital] in the State, and he replied. "King and Leih of Ch'ing led to the killing of Man-pih. Sëaou and Poh of Sung led to the killing of Tsze-yu (See on III. xii. 4); K'eu-k'ëw of Ts'e led to the killing of Woo-che (See III. ix. 1); P'oo and Ts'eih of Wei led to the expulsion of duke Hëen (In Sëang's 14th year). Looking at these examples, we must conclude that [such great cities] are injurious to a State. Great branches are sure to break [the roots]; a great tail cannot be moved about:—this is what you know.']

XII. 1 In the [duke's] twelfth year, Kaou Yen of Ts'e led a force, and replaced the earl of North Yen in Yang.

2 In the third month, on Jin-shin, Këa, earl of Ch'ing, died.

3 In summer, the duke of Sung sent Hwa Ting to Loo on a complimentary mission.

4 The duke was going to Tsin; but when he got to the Ho, he returned.

5 In the fifth month, there was the burial of duke Këen of Ch'ing.

6 Ts'oo put to death its great officer Ch'ing Hëung.

7 It was autumn, the seventh month.

8 In autumn, duke [Sëang's] son Yin fled from the State to Ts'e.

9 The viscount of Ts'oo invaded Seu.

10 Tsin invaded the Sëen-yu.

Par. 1. Yang was a city of Yen,—in the pres. district of Tang (), dep. Paou-ting, Chih-le. It was afterwards called Tang. This earl of Yen was the K'wan, whose flight to Ts'e is mentioned in iii. 7. In vi. 9 we have the account of an ineffectual attempt on the part of Ts'e to restore him. This second attempt was also a failure, though it secured for the earl possession of Tang.

The Chuen says:—'Kaou Yen replaced Kwas, earl of North Yen, in T'ang;—through its in habitants [being well disposed to him].'

Par. 2. The Chuen says;—'In the 3d month, duke Keën of Ching died. When they were engaged in levelling the road in order to his burial, ey came to the ancestral temple of the Yew nily, and were about to pull it down. Tsze-t'aesh (Yew Keih, Head of the family) made the arers stand with their implements in their nds, and not proceed to pull it down, telling m that, when Tsze-ch'an passed by them, and red why they had not pulled it down, they ould say, "We could not bear [to touch] the ple; but yes;—we will pull it down." When y had done this, Tsze-ch'an made them carry road on one side of it. Right in the way re some houses belonging to the superintendent the graves. If they were destroyed, the In could be put under ground in the morning. they were not pulled down, it would be mid-Tsze-t'ae-shuh r before that could be done. ged that they might be pulled down, saying, Ve must do it for the sake of our guests m the [various] States;" but Tsze-ch'an said, he guests from the States who come to be esent at our funeral will not be afraid of opping till] mid-day. Why should we not what will occasion them no loss, and will ve the people from injury?" Accordingly ey did not pull the houses down, and the terment was accomplished at mid-day.

'The superior man will say that Tsze-ch'an new what was proper. According to the rules f propriety, a man will not overthrow anything f another to establish himself."

Too supposes that duke Këen had chosen ome new spot to be buried in, which occasioned the difficulties mentioned in the narrative.

Par. 3. 'The Chuen says:—'This visit was on behalf of the ruler [of Sung], to open communications [between him and Loo]. [The duke] gave him an entertainment, and there was sung for him the Luh Sëaou (She, II. ii. ode IX.); but he did not understand it, and sang nothing in reply. Ch'aou-taze said, "He is sure to be driven into exile. He cherished not that 'We feast and talk;' he declared not his sense of that 'They favour me, they brighten me;' he understood not that 'Excellent virtue;' he accepted not that 'Common happiness;'—how should he continue to be in [Sung]?"'

The Chuch gives here:—'The marquises of The and Wei, and the earl of Ching, went to Thin to present themselves at the court of the new ruler.']

Par. 4. In explanation of this par., the Chueu says:—'In consequence of our taking King (See on x. 3), the people of Keu had complained to Tsin, which had not yet dealt with the matter, being occupied by the death of duke Ping, and therefore declined the duke's visit. Duke [Sëang's] son Yin then went to Tsin,'

[We have here the following narrative about the visit of the above-named princes to Tsin:— The marquis of Tsin entertained the princes, but Tsze-ch'an, who was in attendance on and directing the earl of Ching, begged that he might be excused from being present, saying that when they had done with the death [for the late earl], they would receive Tsin's orders; and the request was granted;—which was according to propriety.

The marquis of Tsin was feasting with the marquis of Tse, when Chung-hang Muh-tsze (Seun Woo), who was directing the ceremonies, [proposed that they should play at] throwing shows into jars. The marquis of Tsin had the first chance, and Muh-tsze said,

"We have spirits to fill the Hwae; We have flesh to form the Ch'e.

If my ruler succeed with this, he will be the master of the princes." The marquis's throw was successful; and then the marquis of Ts'e lifted up an arrow, and said,

"I have spirits to fill the Shing;
I have flesh to form a great mound.

If I hit with this, I shall rise to your lordship's place."

'His throw was also successful, on which Pih-hëa (Sze Wăn-pih) said to Muh-tsze, "You made a slip in what you said;—our [ruler's] position is established as master of the princes. Why did you use those jars? How should a successful throw into them give any superiority? The uler of Ts'e has treated our ruler as feeble. When he returns, he will not come here [again]." Muh-tsze replied, "Our armies and generals are most formidable opponents; our soldiers and chariot-men are strong and eager;—now as of old. Whom will Ts'e serve [but Tsin]?" The Kung-sun Sow hurrical into the place of entertainment, saying, "The day is declining; our ruler is tired; it is time for him to come out." [With these words], he carried off the marquis of Ts'e.

Par. 5. The Chuen repeats this par., as if to show the meaning of Taze-ch'an's remark in the above narrative, giving, however, 'the 6th month,' instead of the 5th.

Par. 6. For fix Kung-yang has ; Kuhlëang and the Chuen of Tso have . Hëung was a grand-son of Tih-shin or Tsze-yuh, who lost the battle of Shing-puh. Both the Ch'ing and Tow families were descended from Johgaou. The Chuen says:—'The viscount of Ts'oo, considering that Ch'ing Hoo was a remnant, [as it were], of Joh-gaou, put him to death. Some one had slandered Ch'ing Hoo to the viscount, and though he was aware of it, he was not able to go away. The text, "Ts'oo put to death its great officer Ch'ing Hoo," shows how he clung to the favour [he enjoyed].'

[We have here three narratives appended:—
Ist. 'Seun Woo of Tsin, pretending that he wanted to join the army of Tse, borrowed leave to go through Seen-yu, and took the opportunity to take possession of Seih-yang. In autumn, in the 8th month, on Jin-woo, he extinguished Fei, and took its viscount, Meen-kaou, back with him to Tsin.'

2d. 'Këaou, earl of Yuen in Chow, behaved oppressively to his servants, and made them run away. In winter, in the 10th month, on Jinshin, the 1st day of the moon, all the people of Yuen drove Këaou out, and raised his brother Kwei-sin to his place. Këaou fled to Këaou.

8d. 'Duke Këen of Kan had no son, and appointed his brother Kwo as his successor. Kwo wished to take off the families descended from [dukes] Ching and King; but these bribed duke Hëen of Lëw, who, on Ping-shin, put [Kwo], duke Taou of Kan, to death, and appointed Ts'ëw, a grandson of duke Ching, in his room. On Ting-yëw, he put to death Kwo, a son of Yu P'e, and tutor of the eldest son Hëen. He put Hëa Sin to death in the market-place, and Ch'oh a favourite of the palace, Wang-sun Moh, Lëw Chow-këw, Yin Ke, and Laou Yang-tszo.']

The Chuen says:—'When Ke Ping-tsze became Head of his clan, he behaved discourte-ously to Nan Kwae (A son of Nan E in the narrative at the end of the 4th year), who said to Tsze-chung, "I will drive out the Head of the Ke family, and give over his property to the duke. You will take his place, and I will hold Pe as a servant of the duke." Tsze-chung agreed, and Nan Kwae then told Shuh-chung Muh-tsze (A grand-son of Tae or Shuh-chung Ch'aou-pih, and great-grand-son of Pang-sang or Shuh-chung Hwuy-pih. His name was Sëaou;

'When Ke Taou-taze (Son of Ke Woo-taze and father of Pring-taze) died, Shuh-aun Ch'aoutsze was one of the ministers, having received his second appointment, and when Ping-taze invaded Keu and overcame it, he again received his third appointment. Shuh-chung-taze, wishing to set the two families at variance, said to Ping-tsze, "With his three appointments he has got beyond the rank of his father, and of you his cousin older than himself;—which is contrary to propriety." "Yes," said Ping-tsze; and he sent to Ch'aou-tsze [to require him to resign his third appointment]. Ch'aou-tsze said. "The House of Shuh-sun had its family misfortunes, when the sons of the proper wife were put to death, and the son of a concubine was appointed in their place. It was thus that I reached my present position. If you had taken the opportunity of those misfortunes to ruin me, I should have accepted your commands. [But now], if we do not disannul our ruler's appointment, I certainly have this rank and position."

'(haou-tsze went to the court, and gave orders to the officers, saying, "I am going to have a litigation with Ke-sun. You must write the pleas without partiality." Ke-sun became afraid, and laid the blame on Shuh-chung-tsze. In consequence of this, Shuh-chung Sëaou, Nan Kwae, and the Kung-tsze Yin plotted against Ke-sun. Yin informed the duke of it, and immediately after followed him to Tsin. Nan Kwae, fearing their attempt would not succeed, revolted with Pe, and went [with it] to Ts'c. When Tsze-chung was returning [from his mission], he heard of the confusion, stole away from the assistant-commissioner, and went before him; but on his arrival at the suburbs, hearing of the revolt of Pe, he fled to Ts'e.

When Nan Kwae was about to revolt, a man of the same village was acquainted with his purpose, and passed by him, sighing as he did so. He also said, "Alas! Alas! A case of difficulty and hazard! His thoughts are deep, and his plans are shallow. Circumscribed is his position, and his aims are far-reaching. The servant of a family, his schemes affect the ruler. Such a man there is!" Nan Kwae consulted by some twigs about his object, without mentioning it and got the diagram K'wan (大学, 宣言), which then became Pe (大人, 宣言). As it is said [upon the changed line], "Yellow for the lower garment; great good fortune," he thought this was very lucky, and showed it to Tsze-fuh Hwuy-pib, saying, "If I am contemplating something, how does this indicate it will turn out?" Hway-pib replied, "I have learned this.—If the thing be one of loyalty and good faith, you may go for ward with it. If it be not, it will be defeated The outer figure indicates strength, and the inner mildness;—expressive of loyalty. We have [also] harmony leading on solidity;—expressive of fidelity. Hence the words, 'Yellow for the lower garment; greatness and good fortune.' But yellow is the colour of the centre the lower garment is the ornament of that which is beneath; that greatness is the height of goodness. If in the centre (= the heart) there is not loyalty, there cannot be the colour; if below (= in an inferior) there be not the respectful discharge of duty, there cannot be the ornament; if the affair be not good, there carnot be that height. When the outer and inner are mutually harmonious, there is loyalty; when affairs are done in fidelity, there is that discharge of duty; an earnest nourishing of the three virtues makes that goodness. Where there are not these three things, this diagram does not apply.

"Moreover, [this passage of] the Yih cannot be a guide about anything hazardous. What thing are you contemplating that should require that ornamenting? With what is admirable in the centre, you can predicate the yellow; with what is admirable above, you can predicate that great goodness; with what is admirable below, you can predicate that lower garment. Given these three all complete, and you may consult the reeds. If they are defective, though the consultation may [seem to] be lucky, it is not to be acted on."

'When [Nan Kwae] was about to go to Pe. he invited his fellow villagers to drink with him, one of them sang,

"In my garden of vegetables is a mediar tree!
Follow me, and you will be a good man;
Leave me, and you will act meanly.
To rebel against one's friends is shamefal.
Stop! Stop!
Or you will be no member of our party."

P'ing-tsze wished to make Ch'aou-tsze drive out Shuh-chung Sëaou. When Sëaou keard is, he did not dare to go to court. Ch'aou-tsze ordered the officers to tell him that he should be waiting in the court for any governmental orders, adding, "I will not make myself an office of animosities."

Par. 9. The Chuen says:—'The viscount of Ts'00 was celebrating the winter hunt in Chovlae, and halted at the junction of the Ying with the Hwae], from which he sent the marquis of Tang, the viscount of P'wan, the marshal Tah, Woo the director of Hëaou, and He the director of Ling, with a force to besiege [the capital of Seu, in order to alarm Woo; while he himself would halt at Kan-k'e to afford them what help they might require.

"The snow was falling, and the king went out with a whip in his hand, wearing a fur-cap, the cloak sent to him from Ts'in ornamented with king-fishers' feathers, and in shoes of leopard skin. He was followed by his charioteer Seils foo. In the evening Tsze-kih (Tan of Chring), director of the Right, waited upon him; and when the king saw him, he put off his cap and cloak, laid aside his whip, and spoke with him. "Formerly," said he "my ancestor Hëung Yih, with Leu Keih, Wang-sun Mow, Seeh-foo, and Kin-foo, all served together king Kiang. The four States of those princes all received [precious] gifts, only we [in Ts'00] got none. If I now send a messenger to Chow, and ask for the tripods as our share, will the king give them to me?" "He will give them, O ruler and king," was the reply. " Formerly, our king, Hëung Yih, lived meanly by mount King, in a deal carriage, with tattered clothes, as befitted his position amid the uncultivated wilds; climbing the hills and wading through the streams in the service of the son of Heaven; with a bow of peach-wood and arrows of thorn, discharging his defence of the king. [On the other hand, Lea Keih of ] Ts'e was king [Ch'ing's] maternal uncle; [T'ang-shuh of ] Tsin was his own brother; and [the fathers of K'in-foo of ] Loo and [Seeh-fon of ] Wei were king [Woo's] own brothen. Thus it was that [the prince of ] Ta'oo received no [precious] gifts, and all those other princes did. But now Chow and those four States are aubmissive to you, O ruler and king, and you have only to order them to be obeyed; -how should [Chow] grudge you the tripods?"

'The king pursued, "Formerly, the eldest brother of our remote ancestor dwelt in the old territory of Heu; but now the people of Ch'ing in their greed possess that territory and enjoy the benefit of it, and have refused to give it to us. If I sak it [now], will they give it?" Tsze-kih sgain replied, "They will give it to you, O ruler and king. If Chow do not grudge its tripods, will Ching dare to grudge its lands?"

"The king went on, "Formerly, the States kept aloof from us and stood in awe of Tsin. But now I have walled on a great scale [the capitals of] Ch'in and Ts'ae, and the [two] Puhlang, each of which can levy a thousand chariots; and for this I am much indebted to you. Will the States now stand in awe of me?" "They," was the reply, "will stand in awe of you, O ruler and king! Those four States are themselves sufficient to awe them; and when there is added to them the power of Ts'oo, will the States dare not to stand in awe of you, O ruler and king?"

"[At this moment], Loo, director of Works, came with a request, saying, "Your majesty ordered me to break a baton of jade [to ornament] the handle of an axe. I venture to ask for further instructions." The king went in to see the work; and then Seih-foo said to Tsze-kih, "You are looked up to by the State of Ts'oo;

but now, in talking to the king, you have been but his echo;—what will the State think of you?" Tsze-kih replied, "I have been sharpening [my weapon] on the whetstone, to await [my opportunity]; when the king comes out, I will cut down [his extravagance] with the edge of it."

'When the king came out, he was resuming the conversation, and E-seang, the historiographer of the Left, passed by. "There," said the king, "is an excellent historiographer. He can read the three Fun, the five Teen, the eight Sih, and the nine K'ëw." "I have questioned him," was the reply. "Formerly king Muh wished to indulge his [extravagant] desire, and travel over all under heaven, so that the ruts of his chariot wheels and the prints of his horses' feet should be everywhere. Mow-foo, duke of Chae, then made the ode of K'e-shaou, to repress the ambition of the king, who died in consequence a natural death in the palace of Che. I asked [E-sëang] about the ode, and he did not know it. If I were to ask him about anything more ancient, how should he be able to know it?" "Can you repeat it?" asked the king. Tsze-kih replied, "I can. The ode said,

'How mild is the course of our minister Shaou! How fitted to show [the king's] virtuous fame!

He would order his measures and movements, As more valuable than gold or gem.

Beyond the people's strength he would not go, Nor drunkard's thirst nor glutton's greed would know.'"

The king bowed to him and went in. For several days he would not eat what was brought to him, nor was he able to sleep; but he was not able to subdue himself, and so he came to his evil [end].

'Chung-ne said, "It is contained in an ancient book that to subdue one's-self and return to propriety is perfect virtue." True is the saying and excellent. If king Ling of Ts'oo could have done this, he would not have come to disgrace at Kan-k'e!'

The Chuen says:—' This spring, Shuh Kung laid siege to Pe, but he could not reduce it, and was himself defeated. Ping-taze, enraged, gave orders that whenever a man of Pe was seen, he should be seized and kept as a prisoner. Yay Gow-foo said to him, "This is a wrong course. If, when a man of Pe is seen suffering from cold, you clothe him, or suffering from want, you feed him, proving yourself its good lord, and ministering to the privations and distresses of its people, they will come to you as if they were coming home, and the Nan will perish. The people will revolt from them, and there will be none to dwell in the city with them. If you afflict them by your severity and frighten them with your wrath, so that they shall detest you, and be confirmed in their revolt, you will [only] be collecting [more followers] for the Nan. If all the States should deal thus with them the more 4 Personal than the more 4 Personal than the states and the states are the states are the states and the states are the state them, the men of Pe would have none to turn to. If they did not adhere to the chief of the Nan, where could they go to?" Ping-tsze fol-lowed this counsel, and the people of Pe revolted from Nan [Kwae].

Par. 2. For Kuh-leang has E. E. The Chuen on par. 9 of last year left the king of Ts'oo at this place, waiting the result of his operations against Seu. It was in the south-east of the pres. Poh-chow ( ), dep. Ying-chow ( ), Gan-hwuy. The Kung-tsze Pe was a younger brother of the king of Ts'oo, and had fied to Tsin 13 years before this, when the king murdered his predecessor;—see the last par. of the 1st year, and the Chuen on the one preceding it.

The Chuen says :- 'When the viscount of Ts'00 was chief minister of the State, he put to death the grand-marshal Wei Yen, and took his property to himself (See the narrative after IX. xxx. 8); and when he became viscount, he violently took his lands from Wei Keu. At the removal of [the capital of ] Heu (See on ix. 2), he had taken [with him] as a hostage, Wei, [a great officer] of that State. Wei of Ts'ae was a favourite with the king, and when the king extinguished Ts'ae (See xi. 9), his father died [in that State]; but the king made Wei remain to take part in the charge [of the capital], when he proceeded [himself to Kan-ke]. At the meeting of Shin (iv. 2), a great officer of Yueh was subjected to disgrace. The king [also] took Chung-ch'ow from Tow Wei-kwei, and his city from [Wei-kwei's son], Ching Jen, making him director of the suburbs. Ching Jen of Man had previously been in the service of the duke of Ts'ae (The viscount's brother K'e-tsih). In this way the families of the Wei clan, with Wei Keu, Wei of Heu, Wei of Ta'ae, and Ch'ing Jen of Man, had all been treated with discourtesy by the king; and they took advantage of the [other] families which had lost their offices to incite Chang Showkwo, the great officer of Yueh, to raise an insurrection, when he laid siege to Koo-shing, reduced the city of Seili-chow, and walled and occupied it.

'After the death of Kwan K'e (See on IX. xxii. 6), his son Ts'ung went to Ts'ae, and was in the service of Chaou Woo, to whom he nown said, "If the State of Ts'ae be not now restored, it never will be so. Let me try and bring it about." Accordingly, as if by the orders of the duke of Ts'ae, he called Tsze-kan (The Kung-taze Pe) and Taze-seih [to Tstae]. When they had arrived in the suburbs, he told them all the truth [about his plot], forced them to make a covenant with him, and then they entered [the capital of ] Ts ae by surprise. The duke was about to take a meal; and when he saw them, he ran away from them. Kwan Tsung made Tsze-kan partake of the food, and they then dug a hole, placed in it [the blood of] a victim with the words [of a covenant] over it, after which [the two princes] went hurriedly away. Ts'ung himself made the thing known through the city, saying, "The duke called his two brothers, and is going to restore them [to Ts'oo]; he has made a covenant with them, and sent them away, but he intends to raise his forces and follow them." The men of Ts'ae collected, and would have seized him, but he said to them, "Of what use will it be to kill me, after you have let the [two] traitors escape, and are raising your army?" On this they let him go, and Chaou Woo said to them, "If you are able to die [for the king], your best plan is to oppose the duke, and wait till you see to whom success falls. But if you seek for rest and establishment, your best plan is to take sides with him, to secure the success of his ambition. And, moreover, if we oppose our superior, to whom can we betake ourselves with advantage?" The multitude said, "We will take sides with him;" and they proceeded to raise the standard of the duke of Ts'ae, called [back] the two other princes, and made a covenant in Tang.

'The dependance [of the princes in their struggle] for the State was on the men of Chin, and Tsiae, which they promised to reconstitute as States; so the three, Pe, Hih-kwang (Tszeseih), and K'e-tsih, with Ch'ing Jen of Man and Chaou Woo of Ts'se, led on the forces of Chin, Ts'ae, Puh-lang, Heu, and Sheh, and took advantage of the adherents of the 4 [disaffected] families, to enter [the capital of] Ts oo. When they arrived at the suburbs, [the men of ] Ch in and Ts'ae wished to get a name, and asked leave to form an entrenched camp. When the duke of Ts'ae knew it. he said, "We want to be expeditious, and such a thing, moreover, would distress the labourers." He begged therefore that they would only make an enclosed encampment; which accordingly was done, and the army lodged in it. He then made Seu Woo-mow and the historiographer P'ae enter the city before them. These, by the assistance of the chief chamberlain, put to death the king's eldest son Luh, and the Kung-tsze i'e-teih. The Kung-Luh, and the Kung-taze l'e-teih. taze Pe became king; and Hih-kwang, chief minister; [both] halting at Yu-pe. The Kung-tsze K'e-tsih was derlared [grand-] marshal, and proceeded to clear out the royal palace, sending [also] Kwan Ts'ung to the army in Kan-k'e, who thereon made known what had been done, and intimated that those who were first in coming over [to the new rule] should be restored to their places, while those who delayed should have their noses cut off. That army advanced to Tsze-lëang, and there dispersed.

'When the king heard of the death of his sons, he threw himself down under his chariot, saying, "Do other men love their sons as much as I did mine?" One of his attendants said, "They love them nore. Small men know that when they are old, if they have no sons, they will be rolled into the ditches," "I have killed many sons of others," replied the king. "Was it possible that I should not come to this condition?"

'Tsze-kih, director of the Right, begged the king to wait in the suburbs till they heard what course the people took, but the king said, "They are all enraged, and we must not encounter them." He then proposed that they should enter a great city, and ask military assistance from the States; but the king said, "They will all revolt [from me]." He proposed further, that they should flee to some of the States, and await the deliberations of the [other] great State on his case; but the king said, "Great happiness is not obtained twice. I should only be bringing diagrace on myself." On this, Jen Tan [left the king, and] returned to Ts'oo, while the king took his way along the Hëa, 'Shin Hae, the son of the Woo-director Wooyu, said, "My father twice violated the king's orders (See the narrative after vii. 1), and was not punished;—what kindness could be greater? I cannot bear the king's misery, and his kindness is not to be forgotten;—I will follow him." Accordingly he sought for the king, found him at the Keih gate, and took him home with him. In summer, in the 5th month, on Kwei-hae, the king strangled himself in his house, when Shin Hae buried him, and his own two daughters

withing to enter Yen.

When we compare the paragraph and this Chuen, we are startled by the contradictions between them. The Kung-tsze Pe had never been a subject of his brother, and it appears contrary to rule to apply the term to him. And in fact Pe did not put the king to death; the king died by his own hands. And he did not die in Kan-k'e. Pe, moreover, was merely a tool in the hands of others; it is both incorrect and unjust to represent him, as the paragraph does, as the prime mover in the proceedings against the king, and then charge him with the crime of regicide. Notwithstanding all these difficulties, even Maou acknowledges an admirable subtlety and propriety in the sage's phraseology in the paragraph! The original name of king Ling was Wei (屋), but he changed it after he had murdered his predecessor, hoping probably thereby to escape somehow the charge of crime that would attach to his name.

Par. 3. For Kung and Kuh here have Mi; and that term would certainly be as proper here as in the preceding par. As it seemed right, however, to the author not to acknowledge the short-lived dignity of Pe as king, but still to represent him as merely a Kung-taze, probably, the true reading.

The Chuen says:—'Kwan Ts'ung said to Tsre-kan, 'If you do not kill K'e-tsih, though you have got the State, you will still receive calamity." "I cannot bear to do so," was Tsze-kan's reply. Tsze-yuh (Ts'ung's designation) continued, "He will bear to kill you, and I cannot bear to wait [and see it];" and on this he went away. Every night there was an alarm [in the city] that the king had entered it. On the night of Yih-maou, K'e-tsih made people run all about, crying, "The king is come!" The people were greatly frightened; and then he made Ching Jen of Man run and inform Tsze-kan and Tsze-seih, saying, "The king is come. The people have killed your marshal, and will [soon] be here. If your lordship will be quick and deal with yourself, you may escape disgrace. The multitudes are angry, as [raging] waves or flames, and no plans can be formed against them." There now came others running to [the palace], and crying out, "The multitudes are come;" on which the two princes killed themselves.

'On Ping-shin, K'e-tsih ascended the [vacant] seat, and [took] the name of Hëung Keu. He buried Tsze-kan in Tsze, who is thence known as Tsze Gaou. Having killed a prisoner, he clothed the body in the king's robes, and let it float in the Han, from which he took and buried it, in order to quiet the minds of the people; and he then appointed Tsze-k'e (Ch'ing Jen of

'When the army of Ts'oo was withdrawing from Seu, the men of Woo defeated it at Yuchang, and took [all] its five commanders (See the commencement of the narrative on par. 9 of last year). King P'ing (K'e-tsih) restored the States of Chin and Tsiae, and the cities from which the inhabitants had been removed: paid all the bribes which he had promised; gave gifts to the people, and forgave them the dues which they owed; dealt gently with criminals, and restored their offices to those who had been deprived of them. Calling Kwan Ts'ung to him, he said, "You may have whatever office you wish." "My ancestors," replied Ts'ung, "assisted the interpreter of divinations by the tortoise-shell;" and he was appointed master of such divinations. The king sent Chejoo Tsze-kung on a complimentary mission to Ching, and to deliver to it the lands of Chiow and Leih. When the [other] business [of his mission] was finished, however, he did not deliver these. An officer of Ching took the liberty to say to him, "It was reported on the way that you would give our ruler Ch'ow and Leih. I venture to ask for your orders [to that effect]." He replied, "I have not yet received such orders." When he returned [to Ts'00], the king asked him about those two places, on which he put off his robe, and replied, "I made a mistake and lost your orders about them, so that I did not give them over." The king took him by the hand, and said, "Do not be concerned about it. Go home for the present; and when I have any business, I will inform you of it." In a year or two, the Woo-director Shin Hae informed the king of the burial of king [Ling], when the coffin was removed and buried in another place.

'King Ling at a former time had asked the tortoise-shell whether he might possibly get the whole kingdom; and when the answer was unfavourable, he cast the shell from him, railed at Heaven, and said, "This small thing you will not give me, but I will take it for myself." The people were distressed by his insatiable ambition, and joined in the insurrection against him as eagerly as if they had been going home.

'At a period before this, king Kung had no son by his queen, whom he could have declared his heir; and though he had five among his other sons, who were favourites with him, none of them had been appointed to the succession. He therefore celebrated a great service to the Spirita of all the hills and rivers of the State, and prayed, saying, "I ask you, Spirita, from among my five sons to choose one, who may be appointed lord of the altars." He then went all round the altars where he had sacrificed, and exhibited a peih before each of them, saying, "He who worships right over this peih shall be he whom you Spirits have appointed. Who will dare to oppose your will?" After this, along with [one of his concubines], a Ke of Pa, he secretly buried the peih in the court of the ancestral temple, and made his five sons come in, after fasting, in the order of their age, to worship. King K'ang stepped over the place; king Ling touched it with his elbow; Tsze-kan and Tsze-seih were both a long way from it; king Ping, being then a child, was carried in, and worshipped twice, right over the button of the peih. Tow Weikwei gave this child in charge to [his son] Ch'ing Jen, saying, "Ts'oo will be endangered both by ahandoning the proper law [of succession], and by resisting the appointment [by the Spirits of this child]."

'When Tsze-kan had returned [from Tsin to Ts'oo], Han Seuen-tsze asked Shuh-heang whether he was likely to be successful. "It will be hard for him to be so," was the reply. Seuen-tsze said, "When those who are engaged in the same evil course seek one another's [co-operation], like traffickers in the market, what difficulty can there be?" Shuh-hëang answered, "Having had no likings in common, they will not have common dislikes. There are five difficulties in the way of taking a State. The candidate may be a favourite, but if he have no [able] men [in his service]:—this is the first. He may have the men, but if he have no party [in the State]:—this is the second, He may have the party, but if he have no [good] plans:—this is the third. He may have the plans, but if he have not the people:—this is the fourth. He may have the people, but if he have not virtue:—this is the fifth. Tsze-kan has been in Tsin 13 years; but among his followers, whether of Tsin or Ts'00, I have not heard that there are any of distinction:-it may be said that he has not the men. His family is extinct [in Ts'oo], and his relatives are against him:—it may be said that he has no party. He is moving without any [sufficient] occasion:—it may be said that he has no plans. He has been a refugee [here nearly] all his life:—it may be said he has not the people. As an exile, there are no proofs that he is loved:—it may be said that he has not the virtue. The king is [indeed] oppressive, and stands in awe of nothing; this prince Tsze kan may adventure in spite of these five difficulties to put him to death, but who can carry his enterprise to complete success? It is K'e-tsih, I apprehend, who will have the State of Tsuo. He is ruler of Chin and Tsue, and all outside the barrier wall belongs to him. He has perpetrated no oppression; the banditti [in his jurisdiction] are quiet; he has not, to gratify himself, gone against the people. They have no feeling of animosity against him, and the Spirits formerly gave the appointment to him. The people of the State believe in him, and it has been the regular custom of Ts'oo, that, when there is trouble in the House of Me, the youngest scion of it should get the State. Thus he has obtained the [approval of the] Spirits:—that is one advantage. He has the confidence of the people:—that is a second. His virtue is admirable:—that is a third. He is favoured and noble:—that is a fourth. His succession would be in regular order:—that is a fifth. With these five advantages to be set against the five difficulties of the other, who can harm him? As to the office of Taze-kan, he was director of the Right; if you calculate his favour and nobility, he was [only] one of the [king's] sons by concubines; if you judge by the appointment of the Spirita, he was far off from the token which they gave of their approval. His nobility wanting, his favour away from him, the people not cherishing him, and there being no party for him in the State;—how should he become established [in Ts'oo]?"

'Seuen-taze said, "Were not the cases of Hwan of Ts'e and [our] Wan of Tsin like his?" Shuh-hëang replied, "Hwan of Ts'e was the son of a Ke of Wei who was a favourite with [duke] He. He had Paou Shuh-ya, Pin Seu-woo, and Seih Pang as his assistants. He had Keu and Wei to support him from abroad. He had the [chiefs] Kwoh and Kaou to support him in the State itself. He followed what was good like a flowing stream. He condescended to the good, and was grave and reverent. He did not accumulate his wealth; he did not follow his desires; he gave away unwearyingly; and he was never tired of seeking for good men:—was it not right that with such conditions he should have the State? As to our former ruler duke Wan, he was the son of the younger Ke of Hoo, who was a favourite of [duke] Heen. He was fond of learning, and of an unchanging will. When he was 17 years old, he had five officers [who readily followed him]. There were our great officers Taze-yu (Ts'aou Ts'uy) and Taze-fan (Hoo Yen) to be his counsellors; there were Wei Ch'ow and Këa To to act as limbs to him; there were Ts'e, Sung, Ts'in, and Ts'oo to support him from abroad; there were the Lwan, Këoh, Hoo, and Sëen families to support him in the State itself. During his 19 years of exile, he kept his purpose with increased sincerity, while [the dukes] Hwuy and Hwae neglected the people. The people followed and joined him. There was no [other] son of Heen [remaining]; the people could not look for any other leader. Heaven was then favourably regarding Tsin, and who was there to take the place of Wan? The cases of those two princes were different from that of Tsze-kan. There is [another] favourite son of [king] Kung; there is [another] lord more honoured in the State. He has shown no beneficence to the people; he has no support from abroad. When he left Tain, none escorted him; when he returned to Ts'oo, none met him:—how can he expect to have the State?"

Par. 4. Ping-k'ëw was 9 le north of the present dis, city of Ch'in-lèw ( ), dep. K'ae-fung. The meeting at this place is memorable as being the last of those on a great scale called by Tsin. Its supremacy among the States had long been waning. The murder of the king of Ts'oo, and the confusion prevailing in that State, encouraged Tsin to make this final effort to recover its former position; but its day had gone by. To give more solemnity to the meeting, it secured the presence of a representa-

huen says:—'When Tsin completed ice of ] Sze-k'e, the princes who then its court (In the 8th year) returned l alienated from it. It was about to States on a punitive expedition against Shuh-hëang said, "The States must exteriors of our majesty displayed to They accordingly summoned a meeting nd scale, sending notice of it [even] to n autumn the marquis of Tsin went to meeting with the viscount of Woo in who declined it, on account of the of the communication by water; returned [to Ping-kiew]. 5, 6. The inartificial construction of sic appears in these two parr., compared a preceding one. From 4 and 5 we estainly conclude that the duke took the covenant, but from 6 it appears that of do so.

huen says:—'The people of Tsin wished v the [existing] covenant, but they of used to do so. The marquis of Tsin sent ang to inform duke Heen of Lew of alty], saying, "Since the people of Ts'e join in covenant, what is to be done?" ke] replied, "A covenant is for the con-n of faith. If your ruler have good e princes will not separate from him. ould you make a trouble of this matter? thing before them in civil terms, and is up with your military force; although ot take the covenant, your ruler will acmuch. An elder of the Son of Heaven, conduct the king's levies, and with ten ariots of war lead the way before you; 1-by or quickly, as your ruler may determine." Shuh-heang then went to inform Ts'e, saying, "The princes have sought for a covenant and are here; but your lordship does not think it will be profitable, and my ruler thinks it well to ask for your views!" "When the States are about to punish the disaffected," was the reply, "then there is a renewal of covenants; but if all are obedient to your orders, why should there be any such renewal?" Shuh-hëang said, "The ruin of States [happens in this way]:—If they have [meetings of] business, but do not pay their contributions, the business become irregular; if they pay their contributions, but do not observe the [proper] ceremonies, there may be regularity, but there is a want of order; if they observe the ceremonies, but do not have a feeling of awe, the order comes to be without respect; if they have a feeling of awa, but do not declare it [to the Spiritual powers], their respect is not [sufficiently] displayed. The want of that display leads to the casting away of respect; the various affairs of business are not brought to a successful issue; and there ensue downfall and overthrow. For this reason the statutes of the intelligent kings required the princes every year to send a complimentary mission, that they might be kept in mind of the contributions they had to pay; after the interval [of a year], they went themselves to court for the practice of ceremonies; when the time for a second visit to court came, there was a meeting for the display of [the king's] majesty; and when the time for a second meeting came, there was a covenant for the exhibition of his clear intelligence. The keeping their duties in mind was to secure the [continuance of ] friendly relations; the practice of ceremonies served to maintain the distinctions of rank; the display of majesty was before the multitude; the clear intelligence was matter of appeal to the Spirits. From antiquity downwards, these rules, we may say, were never neglected. The principles of the preservation or the ruin [of States] depended on them. It is the rule for Tsin to be lord Fearing lest our government of covenants. should be defective, we bring a victim for a covenant, and announce our purpose to your lordship, seeking the completion of the business. Your lordship, however, has said, 'I will have none of it. What have we in common?' Let your lordship consider the matter well. Our ruler will receive your commands." The people of Ts'e were afraid, and replied, "Our small State said so; but the decision is with your great State. How dare we not listen to and follow you? We have heard your commands, and will reverently proceed [to the covenant]. Let it be early or late as you please."

'Shuh-heang said, "There is disaffection among the princes. We must show our numbers." [Accordingly], in the 8th month, on Sin-we, [Tsin] reviewed its troops, raising up their [small] flags without the banners; but [next day], Jin-shin, the banners were again attached, and the States were afraid of them.

'The people of Choo and Keu made a complaint to Tsin, saying, "Morning and night Loo keeps invading us, and we are nearly ruined, That we cannot pay our contributions is caused by Loo." The marquis of Tsin would not see the duke, and sent Shuh-hëang to decline his presence at the meeting, saying, "The States are going to make a covenant on Këalr-seuh;

but my ruler knows that he cannot serve your lordship;—and prays your lordship not to trouble yourself." Taze-fuh Hwuy-pih replied, "Your ruler believes the accusations of those Man and E, and cuts off his communications with a brother State, casting from him the descendants of the duke of Chow. Such is his Our ruler has heard your order." Shuh-hëang said, "Our ruler has here 4000 Although he were acting chariots of war. contrary to right, it would be necessary to fear him; but when he is acting in accordance with what is right, who can prove his opponent? An ox may be meagre; but if it fall upon a pig, would you not fear the pig would die? Can you forget your troubles with Nan K'wae and Tszechung? If we lead on the multitudes of Tsin, using also the forces of the other States, and taking advantage of the anger against you of Choo, Keu, K'e, and Tsang; if we come thus to punish Loo for its offences, with the opportunity afforded by those two spirits of trouble: what can we seek that we shall not get?"

'The people of Loo were frightened by these threats and accepted Tsin's commands. On Keah-seuh the States made a covenant together in Ping-k'ëw;—together, as Ts'e had submitted.

'Orders were given that the princes should repair to the cleared space [in front of the altar] at mid-day; and on Kwei-yëw, when they retired from the court [of Tsin], Tsze-ch'an commanded the servants, who had attended them on the journey, to pitch the tents [of Ching] there. Tsze-t'ae-shuli, however, stopped them, and told them to wait till the next day. In the evening, Tsze-ch'an, hearing that the tents were not yet pitched, made the servants go immediately to do it; but by this time there was no space left for them. When they came to make the covenant, Tsze-ch'an disputed about the amount of the contributions required [from Ch'ing], saying, "Formerly, the sons of Heaven regulated the amount of the contributions according to the rank of the States. Where the rank was high, the contribution was heavy;—this is the rule of Chow. [Only] from the teen tenure, was a heavy contribution required, where the rank was low. Ching ranks as [the territory of] an earl or a baron, and yet its contribution is on the scale of that of a duke or a marquis. I am afraid we cannot render it, and venture to make a matter of request concerning it. The States have agreed to abstain from wars, and to make the cultivation of friendly relations their business, but the commands of your messengers come to us every mouth. There is no regular rule for our contributions; and when our small State fails [in rendering what is required], it is held to be an offender. The object of the princes in making covenants is to preserve the small States. When our contributions and offerings have no limit set to them, we have only to wait till our ruin comes. The rule for our preservation or ruin must be made to day." The contention was continued from mid-day till dusk, when Tsin at last gave way.

'After the covenant, Tsze-t'ae-shuh blamed Tsze-ch'an, saying, "If the States had [determined to] punish us, was it right to take such a liberty [with Tsin]?" Tsze-ch'an replied, "The government of Tsin is in the hands of many families. They have no leisure, with their differences and extravagances, to punish [any other State]. If a State do not show itself strong, it will be insulted, and no longer be fit to be a State."

Par. 7. Here and elsewhere Kung-yang has for The Chuen says:—"The duke did not take part in the covenant, and the people of Tsin seized Ke-sun E-joo, and confined him in a tent, with some Teils to guard it. Shih, the herald, carrying some flowered silks in his bosom, and having a vessel with ice to drink in his hand, crawled to the tent. The guards stopped him, but he gave them the silks, and entered. The people of Tsin then took Ping-tsze back with them, Tsze-pih Tsësou (Hwuy-pih) going in attendance on him.'

[The Chuen appends here:—'When Tszech'an was returning [from the meeting], before he got to Ch'ing, he heard that Tsze-p'e was dead. He wept and cried, "There is an end of me! There is none [now] to help me in doing good. It was only he who knew me." Chungne said, "On this occasion Tsze-ch'an proved himself fit to be the foundation of his State The ode (She, II. ii. ode VII. 1) says, "Objects of complacency are these gentlemen.

The foundation of my State."

Tsze-ch'an was a superior man whom one could desire as the object of his complacency." He also said, "When the States were assembled, to adjust the business of their contributions was according to rule."

Par. 8. [The Chuen appends here:—'The people of Seen-yu, having heard that all the forces of Tsin had been raised [to go to Pingk'ew], ceased all care of their borders, and took no other precautions. On this, Seun-woo of Tsin proceeded with the 1st army from Chooyung, and made an incursion into their territory; and when he had reached Chung-jin he made a rush upon them, took great spoil, and returned.']

Par. 9. The Chuen says:—'When Two extinguished Ts'ae, king Ling removed Hea, Hoo, Shin, Taou, Fang, and Shin within the boundaries of King (—Ts'oo). On the accession of king P'ing, when he re-instated Ch'in and Ts'ae, he restored all these other States:—which was proper. Leu, son of the eldest son Yin, returned to Ts'ae:—which was proper; and Woo, son of the eldest son Taou, returned to Ch'in:—which was proper.'

The eldest son of the last marquis of True, whose name was Yew and who is called in this Chuen by his posthumous title, was sacrificed by Ts'oo, as related in xi. 9. His son Leu had since then remained in Ts'oo. Woo was the son of Yen-sze, the heir-prince of Chin, whose murder is related in viii. 1. He also had been kept in Ts'oo. But why the two princes should appear in the text, as if they had all along been the marquises of their States, does not immediately appear. Taken in connection with there being no mention of their restoration by the new king of Ts'oo, there is some ground for believing that Confucius wished, so far as it was possible, to ignore all the proceedings of Ts'oo in regard to Ts'ae and Ch'in. This cannot be argued, however, from the omission of 復 before 歸, as there had been no previous mention of Leu and Woo, as retiring from their States.

Tso-she observes that this burial of ing was 'proper.' Thirty months had since he was put to death by king Ling (See xi. 2). We are not to suppose body had been all that time unburied. robably been put into a grave without our; and now on the revival of the t was taken from that, and re-buried

1. The duke was, probably, going to make his peace with that State, and to et the liberation of Ke-sun E-joo. The says:—'The duke was going to Tsin, n Woo, said to Han Seuen-tsze, "The visit at each other's courts to speak and confirm the old friendship existing them. As we are holding his minister er, though we receive the ruler at our nere is no friendship between us. We er decline his visit." Accordingly, Sze h was sent to the Ho to stop the duke's progress.'

2. Chow-lae;—see on VIII. vii. 7. Its is there given as a city of Ts'oo. From n 'extinguished' here, however, we ippose that it had originally been the f a small State of whose chiefs we know and that, though it had been incorpoth Ts'oo, they had been allowed to con-B sacrifices of their House.

huen says:—'When Woo extinguished e, the chief minister [of Ts'oo], Tsze-k'e, ave to invade Woo. The king, however, it, saying, "I have not yet soothed [the 1] the people and the officers, nor done o the Spirits, nor completed our defenother preparations, nor fully established session of ] the State. If I were to use igth of the people [before these things n done], and suffered defeat, repentance me too late. Chow-lae's being in Woo me as its being in Ts'oo; you have only while."

said privately to Chung-hang Muli-teze, "In what respect has Loo failed to serve Tsin as well as those small States of the E? [The princes of] Loo [and yours] are brothers. Its territory is still large, and it can provide what you command. If on account of the E you cast it away, and make it serve Ts'e or Ts'oo, what good will that do to Tsin? Kindness to relatives, the cultivation of the great, rewarding contributors, and punishing those who do not contribute;—these are the duties of the presidency of covenants. Do you consider the case. There is the common saying, '()ne subject may have two lords.' Have we no [other] great State [but Tsin]?" Muhtsze told this to Han Seuen-tsze, adding, "When Ts'oo extinguished Ch'in and Ts'ae, we were not able to save those States; and now in behalf of the E we have seized this relative [of our ruler]: of what use was it to do this?" They wished accordingly to restore Ke-sun, but Hwuy-pih said, "Our ruler is ignorant of his offence; and yet, at the assembly of the States, you seized his minister. If he still be chargeable with any offence, it is competent for you to command his death. If you say that he has no offence, and that you kindly let him go, the States not having heard of it, he will appear to be making his escape from your commands. There is no letting him go in this case; I beg to act in accordance with your ruler's kindness, [declared] at a meeting." Seuen-tsze was perplexed by this, and said to Shuh-hëang, "Can you get Ke-sun to return to Loo?" He replied, "No; but Foo can." Accordingly, they sent Shuh-yu, who went and saw Ke-sun, and said to him, "Formerly, I was an offender in Tsin, and betook myself to the ruler of Loo (In connection with the affairs of Lwan Ying in Seang's 21st year). But for the help of [your grand-father] Woo-tsze, I should not have come to my present position. Although I might have got my bones restored to Tsin, the case is as if you had put the flesh on them. Must I not tell you the truth? You have been asked to return, and you will not return. I have heard from the officers that the ground is to be prepared for a lodging for you on the west of the Ho." This story he followed up with tears. Ping-taze vas afraid and returned to Loo before Hwuy Ke-sun E-joo from Tsin:—'Ke-sun | pih, who waited for the proper forms [of dismis-

Par. I. Tso says that the style of this par., here the name only is given, and not the claname, is expressive of honour to Tsin and of 40's depreciation of itself; and he adds that this 144 according to propriety. But this criticism my be called in question. The 🏯 indicating he announcement of the minister's return in the accital temple of the State, shows that that eum was a subject on which Loo congratulated welf; but we need not cast about for any Iplanation of the omission of the clan-name. he Kang-he editors themselves refer with pprobation to the view of Sun Fuli (孫復):— [Only] when a great officer had been seized, was is arrival recorded. In that record he must be and. The clan-name is not given, because had been previously mentioned (I. e, in Par. 7 [last year)."

Anarrative here gives the end of Nan K'wae's rolt (See xii. 8):—'When Nan K'wae wasabout revolt, he bound the people of Pe by a covenant. 22-tho Luou-k'e and Loo Kwei, pretending that he shad been taken ill, sent to beg of Nan K'wae, Ming, "Your servants wished to take the coveant, but we have become ill. l'ar. 3. [There is appended here an account | the procedures of king Ping in Tisoo:—

'In summer, the viscount of Ts'00 sent Jen Tan to inspect the military forces of the upper part of the State in Tsung-k'ëw, and at the same time to comfort the people, giving assistance to the poor and relief to the distressed; nurturing orphans and the young; nourishing the old and the sick; getting hold of the promising; helping sufferers from calamity; remitting the taxes of orphans and widows; pardoning [certain classes of offenders; making strict inquiry after the perverse and bad; lifting up those whose way was obstructed; showing courtesy to new comers, and giving facilities to old residents; rewarding merit, and bringing relatives together; giving employment to the virtuous, and using officers according to their ability. He also sent K'ëuh P'e to inspect the forces of the east of the State at Shaou-ling, and to take there the same methods. They were to maintain peace on the borders, so that when the people had rested, they might be employed on military services. All this was proper. ']

Par. 5 The Chuen says;— 'In autumn, in the 8th month, duke Choo-k'ëw of Keu died, and [his son], duke Këaou showed no grief, [in consequence of which] the people were not willing to obey him, and wished to raise Käng-yu, the younger brother of Choo-k'ëw, to the State. Poo-yu How hated the Kung-tsze E-k'wei, and was friendly with Käng-yu. Duke Këaou hated the Kung-tsze Toh, and was on good terms with E-k'wei. The Kung-tsze Toh formed an alliance with Poo-yu How, and concerted a plan with him, saying, "If you will kill E-k'wei, I will drive our ruler out, and we can then make Käng-yu ruler." How agreed to this.'

The death of the viscount of Keu is recorded here, it having been, we must suppose, officially notified to Lon. We have no subsequent entry however, of his burial, probably because Loo, smarting under the indignities which it had received through Keu from Tsin, would not send an officer to attend it. [There is here appended a short narrative about Ts'00:-- 'Tszek'e, chief minister of Ts'oo, had been of great service to the king, and knew not how to keep himself within rule. He formed a friendship with the Head of the Yang family, and was insatiable in his desires. The king was vexed about it; and in the 9th month, on Keah-woo, he put Tow Ching-jen to death, and extinguished the branches of the Yang family. He made Tow Sin (Son of Chring-jen), however, reside in Yun, to show that he did not forget the old services [of his fanuly].]

The Chuen says:—'In winter, in the 12th month, Poo-yu How (See on par. 5) and Tage Foo killed the Kung-tage E-k'wei of Keu, on which duke Këaou fled to Tse. The Kungtsze Toh met Käng-yu in Ts'e, from which he was escorted by Seih Tang and the Kung-tsze Ts'oo of that State, Ts'e being promised a bribe of lands.'

The ## in the text—'its,' but that word would be awkward in English before 公子. E-k'wei was, I suppose, a brother of duke Kësou; and we might translate,—' Keu put to death Ek'wei, the brother of its ruler.' We should have thought that it would have been more appropriate to intimate in the text the flight of duke Këaou. Keu being a small State, we never read in the classic of its 'great officers,' else the paragraph would have run 莒殺其大夫 公子意恢. Comp. IX. xix. 10, 11; et al. We have a narrative here of affairs in Tsin: -'Hing-how of Tsin (The son of Woo-shin of Tsuo; see the 1st narrative after VIII. ii. 6, et al.) and Yung-tsze (Also a refugee from Tsux; see the 2d narr. after IX. xxvi. 7) had a dispute about some lands of Ch'uh, which continued after a long time unsettled. When Sze King-pih went to Ts'oo, Shuh-yu was charged for the time with the administration of his duties, and Han Seuen-tsze ordered him to settle this old litigation. Yung-tsze was in the wrong, but he presented his daughter as a gift to Shuhyu, who thereon decided that Hing-how was in the wrong; and he, enraged, killed both Shuhyu and Yung-tsze in the court. Seuen-tsze consulted Shuh-hëang about this crime, and was answered, "The three were all equally guilty. You must put him who is alive to death, and expose his body, and you must [further] disgrace the [two that are] dead. Yung-tsize knew that he was wrong, and gave a bribe to buy a verdict in his favour; Foo sold his judgment in the dispute; and Hing-how took it on him to kill them. Their crimes were equally heinous. To try to make himself right when he was wrong was an instance of moral blindness; through covetousness to defeat the end of his office was an instance of black impurity; to put men to death without fear [of the law] was the act of a ruffian. One of the Books of Ha says, 'The morally blind, the blackly impure, and rufflans, are to be put to death." Such was the punishment appointed by Kaou-yaou. I beg you to follow it." Accordingly Hing-how was put to death, and his body exposed, and the corpses of Yung-tsze and Shuh-yu were [also] exposed, in the market place.

Chung-ne said, "The justice of Shub-heing was that which was transmitted from antiquity. In the government of the State, and determining the punishment [for an assigned crime], he concealed nothing in the case of his own relative Thrice he declared the wickedness of Shuh-yu without making any abatement. Whether we may say that he was righteous [is doubtful], but he may be pronounced to have been straightforward. At the meeting of P'ing-k'ew, he declared his [brother's] craving for bribes:this was to give relief to Wei, and save Tsin from the practice of cruelty. In getting hesun to return to Loo, he declared his [brother's] deceit:—this was to relieve Loo, and save Tsin from the exercise of oppression. In this legal action of Hing-how, he mentioned his [brothers] covetousness:—this was to keep the records of punishment correct, and save Tsin from partialty. By his three declarations he took away three evils, and secured three advantages. He put his brother to death and increased [his own] glory;—but this has the semblance of righteousness [only]." ']

The paragraph its place in the classic not because of any the peculiar in the sacrifice, but because of the deformation of Shuh Kung at it, and the consequent actaken. Comp. VII. viii. 3, 4.

The Chuen says:—'[The duke] being at to offer a to sacrifice in the temple of duke to orders had been given to all the officers to [in preparation for it]. Taze Shin said, "I some misfortune will happen on the day of sacrifice, for I have seen a red and black halo inaspicious for it; it is a vapour of death. Will it take effect on the officer in charge of the business?" In the 2d month, on Kwei-yëw, the sacrifice was being performed, with Shuh Kung as manager, when he died as the flute-players were entering. The musicians were then all sent away, and the business was concluded [without them]:—which was according to rule.

At the sacrifice mentioned in VII. viii. 8, only the civil dancers put away their flutes, but on this occasion all the music used at the service was stilled. The death of Shuh Kung happening at it, and while he was engaged in the superintendence of it, was a more striking event than that of Suy, which took place at a distance. It was not deemed proper, however, to suspend the sacrifice altogether.

Par. 3. For Kung-yang has A, and he leaves out the H. The part which Chaou Woo played in the revolution which seated king Ping in Ts'oo appears in the narrative on xiii. 2. He had been a faithful minister of Ts'ae. The Chuen says:—'Fei Woo-keih of Ts'oo felt hurt at Chaou Woo's being in Ts'ae, and resolved to remove him. He accordingly said to him, "In you only does the king repose confidence, and he has therefore placed you in Ts'se. You are also grown up, and it is a dis-grace that you should be in an inferior position. You must seek a higher one, and I will assist you in preferring your request." At the same time he spoke to the men who were above him, saying, "The king reposes confidence only in Chaou Woo, and has therefore placed him in Ta'se. You are not deemed equal to him; will you not find it hard to be above him? If you do not take early measures for your safety, you will find yourselves in difficulties." [In consequence of this], in summer they drove Chaou Woo from Ts'ae, when he fled to Ch'ing. The king was angry, and said, "It is only in Woo that I have confidence, and therefore I placed him in Ts'ae. But for him, moreover, I should not have reached my present position.

Why have you sent him away?" Woo-keih Why have you sent him away?" Woo-keih replied, "Do not I wish Woo [well]? But I knew before what a different man he is from others. With him in Ts'se, it would be sure soon to take wings and fly. The removal of Woo was the way to clip its wings."

Par. 4. This eclipse took place on the 10th of April, B.C. 526, and was visible in the fore-

Par. 5. The Chuen says:—'When he invaded Sēen-yu, Sēun Woo laid siege to Koo. Some of the inhabitants offered to revolt to him and surrender the city, but he (Muh-tsze in the Chuen was Woo's designation. He often appears as Chung-hang Muh-tsze) declined the proposal. The people about him said, "Since you could [in this way] get possession of the city without any toilsome efforts of the army, why do you not adopt it?" He replied, "I have heard from Shuh-hēang that, when the likings and dislikings [of superiors] are all correct, the people know to whom to commit themselves, and their affairs are all successful. If any one were to revolt with a city of ours, I should hate him extremely; when other people come to revolt with their city to us, why should I show a liking for them? If I rewarded them whom I should be hating extremely, what should I do in the case of those whom I loved? And if I did not reward them, it would be a breach of faith. How should I thus protect the people? [My way is] to advance when I am able, and to retire when my strength fails, acting on the calculation of my resources. I must not from any wish to get possession of the city have dealings with traitors. What I should lose [thereby] would be much greater [than my gain]." [He then informed] the people of Koo that they might kill those who proposed to revolt, and put their defences

'When he had invested Koo 3 months, some of the officers in it proposed to surrender it, and sent a party of the people to see Woo; but he said to them, "You still look as if you had plenty of food. Repair your walls for the present." The officers of the army said to him, "When you might get the city, you do not take it, making the people toil and continuing the troops here. In what way do you thus serve our ruler?" He replied, "I act thus to serve our ruler. If I took the city, and thereby taught the people to be indifferent to their duty, of what use would the city be? Than to pay the price of that indifference for the city it is better that they should maintain it in their old allegiance. If you trade with that indifference, there will be no success in the end; it is inauspicious to abandon old allegiance. When the people of Koo are able to serve their ruler, our people will also be able to serve theirs. By following the course of righteousness without swerving from it, being correct in my likings and dislikings, I shall get the city, and the people will know in what righteousness consists; they will be prepared to die without any wavering in their allegiance:—is not that desirable?"

'When the people of Koo announced that their

When the people of Koo announced that their provisions and other resources were exhausted, then he took the city. When he returned from its reduction, he had not put a single man to death. He took Yuen-te, viscount of Koo, back with him to Tsin.

Par. 6. Tso says this visit was on account of the meeting of P'ing-k'ëw, meaning, acc. to Too, that it was to thank Tsin for the liberation of E-joo. We may suppose it was with a less worthy object,—to get to be on fair terms with Tsin at any price.

[We have a narrative here of the royal court and an envoy of Tsin:—'In the 12th month, Sëun Leih of Tsin went to Chow to the funeral of queen Muh, Tseih T'an being the assistant-commissioner. When the funeral was over, and the king had put off his mourning, he invited [Wān-pih] (Sëun Leih) to a feast, at which the spirits were served from a tankard presented by Loo. The king said [to his guest], "Elder Sir, the States, with the single exception of Tsin, have all [sent offerings] to comfort the royal House;—how is this?" Wān-pih motioned to Tseih T'an, who thereupon replied, "At the establishment of the States, all [the rest] received brilliant articles from the royal House for the protection and comfort of their altars, so that they are able to present valuable gifts to the king. But the royal beneficence did not extend to Tsin, placed among high hills, in the neighbourhood of the Jung and the Teih, and far away from the royal House. It has hardly had time to repay its obligations to the Jung; how should it have presented such articles [to the court]?" "Have you forgotten, younger Sir?" said the king. "Our uncle Tang-shuh (First lord of Tsin) was own brother to king Ching; was it likely that he should not share [in the royal presents]? There were the drum and the great chariot of Meih-seu, which [king] Wan used at his grand reviews; and the cuirass of Keuch-kung in which [king] Woo subdued Shang:—Tang-shuh received them, to occupy the tract corresponding to Ts'an [in the heavens], and to subdue to himself the Jung and the Teih. Afterwards, there were the two chariots of [king] Scang, the axes large and small, the flavoured spirits of black millet, the red bow and a party of life-guards:—duke Wan received these (See the Chuen on V. xxviii. 8), that he might hold the lands of Nanyang, and [according to circumstances] either comfort or punish the eastern States of the kingdom. Now when the services [of Tain] were [thus] not left without acknowledgment, when its merits were recorded, when it was invested with territory, gratifled with valuable articles, distinguished with chariots and robes, and made illustrious with banners, so that the descendants [of its princes] could not forget [the royal favours], this is what may be pronounced blessing. If blessing and bounty have not lighted on [the State of our uncle [Tang-shuh], on whom have they done so? Moreover, your ancestor Sun Pih-yen had charge of the archives of Tsin, and was consulted on the great matters of the government, in consequence of which he got the clan-name of Tseih. When the two sons of Sinyew, the Tungs, went to Tsin, that State had [also] the historiographers of that surname. You are the descendant of the superintendent of the archives; --- how is it that you are so forgetful of these matters?" Teeth Tan could not reply; and when his guests went out, the king said, "Mr. Teeth will not, we may anticipate, leave any posterity. He must have numbered the archives, and yet he has forgotten [the work of] his ancestors!"

'When Tseih T'an returned [to Tsin], he told all this to Shuh-hëang, who said, 'The king will, probably, not complete his years. I have heard that a man is sure to die of that in which he delights. Now the king seeks pleasure in the midst of his grief. If he die [in the midst] of grief, it cannot be said that he has completed his years. In one year, he has had two deaths for each d which he should have mourned 3 years. At such a time to feast with the guests at his mourning, and to be further asking for gifts of valuable articles, shows excessively what he delights in in the midst of his grief. And moreover such conduct is contrary to the rules of propriety. Gifts of valuable articles are presented by the States on occasions of extraordinary meril, and not on occasions of mourning. When a death that should be mourned for 3 years has occurred, even the noblest should, according to rule, complete the mourning for it. If the son of Heaven should not complete that, yet to feast and seek pleasure at an early period must be pronounced contrary to propriety. The raise of propriety are the king's great canons. On one occasion to neglect two of them shows that he has no great canons. Words serve to make the archives; the archives serve to record the cancer. Forgetting the canons, and making a flourish of words, what use does his reference to the archive perve?"?

3 In summer, the duke arrived from Tsin.

- 4 In autumn, in the eighth month, on Ke-hae, E, marquis of Tsin, died.
- 5 In the ninth month, we had a great sacrifice for rain.

6 Ke-sun E-joo went to Tsin.

7 In winter, in the twelfth month, there was the burial of duke Ch'aou of Tsin.

[The Chuen has here a note about the duke's maining in. Tsin over the new year:—'This ring, the duke was detained there by the ople of Tsin. The text does not mention it, needing [the disgrace].']

Par. 1. The marquis of Ts'e, aware of the cay of Tsin, was now scheming to revive the i presidency of his State, and make himself other duke Hwan. During the time of Hwan, u had taken the side of the northern States. Iter his time it came under the power of Ts'oo, d we have nothing about it in the text in all s years of Seuen, Ch'ing, and Seang. Soon ler the accession of Ch'aou, it became an object suspicion to Ts'oo, as being inclined to side ainst it with Woo; and the marquis of Ts'e w took advantage of the disorders of Ts'oo to and secure its adherence to himself. But was not another Hwan, and Ts'e's time had ne by.

The Chuen says:— 'The marquis of Ts'e inded Seu. In the 2d month, on Ping-shin, his my arrived at Poo-suy, when the people of u made their submission, and the viscount, th officers of Tan and Keu, had a meeting in at place, and made a covenant with the mar-14, who received, as a bribe the tripod of Këah-). Shuh-sun Ch'aou-tsze said, "Alas for the hall States it hat there is now no leader among eprinces! The ruler of Ts'e, devoid of prinle, raises an army and invades a distant region. seembles a conference, is successful, and urns;—no one resisting him. Such is the asequence of there being no leader! To this tle of things may be applied the words of the <sup>e</sup> (She II. iv., ode X. 2),

'The honoured House of Chow is [nearly] extinguished;

There is none to put an end to the disorders.

And none know my toil."

Par. 2. For Kung-yang has . In the then on VIII. vi. 4. we read of the Man-she. by were a tribe of the Jung, whose principal the or city was in the south-west of the pres. O Chow ( ), in Ho-nan.

The Chuen says:—'The viscount of Ts'oo, ving heard that the Man-she were all in order, and that their viscount Këa had no be faith, made Jen Tan inveigle him [into his ver], and put him to death. He then took

[the territory of] the Man-she, but he proceeded to appoint Këa's son in his place:—which was proper.' Against this concluding decision of Tso the K'ang-he editors strongly protest;—considering all the circumstances of the case.

[We have here three narratives connected with Han Seuen-teze of Tsin in Ching:—

1st. 'In the 3d month, Han K'e of Tsin went on a complimentary visit to Ching, when the earl gave him an entertainment. Tsze-ch'an had warned [the various officers] beforehand, that all of them who could claim positions in the court should behave with the utmost respect. K'ung Chang, however, came late, and stood among the visitors. From that place the director of the ceremonies made him remove. He then took his place behind the visitors, from which also he was removed; and he [finally] went among the instruments of music,—followed by the smiles of the guests. When the ceremony was over, Foo-tsze reproved [Tszech'an], saying, "With the officers of the great State we ought to be particularly careful. If we often give them occasion to laugh at us, they will despise us. Though we all of us observed the rules of ceremony, those men would think meanly of us; but when a State does not observe the rules of ceremony, how can it seek for glory? K'ung Chang's losing his place was a disgrace to you." Tsze-ch'an replied with indignation, "If I issued commands which were not proper, gave out orders without sincerity, took advantage of circumstances to be partial in punishing, allowed litigations to be confused, were disrespectful at meetings [of the States] and at other courts, caused the orders of the government to be disregarded, brought on us the contempt of a great State, wearied the people without accomplishing anything, or allowed crimes to occur without taking knowledge of them;—any of these thing would be a disgrace to me. But K'ung Chang is the descendant of Tsze-k'ung who was the elder brother of one of our rulers, [thus] the heir of a chief minister and himself by inheritance a great officer. He has been sent. on missions to Chow, is honoured by the people of other States, and is known to the princes. He has had his place in our court, and maintains the sacrifices in his family [temple]. He has endowments in the State, and contributes his levies to the army. At funerals and sacrifices [of our ruling House] he has [regular] duties; he receives of the sacrificial flesh from our ruler, and sends of his own to him. At the sacrifices in our ancestral temple, he has his assigned place. He has been in offices under several rulers, and from one to another he has kept his position. Though he forgot his proper course, how can that be a disgrace to me? That prejudiced and corrupt men should all lay everything on me as minister, is because the former kings did not appoint sufficient punishments and penalties. You had better flud fault with me for something else?

2d. Seven-taze had a ring of jade, the fellow of which was in the possession of a merchant of Ching, and he begged it from the earl. Tszech'an, however, refused it, saying, "It is not an article kept in our government treasury;—our ruler knows nothing about it." Tsze-t'ae-shuh and Tese-yu said to him, "It is not a great request which Han-tsze has made, nor can we yet show any swerving from our allegiance to the State of Tsin;—Han-teze of that State is not to be slighted. If any slanderous persons should stir up strife between it and Ching, and the Spirits should assist them, so as to arouse its evil indignation, regrets [for your refusal] would be in vain; why should you grudge a ring, and thereby bring on us the hatred of the great Why not ask for it and give it to Blate? him?" Tsze-ch'an replied, "I am not slighting Tsin, nor cherishing any disaffection to it. I wish all my life to serve it, and therefore I do not give [Han-taze this ring];—[the refu-'sal is a proof of my loyalty and good faith. have heard that a superior man does not consider it hard to be without wealth, but that his calamity is to be in office and not acquire a good name. I have heard that the minister of a State does not consider the ability to serve great States and foster small ones to be his difficulty, but thinks it a calamity when he does not keep to the rules of propriety so as to establish his position. Now, when the officers of a great State are sent to a small State, if they all get what they seek, what will there be to give to them [all]? If one be gratified and another denied, the number of its offences will be [deemed to be] increased. If the requisitions of the great State are not repulsed on the principles of propriety, it will become insatiable; we shall become [as one of], its border cities, and so lose our position. Han-tsze, sent here on his ruler's commission. asks for this gem, it shows an excessive greed; -shall we make an exception of this as if it were not a crime? Why should we produce this piece of jade, thereby originating two crimes, —the loss of our own position, and the development of Han-tsze's greed? Would it not be very trivial traffic with a piece of jade to purchase such crimes?"

'Han-tsze [himself then went to] purchase [the ring] from the merchant. When the price had been settled, the merchant said that he must inform the ruler, and the great officers [of the transaction], on which Han-tsze made a request to Tsze-ch'an, saying, "Formerly, I asked for this ring, and when you thought that my doing so was not right, I did not presume to repeat the request. Now I have bought it of the merchant, who says that he must report the transaction, and I venture to ask [that you will sanction it j." Tsze-ch'an replied, "Our former ruler, duke Hwan, came with the [ancestor of this] merchant from Chow. Thus they were associated in cultivating the land, together clearing and opening up this territory, and cutting down its tangled southernwood and orach. Then they dwelt in it together, making a covenant of mutual faith to last through all generations, which said, 'If you do not revolt from me, I will not violently interfere with your traffic. I will not beg or take anything from you, and you may have your profitable markets, precious things, and substance, without my taking any knowledge of them.' Through this attested covenant, four rulers and the descendants of that merchant have preserved their mutual relations down to the present day. Now your Excellency having come to us on a friendly mission, and asking our State to take away [the ring] from the merchant by force, this was to request us to violate that covenant;—s not such a thing improper? If you get the jade, and lose a State, you would not [wish to] do the thing. If when your great State commands, we must satisfy it without any law, Ching becomes one of your border cities, and I would not with to be party to such a thing. If we present the jade to you, I do not know what the consequence may be, and venture privately thus to lay the case before you." Han-taze then declined the jade, saying, "I presumed in my stupidity to ask for the jade, which would have occasioned two [such] crimes;—let me now presume to decline it."

8d. 'In summer, in the 4th month, the 6 ministers of Ching gave a parting feast 10 Seuen-tsze in the suburbs, when he said to them, "Let me ask all you gentlemen to sing from the odes, and I will thence understand the views of Ching." Tsze-tso, (Han Ying-ts's, son of Tsze-p'e) then sang the Yay yew man te'aou (She, I. vii. ode xx.), and Seuen-tsze su4 "Good! young Sir. I have the same desire." Tsze-ch'an sang the Kaou k'ew of [the ode of] Ching (I. vii. ode VI); and Seuen-taze and "I am not equal to this." Taze-t'ae-shuh sang the K'een chang (I. vii. ode XIII.), and Senentaze said, "I am here. Dare I trouble you to go to any other body?" on which the other bowed to him. Seuen-taze then said, "Good! your song is right. If there were not such at understanding, could [the good relations of our States | continue?" Tsze-yew sang the Fung yu (I. vii. ode XVI.); Tsze-k'e (Fung She, son of Kung-sun Twan) sang the Yew neu t'ung ken (ode IX.); Tsze-lew (Yin K'wei, son of Yin Twan or Taze-shih) sang the Toh he (ode XL). Seuen-tsze was glad, and said, "Ching may be pronounced near to a flourishing condition! You, gentlemen, received the orders of your ruler to confer on me this honour, and the odes you have sung are all those of Ching, and all suitable to this festive friendliness. You are all Heads of clans that will continue for several generations; you may be without any apprehensions." He then presented them all with horses, and sang the Go tsëang (IV. i. Bk i. ode VII.) Tsze-chian bowed in acknowledgment, and made the other ministers do the same, saying, "You have quieted the confusion [of the States]; must we not acknowledge your virtuous services." [After this], Seuen-tsze went privately to Tssech'an, and presented him with a piece of jade and [two] horses, saying, "You ordered me to give up that [ring of] jade;—it was giving me a piece of jade, and saving my life. I dare not but make my acknowledgments with these things in my hand."

pare with the last of these narratives er half of the Chuen on IX. xxvii. 5.]

3. The Chuen says:—'When the duke from Tsin (He had been allowed at get away; see the note at the beginning ear), Tsze-fuh Ch'aou-pih (Son of Hwuy-he Tsze-fuhs were an offshoot from the shun clan) said to K'e P'ing-tsze, "The louse of Tsin will soon be reduced to a dition. The ruler is young and weak, six ministers are strong, extravagant, rogant. They will take advantage of ebleness of the ruler] to practise [their ys], till the practice becomes a regular Must not [the House] be reduced low?" sze said, "You are young; how should ow [any thing about] a State?"'

4. Tso repeats this, merely with the see of 'duke Ch'aou' instead of the marame.

Par. 5. Tso observes that the sacrifice was because there was a drought; and he appends the following narrative about Ching, which was suffering in the same way:—'There was a great drought in Ching, and Too Keih, with the priest Kiwan, and an attendant Foo, were sent to sacrifice on mount Sang, when they cut down the trees; but there came no rain. Tsze-chian said, "A sacrifice on a hill is intended for the nourishment of its forests. But these have cut down the trees;—their crime could not be greater." He then took from them their offices and lands.'

Parr. 6,7. The Chuen says:—Ping-tsze had gone to Tsin, to attend the funeral of duke Chiaou. He [then] said, "The words of Tszefuh Hwuy (Chiaou-pih; see the Chuen on par. 3) would seem to be true. The family of Tsze-fuh has a [worthy] son!"

IVII. 1 In the [duke's] seventeenth year, in spring, the viscount of Little Choo came to Loo to court.

2 In summer, in the sixth month, on Këah-seuh, the first day of the moon, the sun was eclipsed.

3 In autumn, the viscount of T'an came to the court of Loo.

4 In the eighth month, Seun Woo of Tsin led a force, and extinguished the Jung of Luh-hwan.

5 In winter, there was a comet in Ta-shin.

6 A body of men from Ts'oo fought a battle with Woo in Ch'ang-gan.

Par. 1. The Chuen says:—'This spring, duke Muh of Little Choo came to our court. The duke feasted with him, when Ke P'ing-tsze sang the Ts'ae shuh (She, II. vii. ode VIII.), and duke Muh responded with the Ts'ing-ts'ing chay go (II. iii. ode II). Ch'aou-tsze said, "Is he not able to rule his State, so that it will continue long?"

Par. 2. This eclipse occurred in the afternoon of August 14th, B.C. 524. The Chuen the eclipse occurred, the priest and the historiographer asked for the offerings of silk which should be employed. Ch'aou-taze mid, "On the occurrence of an eclipse, the son of Heaven does not have his table fully spread, and causes the drum to be benten at the altar of the land, while the princes of States present offerings of silk at that altar, and cause the drum to be beaten in their courts. This is the rule." Ping-tsze opposed it, saying, "Stop; it is only in the first month, before the evil influence has shown itself, that it is the Tule, on the occurrence of an eclipse, to beat the dram and present those offerings. On other occasions there is no such rule." The grand historiographer said, "That is just this month. After the sun has passed the equinox and before he has arrived at the solstice, when any calamily happens to the sun, moon, or stars, the variofficers put off their elegant robes, the ruler does not have his table fully spread, and withdraws from his principal chamber, till the time (of the eclipse) is past; the musicians beat the drums, the priest presents his offerings, and the historiographer makes an address. Hence in one of the Books of Hëa (Shoo, III. iv. 4) it is and, 'The sun and moon did not meet harmoniously in Fang. The blind [musicians] beat their drums; the inferior officers galloped and the common people ran about.' That is said of the first day of this month;—it was in the 4th month of Hëa, which is called the first month of sammer (The 4th month of Hea was the 6th of Chow. But the present text of the Shoo places the eclipse in the 9th month of the year)." [Notwithstanding this], Ping-tsze would not sollow their counsel, on which Ch'aou-tsze retired, and said, "He will [soon] show that he is disaffected. He is not treating our ruler as his ruler."

Par. 8. T'an,—see VII. iv. 1. The viscounts of T'an traced their lineage up to Kin-tven (全天氏), the dynastic title of Shaou-haon (少昊), the eldest son of Hwang Te.

The Chuen says:—'When the viscount of Tan came to our court, the duke feasted with him, and Ch'aou-tsze asked what was the reason that Shaou-haou named his officers after birds. The viscount replied, "He was my ancestor, and I know [all about] it. Before him, Hwangte came to his rule with [the omen of] a cloud. and therefore he had cloud officers, naming them after clouds; Yen-te (Shin-nung) came to his with the [onien of] fire, and therefore he had fire officers, naming them after fire; Kung-kung came to his with [the omen of] water, and therefore he had water officers, naming them after water; T'ae-haou (Fuh-he) came to his with [the omen of ] a dragon, and therefore he had dragon officers, naming them after dragons. When my ancestor Shaou-haou Che succeeded to the kingdom, there appeared at that time a phænix, and therefore he arranged his government under the nomenclature of birds, making bird officers, and naming them after birds. There were so and so Phonix-bird, minister of the calendar; so and so Dark-bird (The swallow), master of the equinoxes; so and so Pihchaou (The shrike), master of the solstices; so so and so Green-bird (A kind of sparrow), master of the beginning [of spring and autumn; and so and so Carnation-bird, (The golden pheasant), master of the close [of spring and autumn];—so and so Chuh-këw, minister of Instruction; so and so Ts'eu-këw, minister of War; so and so She-këw, minister of Works; so and so Shwang-këw, minister of Crime; so and so Kwuh-këw, minister of affairs. These five Kew kept the people collected together. The five Che (Pheasants) presided over the five classes of mechanics;—they saw to the provision of implements and utensils, and to the correctness of the measures of length and capacity, keeping things equal among the people. The nine Hoo were the ministers of the nine departments of husbandry, and kept the people from becoming dissolute. After the time of Chuen-heuh [who came after Shaou-haou], they were not able to arrange their offices by [such symbols coming] from afar, and did so by what was near at hand. Their officers being over the people, they named them from the business of the people, not being able to do otherwise."

*Chung-ne having heard of this, he had an interview with the viscount of Tan, and learned from him. Afterward he said to people, "I have heard that, when the officers of the son of Heaven are not properly arranged, we may learn from the wild tribes all round about. The remark seems to be true."

At this time Confucius was 27 years old. Too, by mistake, makes him 28.

Par. 4. For 陸 渾 Kung-yang has 賁 輝, and Kuh-lëang omits the 之 between 渾 and . For these Jung, see on VII ii. 4.

The Chuen says:—'The marquis of Tsin sent T'oo K'wae to Chow, to ask leave to sacrifice to the Loh and to [the hill of] San-t'oo. Ch'ang Hwangsaid to the viscount of Lew, "The counte-Their object nance of our visitor looks flerce. is not sacrifice, but probably an attack on the Jung. The chief of Luh-hwan is very friendly with Ts'oo; that must be the reason [for their movement]. You should make preparations for it." Accordingly orders were given for preparations against the Jung.

'In the 9th month, on Ting-maou, Seun Woo of Tain led a force, crossed [the Ho] at the ford of Keih, and made an officer of sacrifice first offer victims to the Loh. The people of Luh-hwan knew nothing [of their object, till] the army came after him; and on Kang-woo he took the opportunity to extinguish the [tribe of] Luhhwan, denouncing it for its disaffection and adherence to Ts'oo. The viscount of it fled to Ts'oo, and the multitudes to Kan-luh, where [the troops of] Chow captured many of them. Seuen-taze had dreamed that duke Wan led Seun Woo and gave him Luli-hwan, in consequence of which he made Muh-taze command the expedition and [afterwards] present his prisoners in [the temple of ] duke Wan.'

Par. 5. Ta-shin is another name for Ta-ho (大火), the seventh of the signs of the Chinese Zodiac, embracing part of Libra and Scorpio, the constellations of Fang, Sin, and Wei(房,心, 尾) in the tract of the Azure Dragon. The Chuen says:—'In winter there was a comet on the west of Ta-shin, which travelled [eastward] to the Milky way. Shin Seu said, "This broomstar serves to take away what is old and arrange something new. The doings of Heaven are constantly attended by such appearances. Now the operation of taking away occurring in Ho, when Ho appears again, the new arrangement will be seen. We may conclude that the States are going to have the calamity of fires." Tsze Shin said, "Last year I saw it, when it was still small. It was visible when Ho appeared. Now, this year, when Ho appeared, it was brilliant; —it must have remained concealed when Ho disappeared; and it has thus dwelt about Ho for a long time. It must happen as you say. Ho appears in the 3d month of 11ca, the 4th of Shang, and the 5th of Chow. The numbers of Hea are the more correct deductions from the When Ho [again] appears, the 4 heavens.

States to which this comet has reference will be, I apprehend, Sung, Wei, Chin, and Ching. Sung is the region corresponding to Ts-shin; Ch'in was the old abode of T'ae-haou; Ch'ing, that of Chuh-yung:—all of them abodes of fire. The comet is travelling to the Han of the sky, and the Han is ominous of water. Now Wei was the abode of Chuen-heuh, hence we have Te-k'ëw in it, and its star is Ta-shwuy (Great Water). Water is the husband of fire. The calamity will arise, probably, on a Ping-tsm day or a Jin-woo, when there is a meeting of vater and fire."

'P'e Tsaou of Ching said to Tsze-chin, "There are going to be fires in Sung, Wei, Ch'in, and Ch'ing on the sameday. If we sacrifice with a known goblet and a libation cup of jade, Ching will escape the fire." Tsze-chan did not agree to the proposal.

Par. 6. Ch'ang-gan was in Ts'oo, close on the southern bank of the Yang-tsze,-in the pres. dis. of Tang-t'oo (當 输), dep. Taep'ing (太平), Gan-hwuy.

The Chuen says:—'Woo invaded Ts'oo. Yang Kae, the chief minister [of Ts'oo], consulted the tortoise-shell about fighting, and got an unfavourable reply. The marshal Tsze-yu said, "We are at the upper part of the stream; why should it be unfavourable? Moreover, it is the old custom of Ts'oo for the marshal to give the charge to the shell;—allow me to divine again." [Accordingly], he propounded the matter, saying, "If I and my followers die in the conflict, and the army of Ts'oo continue it, may we inflict a great defeat on the enemy?" The answer was favourable, and they fought at Changgan. Tsze-yu died in the first onset, but the army of Ts'oo came on afterwards and greatly defeated that of Woo, capturing the [king's] vessel, Yu-hwang. The men of Suy and others who came late [for the fight] were then set to guard it. A ditch was dug all round it, down to the watersp rings, and along the channel [between it and the river] was piled up [lighted] charcoal. At the same time the army was drawn up, waiting further orders.

'The Kung-taze Kwang of Woo made a request to all his men, saying, "That we lost the vessel of our former kings is not my fault only, but you all share in it. I would ask your belp to retake it, and you will thus save me from death." They all agreed; and he then sent three men with long beards to lie hid by the side of the vessel, saying to them, "When we cry out I'mhwang, you must auswer." The army followed in the night, and thrice cried out Yu-hwang, when the men responded one after another. The men of Ts'oo came at the cries, and killed them; but their army fell into confusion, and the men of Woo gave them a great defeat, retook the Yu-hwang, and carried it back with them."

The men with long beards were intended to appear as if they belonged to the army of Ta'00, few of the people of Woo having the distinction of such an appendage. This circumstance helped to throw the army of Ts'00 into confusion.

dyn.) reached its height,—in consec extravagance. And [now, on this Tih has consummated his extrava Par. 1 Two repeats this par. with the change of 'duke Ping' for the earl's name.

Par. 1. We have here the fulfilment of the vaticinations in connection with the comet of the preceding winter. The Chuen says:—'In summer, in the 5th month, the Ho star made its first appearance at dusk. On Ping-taze there was wind, and Taze Shin said, "This is called a north-east wind; it is a preduce of fire. In 7 days, we may presume, the fire will break-out." On Mow-yin the wind was great; on Jinwoo it was vehement; and the capitals of Sung, Wei, Chin, and Ching all caught fire. Taze Shin went up on the top of the magazine of Ta-ting to look in the direction of them, and said, "In a few days, messengers from Sung, Wei, Chin and Ching will be here with announcements of fire"

'P'e Tsaou said, "If you do not do as I said (See at the end of the narrative on par. 5 of last year), Ch'ing will suffer from fire again." The people [also] begged that his advice should be taken, but Tsze-ch'an still refused. Tsze-t'ae-shuh said, "The use of precious articles is to preserve the people. If there be [another] fire, our city will be nearly destroyed. If they can ave it from that destruction, why should you grudge them?" Tsze-ch'an replied, "The way of Heaven is distant, while the way of man is near. We cannot reach to the former; what means have we of knowing it? How should Tsaou know the way of Heaven? He is a great talker, and we need not wonder if his words sometimes come true." Accordingly he would not agree to the proposal, and there was no repetition of the fire.

'Before the calamity occurred in Ch'ing, Le beih said to Tsze-ch'an, "There are great portents of something to occur. The people will be slarmed and excited; the city will be nearly rained; I myself will die, and not survive till its occurrence. Would it be proper to remove the city to another site?" "It might be so," was the reply, "but I am not sufficient to determine on such a removal." When the fire occurred, Le Seih was dead; but as he was not yet buried, Tue-ch'an made 30 men remove his coffin. When the fire broke out, Tsze-ch'an dismissed a Kung-toxe and Kung-sun of Tsin, [who had just arrived], at the east gate. He made the minister of Crime send recent visitors out of the city, and prohibit older visitors from leaving their houses. He made Tsze-k'wan and Tszeshang go round and inspect all the places of acrifice, and go on to the grand temple. He made Kung-sun Tang remove the great tortoiseshell; the priests and historiographers remove the Spirit-tablets to the stone niches in the Chow temple, and announce [the calamity] to the former rulers; and the officers in charge of the treasuries and magazines to look well after their departments. Shang Chring-kung kept the keepers of the palace on guard, sent out all the old innates of the harem, and put them in a place which the fire could not reach. The ministers of War and Crime took post in order along the course of the fire, and went where it was burning. The people at the foot of the wall were ent up upon it in companies of five.

'Next day, orders were given to the magistrates in the country to take good care of the People under them. The people of the suburbs and historiographers in clearing the ground on the north of the city. Deprecatory sacrifices against fire were offered to Heuen-ming (The Spirit of water) and Hwuy-luh (The Spirit of fire); and prayers were offered on the walls all round about. A writing was made of the houses that had been burned; their taxes were remitted; and materials were supplied to the owners. For three days there was a [general] weeping, and markets were not opened. Messengers were sent to announce [the calamity] to the [other States].

'Sung and Wei [also] adopted similar measures. But Ch'in took no measures against the fire, nor did Heu send any message of condolence. From this a superior man might know that Ch'in and Heu would be the first of the States to regish'

States to perish.'

Par. 3. Yu was a small State whose principal city was 15 le north from the pres. dep. city of E-chow. Sung restored Yu in the next year, but before long we shall find that it was absorbed by Loo.

The Chuen says:—'In the 6th month, the people of Yu were engaged upon the public lands, when a body of men from Choo surprised the city. One of the people was about to shut the gate, but a Shoo-ite, Yang Lo, cut off his head; on which the attackers entered it, made all in it prisoners, and carried them off to Choo. The viscount of Yu (We must suppose he had been with the people in the fields) said, "I have nowhere to go to;" and he followed his family to Choo. Duke Chwang of Choo returned to him his wife, but kept his daughter.'

Par. 4. The Chuen says:—'In autumn, when there was the burial of duke P'ing of Ts'aou, our officer who had gone to attend it had an interview with Loo, earl of Yuen, and in conversation with him found that he did not like learning. On his return he told this to Min Tsze-ma, who said, "There will [soon] be disorder in Chow. There must be many there who talk in that way, before such an idea reaches the great men. The great men are troubled at errors [of some who have learned], and become deluded [on the subject], till they say, "Learning may be done without. The want of learning does no harm." But it is an accidental circumstance when the want of learning does no harm. From such a condition inferiors will be usurping, and superiors will be set aside;—is it possible that disorder should not ensue? Learning is like cultivation; if people do not learn, there will be decadence and decay. We may judge that the family of Yuen will come to ruin."

[We have here a sequel to the narrative under par. 2:—'Tsze_ch'an of Ching, in consequence of the fire, celebrated a great sacrifice at the attar of the land, and ordered exorcisms and deprecatory sacrifices throughout the State, in order to remove entirely the plague of the fire;—all which was in accordance with propriety). He then inspected the weapons, and was going to hold a review. For this it was necessary to clear the way. The temple of Tsze-t'ae-shuh was on the south of the road, and his dwelling-house on the north of it, so that the space between was small. [Orders were given to clear them away.] but three days after the time [it was not done, and Tsze-t'ae-shuh] made the workmen stand with their implements on the south of the road and the north of the temple, saying to them, "When Tsze-ch'an passes by you, and orders you to clear away quickly, then fall to pulling down right before you." [Soon after], Tsze-ch'an passed by, as he was going to court, and was angry [at the dilatoriness], so the clearers began pulling down on the south. However, when he came to the cross way, he made his attendants stop them, saying, "Pull down on the north." When the fire occurred, Tsze-ch'an gave out weapons, and sent men on the parapets. Tsze-t'ae-shuh said to him, "Is not Tsin likely to call us to account for this?" "I have heard," was the reply, "that, when a small State forgets to keep guard, it is in a perilous position; how much more must it be so on an occasion of calamity! It is being prepared which keeps a State from being made little of." By and by, the officer of Tsin, on the borders, came to complain to Ch'ing, saying, "When Ching suffered such a calamity, the ruler of Tsin and the great officers did not dare to dwell at ease. They consulted the tortoiseshell and the reeds, and ran to sacrifice to the hills and streams, grudging neither victims nor gems. The calcunity of Ching was a grief to our ruler. And now, your minister, with looks of determination, is giving out weapons and sending men up on the parapets. On whom is he going to lay the blame? We are afraid, and dare not but lay our thoughts before you." Tazech'an replied, " According to what you say, the calamity of our State was a grief to your ruler. There were defects about our government, and Heaven sent down the calamity. We are further afraid, lest some evil, slanderous people should take the opportunity to form a plot and excite the covetousness of people against us, which would be still more disadvantageous to our State, and increase the grief of your ruler. If we are fortunate enough to escape ruin, we shall be to Pih-yu.'

able to explain [our conduct]. If we are not so fortunate, however much your ruler may be grieved for our fate, explanation will be foo late. Ch'ing has other neighbours on its borders. Its hope is in Tsin, and to it is its recourse. We serve Tsin;—how should we dare to admit a spirit of disaffection to it?"]

Par. 5. Pih-yu was a city of Ts'oo, called also Seih ( ), by which name it is mentioned in the Chuen on V. xxv. 5. It was in the pres. Tang Chow ( ), dep. Nan-yang, Ho-man. In the time of duke Yin, the capital of Heu was Heu-ch'ang (See on I. xi. 3). In the 15th year of duke Ch'ing, it was removed to Sheh ( ). See VII. xv. 1). In ix. 2, a further removal to E is recorded. In the 13th year, king Ling of Ts'oo appears to have removed it further within Ts'oo; but his successor, king P'ing, removed Heu back to Sheh; from which the change in the text was made.

The Chuen says:—'The king's son Shing of Ts'oo, director of the Left, said to the viscount, "Heu's natural position to Ching is that of an enemy; and through its situation in the territory of Ts'oo, it observes no ceremony to Ch'ing. Tan and Ching are now on good terms. If Ching attack Heu and is assisted by Tsin, Ts'00 will lose the territory;—why not remove Hea? Hea cannot at present be entirely devoted to Ts'or Ching has now good government, so that Hea says, "It is my old State;" and Ching says [or Heu], "It is the State which I captured." Shen in the State of Ts'oo is like a screen outside the barrier wall. The country is not to be thought little of; the State [of Ch'ing] is not to be slighted; Heu is not to be captured; enmity is not to be excited:—your lordship should consider the case." In winter the viscount of Troo employed this Shing to remove Heu to Seil, 🛂

- XIX. 1 In the [duke's] nineteenth year, the duke of Sung invaded Choo.
  - 2 In summer, in the fifth month, on Mow-shin, She, heir-son of Heu, murdered his ruler Mae.

3 On Ke-maou, there was an earthquake.

- 4 In autumn, Kaou Fah of Ts'e led a force and invaded Keu.
- 5 In winter there was the burial of duke Taou of Heu.

[The Chuen introduces here two short narratives relative to Ts'oo.

1st. 'This spring, Ch'ih, director of Works in Ta'oo, removed Yin to Hea-yin; and Tsze-hëa, the chief minister, walled Këah. Ch'aou-tsze said, "Ts'oo cannot occupy itself about the States [now]; it can barely maintain itself, and try to preserve the succession of its rulers, one after another."'

2d. '[One time], when the viscount of Ts'oo had gone [on a mission] to Ts'ae, the daughter of the border warden of Yun-yang had sought his company, and the issue was [recognized as] the eldest son Këen. When he succeeded to the State, he appointed Woo Ch'ay tutor to Këen, and Fei Woo-keih assistant-tutor. Woo-keih was no favourite with his charge; and wishing to discredit him with the king, he suggested that it was time Këen should be married. The king [accordingly] engaged for Këen a daughter of Ts'in, and Woo-keih took part in meeting her, and advised the king to take her for himself. In the 1st month, she, the lady Ying, [who became] wife of the ruler of Ts'oo, arrived from Ts'in.']

Par. 1. See on the 3d par. of last year. The Chuen here says:—'The wife of [the viscount of] Yu was a daughter of Hëang Seuh of Sung, and therefore Hëang Ning [now] begged that an expedition might be undertaken [against Choo]. In the 2d month, the duke of Sung invaded that State, and laid siege to Ch'ung, which he took in the third month. Choo then returned all the captives whom it had taken from Yu. Officers of Choo, E, and Seu, had a meeting with the duke of Sung; and on Yih-hae they made a covenant together in Ch'ung.'

Far. 2. The Chuen says:—'In summer, duke Taou of Heu had fever; and in the 5th month, on Mow-shin, he drank some medicine from bu eldest son Che, and died. The son then fled to Tsin. On the words of the text,—'mardered his ruler,' the superior man will say, "If a min use all his mind and strength in serving be ruler, he may let his physic alone." Kuh-leng gives rather a different account of this matter: 'Che did not commit the murder, but it is here said that he did so,—in reproof of Che. Che and "I have been a party with the murderer." He therefore would not take his father's place, but resigned the State to his younger brother, wepand refused proper nourishment, so that he died within a year. Therefore the superior man here reproves him, as he reproved himself.' Kungyang, also, without going into particulars, says that Che was not the murderer. The critical conclude from Kuh-lëang's account that Che's crime was that he had not tasted, as he ough to have done, the medicine supplied to his father before he gave it to him, whereas Tso would seem to say that he had himself ignorantly prepared the medicine, a wrong one, which led to his father's death. Whatever the real facts were, it is difficult to reconcile the bare, hard statement of the text with our ideas of histor cal justice.

Par. 3. the fine of the Chian Tree two occurred in the time of duke Chian; this one, and one in his 23d year.

The Chuen appends a narrative here shout affairs in Ts'00:—'The viscount of Ts'00 prepared a naval expedition to invade Puh. Fei Woo-keih said to him, "Tsin's leading position is owing to its being near to the great States, while Ts'00, through its remote and observe rall Shing-foo on a great scale, and place your idest son there, to communicate with the northern regions, while your majesty keeps agether those of the south, you will get possession of all under heaven." The king was pleased, and took his advice. In consequence of this, Këen, the king's eldest son, dwelt in Shing-foo. [About the same time], the chief ninister Tsze-hëa went on a complimentary mission to Ts'in, to make acknowledgments for the king's wife.]'

Par. 4. The Chuen says:—'When Kaou Fah nyaded Keu, the viscount of that State fied to Ke-chang, and Fah sent Sun-shoo to attack it. At an earlier period, the viscount of Keu had put to death the husband of a woman of Keu, who thenceforth lived as a widow; and in her old age she had taken up her residence in Kechang, where she span a rope with which she measured [the height of the wall] and then kept concealed; but when the troops [of Ts'e] came, she threw it over the wall, [hanging down] outside. Some one showed it to Tsze-chen (Sunshoo), who made his soldiers climb up by means of it. When 60 of them had got up, the rope broke; but the troops then beat their drums and shouted, the men on the wall shouting also, so that duke Kung of Keu became frightened, opened the west gate, and left the place. In the 7th month, on Ping-taze, the army of Ts'e entered Ke.'

Par. 5. Many of the critics think that this entry of the burial of duke Taou of Heu is a condonation by the sage of his son's share in his death. Confucius is thus made to charge the son first with the murder of his father, of which he was not guilty, and then in this indirect way to withdraw the charge!

[We have here four narratives appended in the Chuen:—

lst, of affairs in Ch'ing. 'This year, Sze

Yen (Tsze-yew; 一道) of Ching died. He had married the daughter of one of the great officers of Tsin, by whom he had Sze, who was The elder Rull young [when his father died]. members of his family, however, raised Tsze-hëa, (an uncle of Yen, called Sze K'eih; 题 乞) in his room. Taze-ch'an, who disliked his character, and because the proceeding, moreover, was not according to the natural order, did not approve of the appointment, neither did he stop it; thereby alarming the Sze family. In the meantime, Sze ent word to his mother's brother of it; and in the winter the people of Tsin sent a messenger with some offerings of silk to Ching, and to ask about the cause of the appointment of Sze R'eih. The Sze family were frightened in consequence, and K wished to run away. Tsze-ch'an would not allow him to go; and when he begged leave to consult the tortoise-shell, neither would the minister agree to that. The great officers were consulting what reply should be given [to the envoy of Tsin], but without waiting [for the result of their deliberations], Tsze-ch'an replied whim, "Through want of the blessing of Heaven On Ching, several of our ruler's officers have died pestilences, great and small, or by too early leaths, or even before they had got any name; and now we have lost our late great officer Yen. his son being young and feeble, the elders of the family, fearing lest their ancestral temple | Woo].

should be without a [proper] master, consulted privately among themselves, and appointed the oldert of his near relatives. Our ruler and the elders [of his council] said [to themselves], 'Heaven, perhaps, is causing [the family] to fall into disorder;—why should we take knowledge of it?' There is the common saying about not passing by the gate of a family in disorder. If in [any family of] the people there be the confusion of strife, and we are still afraid to pass by it, how much more should we be afraid in a case where the disorder is caused by Heaven! Your Excellency now asks the cause [of this appointment]; but since our ruler does not presume to take knowledge of it, who is there that really knows it? At the meeting of Ping-kiew, in renewing the old covenants, your ruler said, 'Let no State fail in the discharge of its duties;' but if, when any of the ministers of our ruler leaves the world, the great officers of Tsin must determine who shall be his successor, this is to make Chring a district or horder of Tain; it ceases to be a State." He then declined the offerings, and replied to the mission by one to Tsin, the people of which let the matter drop.'

2d, relating to affairs in Ts'oo. "The people of Ts'oo walled Chow-lae (See XIII. 12. Ts'oo must have retaken the place.), on which Scuh, director of Shin, said, "The men of Ts'00 are sure to be defeated there. Formerly, when Woo extinguished Chow-lae, Tsze-k'e asked leave to attack it, but the king said, 'I have not yet comforted the minds of the people.' The state of things is still the same; and we are walling Chow-lae to provoke Woo:—is it possible we should not be defeated?" An attendant who was by him said, "The king has been unwearied in his beneficence, and has allowed five years' rest to the people;—he may be said to have comforted their minds." Seuh replied, "I bave heard that he who comforts the minds of the people is moderate in all his internal expenditure, and establishes the proofs of his virtue abroad, so that the people rejoice in their life, and there are no marauders nor enemies. Now [the king's] palaces are [built and beautified] without measure; the people are kept in daily terror, so that they are dying or removing, wearied with their toils, and forgetful both of their sleep and food. There is no comforting of them."'

8rd, relating to affairs in Ching. 'There were great floods in Ching; and [some] dragons fought in the pool of Wei, outside the She gate. The people asked leave to sacrifice to them; but Tsze-chian refused it, saying, "If we are fighting, the dragons do not look at us; when dragons are fighting, why should we look at them? We may offer a deprecatory sacrifice, but that is their abode. If we do not seek anything of the dragons, they will not seek anything from us." On this [the people] desisted [from their request.

4th, relating to Ts'oo and Woo. 'Tsze-hëa, the chief minister, spoke to the viscount of Ts'oo about Kwei-yëw (See the Chuen on V. 8) saying, "What offence is he chargeable with?' The words of the common saying might be applied to Ts'oo,—'He is angry with the members of his family, and he shows his anger in the market-place.' It would be well to put away the former resentment against him." [The viscount] accordingly sent Kwei-yëw back to Woo].

- XX. 1 In the [duke's]. twentieth year, it was spring, the king's first month.
  - 2 In summer, the Kung-sun Hwuy of Ts'aou fled from Mung to Sung.
  - 3 In autumn, some ruffians killed Chih, the elder brother of the marquis of Wei.
  - 4 In winter, in the tenth month, Hwa Hae, Hëang Ning, and Hwa Ting of Sung fled from that State to Ching.
  - 5 In the eleventh month, on Sin-maou, Leu, marquis of Ts'se, died.

The Chuen introduces under this spring two narratives. The 1st is astrological; and Tso-she, in introducing it, seems to change the 'king's first month' of the text into the king's 2d month, the 1st day of which was the day of the winter The officers of the calendar had omitted to make an intercalary month after the 12th month of last year, which they ought to have done, making this year commence on the dny of the solstice. The 5th year of duke He commenced on that day; seven periods of 19 years (= 183 years) had intervened. This 20th year of Ch'aou, therefore, was the 1st of another period, and should, had the intercalation been always correctly made, have fallen on the solstice. There is here the indication of another error in the calendar, for in this year, which was Kemaou ( ), the solstice fell on Sin-maou, (辛卯), two days later than Tso-she's Kech'ow.

"This year, in spring, in the king's second month, on Ke-ch'ow, the sun reached the limit of his southern path (I. a., it was the winter solstice). Tsze Shin, having looked at all the indications of the sky, said, "This year there will be confusion in Sung. That State will be nearly brought to ruin, and it will be 3 years before the evil is arrested. There will [also] be a great death in Ts'aou." Shuh-sun Ch'aoutsze said, "Well then, [the evil in Sung] will arise from [the descendants of dukes] Tae and Hwan; their ambitious extravagance and want of propriety are excessive; it is there that the disorder will be found."

2d, relating to affairs in Ts'oo. 'Fei Woo keih said to the viscount of Ts'00, "Këen, with Woo Ch'ay, is intending to revolt with the territory beyond the barrier wall, considering himself there equal to Sung or Ching. The and Tsin also will both assist him, with the intention of injuring Ts'no. The thing will be successful." The king believed him, and asked Woo Ch'ay, who replied "The one fault which you committed (Appropriating to himself has son's bride) was more than enough; why do you believe slanderers?" The king then made him be seized, and sent Fun Yang, the marshal of Shingfoo, to kill his own eldest son, but that officer warned Keen to go away before his arrival; and in the 8d month that prince fled to Sung. The king then called Fun Yang [back to the capital] who made the people of Shing-foo seize him, and carry him thither. "The words," said the king, "went forth from my mouth, and entered into your ears; -who told Keen of them?" "I did," was the reply. "O ruler and king, you had [formerly] commanded me to serve Keen as 1 would serve yourself. In my want of ability I could not allow myself in any way to deviate from this, but regulated my conduct by that first command. The second I could not bear to he thing was done, I repented of it; but is then of no avail." The king asked, in these circumstances did you dare to re?" Yang said, "I had been sent on a sion which I had failed to execute; if I used to come when called here, I should en twice a traitor; and though I might ade my escape, no place would have I me." The king said, "Return, and the duties of your office as before."

-keih said [to the king], "The sons of re men of ability. If they should be in would be to the grief of Ts'oo. Why them, making their coming a condition r father's pardon? They are virtuous ing, and are sure to come. If you do 10, there will be trouble hereafter." On king sent to call them, saying, "Come, will liberate your father." Shang, the idant of Tang, said to his younger broun, "Do you go to Woo, and I will to the capital], and die. My wisdom is ial to yours. I can die, and you can Having received this summons, based romise to liberate our father, it would 10t to go. When one's nearest relatives ightered, it would not do not to repay ry. To hurry to death for the liberation ther is filial duty; to act on a calculation can be accomplished is virtue; to select ty to be performed and go to it is wisdom; death is before him and not try to avoid our. Our father must not be abandoned; ie must not be allowed to perish. Do rt yourself to the utmost. Our best for each to allow the other to take his

Shang then returned [to Ying]; and when eard that Yun had not come, he said, iler of Ts'oo and his great officers will ske their meals late," Both father and put to death in Ts'oo. Yun went to id spoke to Chow-yu of the advantages king Ts'oo. The Kung-tsze Kwang, ', said, "He wishes to revenge the of the members of his family, and ot be listened to." [On this] Yun said, Iwang has another object in his mind. the meantime seek for braves to take with him, and will wait in the borders of e [for the development of his ambition]." ngly, he introduced Chuen Sheh-choo ing], and commenced farming himself orders' ty of Ts'aou, in the north of the pres. I Ts'aou-chow. The specification of flight as not taking place from Ts'aou but from Mung in Ts'aou, has led to eculation among the critics. We must that Mung was the city belonging to family; but whether he had been holding olt against the earl of Ts'aou, or what asatisfactory relations there had been them, can only be matter of conjecture. IXIL 2.

Chuen turns here to the affairs of 'Duke Yuen of Sung was without good d had many private favourites, while the claus of Hwa and Hëang. Hwa d Hwa Hae consulted with Hëang

Ning, saying, "It is better to be driven into exile than to die. Let us anticipate [the duke]." [Accordingly], Hwa Hae pretended to be ill, to inveigle [into his power] the scions of the ducal House; and when they came to inquire for him, he made them be seized. In the 6th month, on Ping-shin, he put to death the Kungtszes Yin, Yu-jung, Choo, and Koo, and the Kungsuns Yuen and Ting, and confined Hëang Shing and Heang Hang in his granary. The duke went to the house of the Hwa to beg [the liberation of those two], but Hae refused it, and made the duke himself a prisoner. On Kweimaou he received the duke's eldest son Lwan, and his full brother Shin, with the Kung-tsze Te, as hostages. The duke on his part took Woo-ts'eih the son of Hwa Hae, Lo the son of Hëang Ning, and K'e the son of Hwa Ting, as hostages; and made a covenant with the Hwa.']

Par. 8. For Kung and Kuh have This Chih was the rightful heir of the State of Wei. For the reason why he was passed over, and the succession given to his younger brother, see on VII. 8. The Chuen says:— 'Kung-mang Chih of Wei treated Ts'e P'aou with contempt, and deprived him of his office of minister of Crime, and of [his city] Keuen, which he would restore to him when he was engaged on service, and take from him [again] when he was not so engaged. He [also] hated Pih-kung He and Poo superintendent of markets, and wished to put them out of the way. [At the same time] the Kung-tsze Chaou had an intrigue with Seuen Këang, the widow of duke Sëang; and, being afraid, he wished to take advantage of circumstances to raise an insurrection. In this way, Ts'e Paou, Pih-kung He, Poo the superintendent of markets, and the Kung-tsze Chaou united in an insurrection.

'Before this, Ts'e P'aou had introduced Tsung Loo to Kung-mang, who appointed him to the 8d place in his chariot. Contemplating the insurrection, [P'aou now] said [to Loo], "You are acquainted with the badness of Kung-mang. Do not ride in his chariot with him, for I am going to kill him." Loo replied, "It is through you that I am in the service of Kung-mang. You recommended me on the ground of my character, and therefore he has not been distant to me. Although he is bad, and I was aware of it, yet for the gain of it I have served him, and would not leave him;—that was my fault. If now I should slink away on hearing of the [impending] calamity, I should falsify your [words about me]. Do what you have in hand. I will die in it, and thereby complete my service of you. I will return and die with Kungmäng."

'On Ping-shin, the marquis of Wei was at Ping-show, and Kung-mang had a sacrifice outside the Kae-hwoh gate. Ts'e-tsze's family pitched a tent outside the gate, and concealed men-at-arms in it. He made the priest Wa place a spear amid the faggots in a waggon which was set to stop up the gate, and at the same time he sent a carriage to follow Kung-mang, if he should get out. Hwa Ts'e was acting as chariot-eer to Kung-mang, Tsung Loo being the 4th person in the chariof; and when they came to the turn in the gate, one of the Ts'es took the spear to strike Kung-mang, whom Tsung Loo tried to cover with his back. The blow cut off

hurried rapidly to the capital, which he entered by the Yuch gate. King Pe drove his chariot, in which was also Kung-nan Ts'oo, while Hwa Yis occupied the supporting chariot. they arrived at the palace, Hung Lew-t'uy got as a 4th man into the chariot of the duke, who then took into it his most valuable articles and left. Taxe-chin, a superintendent of the markets, met him in the Ma-loo street, and followed him. When he passed the house of the Tr'e, he made Hwa Yin, with the upper part of his body bared, hold an umbrella to cover where he was exposed. One of the Tree let fly an arrow at the dake, which hit Nan Two in the back. In this way the duke got out of the city, and Yin shut the gate of the suburbs behind them, getting over the wall himself afterwards and following. The duke went to Sze-nësou. Seih Choo-ts'oo in the night got out at a hole, and followed him on foot.

'The marquis of Two had sent Kung-sun Tsing on a complimentary mission to Wei. When he had left [the capital of Twe], he heard of the confusion in Wei, and sent to ask where he should go to accomplish his mission. The marquis said, " He is still within the boundaries of the State, and is the ruler of Wei; do you discharge your mission to him." Tsing then went to Sze-neaou, and begged there to deliver his message. [The marquis of Wei], however, declined to receive it, saying, "A fugitive, without ability, I heve failed in guarding my alters, and am here in the jungle. There is no place in which you can condescend to deliver your ruler's message." The guest replied, "My ruler charged me in his court that I should deport myself humbly as one of your officers. I dare not think of anything else." The host rejoined, "If your ruler, kindly regarding the friendship between his predecessors and mine, [has sent you] on a bright visit to my poor State, to support and comfort its alters, there is my ancestral temple, [where I should receive you]." On this [the envoy | desisted from his purpose. The marquis begged earnestly to see him, but could os obtain a favourable reply. Tsing, however, sent him [some good] horses in place of seeing him, [that being impossible] while he had not yet discharged his commission; and the marquis employed them for his chariot.

'The guest proposed keeping watch at night; but the host declined [the service], saying, "The sad circumstances of my condition as a fugitive must not be allowed to affect you, Sir. Your followers must not be subjected to the duties arising from my position here in the jungle. I venture to decline your proposal." The guest replied, "I am an inferior officer of my ruler, as a herdsman or a grown of your Lordship. If I am not allowed to share in guarding you when you are thus abroad, I shall be forgetting my duty to my ruler. I am afraid I shall not escape the charge of being an offender, and beg you to deliver me from the risk of death." He then himself took bell in hand, and joined all night long the torch-bearers.

· K'cu-tsze, the steward of the Ts'e family, had called Pih-kung-taze [to an interview with him]. The steward of Pib-kung was not privy to the matter, and laid a plot to kill K'eu-tsze, after which i On Ting-one, the last day of the moon, the mar-·When the duke heard of the insurrection, he : quis [again], entered [his capital], and made a covenant with Pih-kung He near the river Pang. In autumn, in the 7th month, on Movwoo, he imposed a covenant on the people. In the 8th month, on Sin-hae, the Kung-taze Chaon, Poo the superintendent of markets, Tsse-yah Senou, and Tuze-kaou Fang, fied to Tsin. In the interculary month, on Mow-shin, Senen Keng was put to death. The marquis conferred on Fibkung He the honorary epithet of Ching-tase, and on Seih Choo-ts-oo that of Ching-tsze, and bestowed on them the burial place of the Ts'e family. He announced the [restoration of ] tranquility to Tre, making mention of the [admirable] behaviour of Taze-shih (The Kung-sun Tring). The marquis of Ts'e was about to drink, [when the message arrived], and he gave [a cup] to the great officers all round, saying, "There is a lesson for you, gentlemen." Ynen Ho-ke declined the cup, saying, "If we share in Tsing's reward, we must also share in any punishment [he may incur]. In the Announcement to the prince of K'ang (Shoo, V. ix. 6; but the words quoted are not in the text, and they are a very roundabout deduction from what it says), it is said, 'The crimes of father or son, younger or elder brother, do not reach beyond the individual's self;' how much more is this rate applicable to officers! I do not presume to desire your gift in violation of [that rule of] the former kings."

'When Kin Chang (A disciple of Confucium; see Ana. IX. vi. 4) heard of the death of Tsung Loo, he wished to pay a visit of condolence to his family. Chung-ne, however, said to him, "Why should you pay such a visit for https://www. through whom Ts'e P aou proved a ruffian and Mang Chih was murdered? A superior man doss not eat [the bread of ] the wicked, nor receive [the advances of] rebels; he dues not for the sake of gain endanger himself by corruption, nor treat others evilly, nor conceal unrighteesness, nor violate the rules of propriety."'

On the in the text compare on IX. z. 8. The individual intended by the term here is Ts'e P'aou.

Par. 4. Kung-yang bas prof for par. Chuen says:—'On the insurrection of the Hon and the Heang in Sung, the Kung-taze Shing (A son of duke Ping, XI. 1), the Kung-sun Ke, Yoh Shay, the marshal K'čang, Hčang E, Hčang Ching, Keen of Ts'oo (See the 2d narrative at the beginning of the year) and Keah (The reading here is uncertain, whether H or H) of E, left the State to flee to Ching. Their followers fought with the Hwa clan at Kwei-yen, where Tsze-shing was defeated, after which he went 10 Tsin. Hwa Hae and his wife were accustomed to wash their hands and then feed the Kung-tart who were hostages with them, taking afterwards their own meal. The duke and his wife every day would go to their house with food for the Kung-tazes, and then return to the palace. Hwa Hae was annoyed at this, and wished to send the Kung-tazes home. Heang Ning 🕬 to him, "It was because he has not good faith that you took his son as a hostage. If you send them back, we shall die very soon." The dake begged [the assistance] of IIwa Po-sny, and plied, "I do not grudge dying [for you], but nile you wish to get rid of your sorrow, will it t be increased and prolonged [by such a step]? nis is why I am afraid of it; should I [otherse] presume not to obey your command?" se duke said, "My son will die according as it appointed for him, but I cannot bear the disace [of my position]."

'In winter, in the 10th month, the duke put to ath the hostages left with him by the Hwa d Heang, and attacked those clans, when eir chiefs fled to Ch'in, and Hwa Tang to oo. Heang Ning had wished to put to death e [duke's] eldest son, but Hwa Hae said, We have opposed our ruler and are going rth; if we also kill his son, who will receive 37 And moreover to send him back will be a act of merit." [Accordingly], he made the 1b-minister of Crime, Kang, take [the hostages] ack to the duke, saying to him, "You are dvanced in years, and cannot take service in any ther [State]. If you take these three Kungares back as evidence of your faith, you will be pardoned," As the Kung-taxes entered [the palace], Hwa Kang was going away from the gate, when the duke suddenly saw him, took him by the hand, and said, "I know that you are not guilty. Come in, and resume your office.'

Par. 5. For Tso-she has In. See the record of Leu's succession to the marquisate of Tsus in XIII. 9.

We have here four narratives in the Chuen:-

lst, relating to affairs in Ts'e:—' The marquis of the had a scabbiness which issued in intermittent fever, and for a whole year he did not get better, so that there were many visitors from the various States [in the capital], who had come to inquire for him. Keu of Lëang-k'ëw and E K'wan said to him, "We have served the Spirits more liberally than former rulers did; but now your lordship is very ill, to the grief of all the princes;—it must be the crime of the priests and the historiographers. The States, not knowing this, will say that it is because we have not been reverential [to the Spirits]; why should your lordship not put to death the priest A00 and the historiographer Yin, and thereupon give an answer to your visitors." The marquis was pleased and laid the proposal before Gan-taze, rho replied, "Formerly, at the covenant of sung, K'euh Këen asked Chaou Woo of what dad had been the virtue of Fan Hwuy (See the arrative on IX. xxvii. 2, 5), and was answered, The affairs of his family were well regulated; then conversing [with his ruler] about the tate, he told the whole truth, without any priate views of his own. His priests and historioraphers, at his sacrifices, set forth the truth, nd said nothing to be ashamed of. The affairs I his family afforded no occasion for doubt or ar, and his priests and historiographers did ot pray about them." Keen reported this to ing K'ang, who said, "Since neither Spirits nor en could resent his conduct, right was it he sould distinguish and aid five rulers, and make sem lords of covenants." The marquis said, Keu and K'wan said that I was able to serve se Spirits, and therefore they wished the priest nd historiographer to be executed; why have on repeated these words [in reference to their roposal]?" Gan-taze replied, "When a virtuons ruler is negligent of nothing at home or abroad, when neither high nor low have any cause for dissatisfaction, and none of his movements are opposed to what circumstances require, his priests and historiographers set forth the truth, and he has nothing to be ashanied of in his mind. Therefore the Spirits accept his offerings, and the State receives their blessing, in which the priests and historiographers share. The plenty and happiness [of the State] and the longevity [of the people] are caused by the truth of the ruler; the words [of the priests and historiographers] to the Spirits are leal and faithful accordingly. If they meet with a ruler abandoned to excesses, irregular and vicious at home and abroad, causing dissatisfaction and hatred to high and low, his movements and actions deflected from and opposed to the right. following his desires and satisfying his private aims, raising lofty towers and digging deep ponds, surrounding himself with the music of bells and with dancing girls, consuming the strength of the people, and violently taking from them their accumulations of wealth;—[if they meet with a ruler] who thus carries out his violation of the right, not caring for his posterity, oppressive and cruel, giving the reins to his lusts, wildly proceeding without rule or measure, without reflection or fear, giving no thought to the maledictions of the people, having no fear of the Spirits, and however the Spirits may be angry and the people may suffer, entertaining no thought of repentance:—the priests and historiographers, in setting forth the truth, must speak of his offences. If they cover his errors and speak of excellences, they are bearing false testimony; when they would advance or retire, they have nothing which they can rightly say, and so they may vainly seek to flatter. Therefore the Spirits will not accept the offerings, and the State is made to suffer misery, in which the priests and historiographers share, Short lives, premature deaths, bereavements and sicknesses, are caused by the oppression of the ruler; the words [of the priests and historiographers] are false, and an insult to the Spirits."

'The duke said, "Well then, what is to be Gan-taze replied, "[What is proposed] will be of no avail. The trees of the hills and forests are watched over [for your use] by the hang-luh; the reeds and flags of the marshes by the chow-këaou; the fire-wood of the meres by the yu-how; and the salt and cockles of the sea [-shore] by the k'e-wang. The people of the districts and borders are made to enter and share in the services of the capital. At the barrier-passes near the capital, oppressive duties are levied on the private [baggage of travellers]. The places of the great officers which should come to them by inheritance are forcibly chang-There are no regular rules ed for bribes. observed in issuing the common measures of Requisitions and exactions are government. made without measure. Your palaces and mansious are daily changed. You do not shun licentious pleasures. The favourite concubines in your harem send forth and carry things away from the markets; your favourite officers abroad issue false orders in the borders;—thus nourishing the gratification of what they selfishly desire. And if people do not satisfy them, they [make them criminals] in return. The people are pained and distressed; husbands and wives join in cursing [the government]. Blessings are of benefit, but curses are injurious. From Lëaousheh on the east, and from Koo-yëw on the west, the people are many. Although your prayers may be good, how can they prevail against the curses of millions? If your lordship wishes to execute the priest and the historiographer, cultivate your virtue, and then you may do it." The marquis was pleased, and made his officers institute a generous government, pull down the barrier-passes, take away prohibitions, make their exactions more light, and forgive debts.'

2d, relating to an incident in Ts'e:—'In the 12th month, the marquis of Ts'e was hunting in P'ei, and summoned the forester to him with a bow. The forester did not come forward, and the marquis caused him to be seized, when he explained his conduct, saying, "At the huntings of our former rulers, a flag was used to call a great officer, a bow to call an inferior one, and a fur cap to call a forester. Not seeing the fur cap, I did not dare to come forward." On this he was let go. Chung-ne said, "To keep the rule [of answering a ruler's summons] is not so good as to keep [the special rule for] one's office. Superior men will hold this man right."'

8d, still relating to the marquis of Ts'e and Gan-taze:—'When the marquis of Ts'e returned from his hunt, Gan-teze was with him in the tower of Ch'uen, and Taze-yu (Keu of Lëang-k'ëw of the 1st narrative) drove up to it at full speed. The marquis said, "It is only Keu who is in harmony with me!" Gan-tsze replied, "Keu is an assenter merely; how can he be considered in harmony with you?" "Are they different," asked the marquis,—"harmony and assent?" Gan-taze said, "They are different. Harmony may be illustrated by soup. You have the water and fire, vinegar, pickle, salt, and plums, with which to cook fish. It is made to boil by the firewood, and then the cook mixes the ingredients, harmoniously equalizing the several flavours, so as to supply whatever is deficient and carry off whatever is in excess. Then the master eats it, and his mind is made equable. So it is in the relations of ruler and minister. When there is in what the ruler approves of anything that is not proper, the minister calls attention to that impropriety, so as to make the approval entirely correct. When there is in what the ruler disapproves of anything that is proper. the minister brings forward that propriety, so as to remove occasion for the disapproval. In this way the government is made equal, with no infringement of what is right, and there is no quarrelling with it in the minds of the people. Hence it is said in the ode (She IV. iii. ode II.),

'There are also the well-tempered soups, Prepared beforehand, the ingredients rightly proportioned.

By these offerings we invite his presence without a word;

Nor is there now any contention in the service.'

As the ancient kings established the doctrine of the five flavours, so they made the harmony of the five notes, to make their minds equable and to perfect their government. There is an analogy between sounds and flavours. There are the breath, the two classes of dances, the three subjects, the materials from the four quarters, the five notes, the six pitch-pipes, the seven sounds, the eight winds, the nine songs;—

[by these nine things the materials for music] are completed. Then there are [the distinctions of] clear and thick, small and large, short and long, fast and slow, solemn and joyful, hard and soft, lingering and rapid, high and low, the commencement and close, the close and the diffuse, by which the parts are all blended together. The superior man listens to such music, that his mind may be composed. His mind is composed, and his virtues become harmonious. Hence it is said in the ode (She, I. xv. ode VII. 2),

'There is no flaw in his virtuous fame.'
Now it is not so with Keu. Whatever you say 'Yes' to, he also says 'Yes.' Whatever you say 'No' to, he also says 'No.' If you were to try to give water a flavour with water, who would care to partake of the result? If lutes were to be confined to one note, who would be able to listen to them? Such is the insufficiency of mere assent."

'They were drinking and joyous, when the marquis said, "If from ancient times till now there had been no death, how great would [men's] pleasure have been!" Gan-tsze replied, "If from ancient times till now there had been no death, how could your lordship have shared in the pleasure of the ancients? Anciently the Shwang-këw occupied this territory. To them succeeded [the House of] Ke-shih. Pih-ling of Fung followed; and then the House of P'oo-koo, after which came [your ancestor] T'ae-kung. If the ancients had not died, the happiness of the Shwang-këw is what you never could have desired.'

4th, the dying counsels of Tsze-ch'an:—'Tsze-ch'an was ill, and said to Tsze-t'ae-shuh, "When I die, the government is sure to come into your hands. It is only the [perfectly] virtuous, who can keep the people in submission by clemency. For the next class [of rulers] the best thing is severity. When fire is blazing, the people look to it with awe, and few of them die from it. Water again is weak, and the people despise and make sport with it, so that many die from it. It is difficult therefore to carry on a mild government."

'After being ill several months, he died, and Tae-shuh received the administration of the govt. He could not bear to use severity, and tried to be mild. The consequence was that there were many robbers in the State, who plundered people about the marsh of Hwan-foo. Tae-shuh repented of his course, saying, "If I had sooner followed the advice of Tsze-chan, things would not have come to this." He then raised his troops, and attacking the robbers of Hwan-foo, killed them all, on which robbers [generally] diminished and disappeared Chung-ne said, "Good! When govt is mild, the people despise it. When they despise it, severity must take its place. When govt is severe, the people are slaughtered. When this takes place, they must be dealt with mildly. Mildness serves to temper severity, and severity to regulate mildness;—it is in this way that the administration of government is brought to harmony. The ode says (III. ii. ode IX. l.):-

'The people indeed are heavily burdened:— But perhaps a little ease may be got for them. Deal kindly in this centre of the kingdom, And so give rest to the four quarters of it;'—

XXI. 1 In the [duke's] twenty-first year, in spring, in the king's third month, there was the burial of duke P'ing of Ts'ae.

2 In summer, the marquis of Tsin sent Sze Yang to Loo on a complimentary mission.

Hwa Hae, Hëang Ning, and Hwa Ting of Sung entered Nan-le [in the capital] of that State from Ch'in, and held it in revolt.

4 In autumn, in the seventh month, on Jin-woo, the first day of the moon, the sun was eclipsed.

5 In the eighth month, on Yih-hae, Shuh Cheh died.

6 In winter, Choo, marquis of Ts'ae, fled from that State to Ts'oo.

7 The duke was going to Tsin; but when he had got to the Ho, he returned.

The Chuen introduces here the following marrative:—'This spring, the king by Heaven's grace proposed to cast [the bell] Woo-yih (The name of the 11th of the musical pipes). The musician Chow-këw said, "The king is likely to die from disease of the heart! Music comes within the duties of the son of Heaven. The notes are the vehicle of music. The bell is the vessel that contains the notes. The son of Heaven examines the manners [of the people], to guide him in making his [instruments of] music. In his instruments he collects the notes, and by those notes the music goes forth. The smaller notes must not be too small, nor the greater too great. [This being the case], there ensues a harmony with things without, and admirable music is the result. Hence the harmonious sounds enter the ear, and descend into the heart. When repose is given to the heart, there is pleasure. If the notes be too small, the heart is not satisfied; if they be too large, it cannot bear them. It is consequently agitated, and the agitation produces disease. This bell will be too large, and the king's heart will not be able to endure it. Is it possible he can continue long?"'

K'ung Ying-tah traces the history of this bell to the commencement of the Suy dynasty, about the end of the 6th century, when it was destroyed.]

Par. 1. The Chuen says:—"At the burial of duke Ping, Choo, his heir son ( The must here be — How The proper place, and took a lower one (I. e., a place below an elder brother, the son of a concubine). Our great officer, who had gone to the burial, saw Chiaou-tsze on his return, and, being asked by him about the affairs of Tsiae, told him of this incident. Chiaou-tsze said, with a sigh, "Is Tsiae going to perish? If it do not perish, this ruler will not die in his State. The ode says (She, III. it, ode V. 4.):—

'Not idly occupying his office, The people will have rest in him.'

Since the marquis of Ts'ae, immediately on his accession, [thus] took a lower [place than was proper], so it will happen to his person."

Par. 2. The object of this mission, Too thinks, was to open communications between the new ruler of Tsin and the court of Loo. But it was now the 5th year of duke King of Tsin;—he had been remiss in his attentions to the faithful Loo. What is more remarkable,—this was the last mission of the kind sent to Loo by Tsin, which thereby acquiesced in its own decline. Nor does the text of the classic mention any ping or friendly mission of compliment from any other State to Loo, which had fallen much from the high position which it had once occupied in the kingdom.

The Chuen says:—'In summer, when Sze Yang of Tsin came on a complimentary mission, Shuh-sun was the principal minister of the State. Ke-sun wishing to bring on him the enmity of Tsin, made the officers pay to the envoy the same ceremonies which had been paid to Paou Kwoh of Ts'e when he came to return Pe (See the narrative appended to XIV. 1). Sze Yang was angry, and said, "The rank of Paou Kwoh was inferior to mine, and his State was smaller [than Tsin]; and to treat me with the same number of oxen which he received, is to lower my State. I will report the thing to my ruler." The people of Loo became afraid, and added four sets of animals, making [in all] eleven."

Par. 8. Kung-yang has 眸 for 叛. In 南里 we are to take 里 in the sense of 'neighbourhood,' according to the 1st meaning given to the character in the dictionary (里,居也,里者,止也,五十家共居止也). A certain neighbourhood inside the wall of the capital went by this name of Nan-le, or 'the south district.'

The Chuen says:—'Hwa Pe-suy (See on par. 4 of last year) had [3 sons], Ch'oo, To-lëaou, and Tang. Ch'oo was assistant-minister of War, and To-leaou was charioteer to the di cherishing a hostile feeling to Ch'oo, who slandered to the duke, saying, "Ch'oo will l the fugitives back (See the narrative referred He often speaks of it." The duke replied, " minister of War on my account has lost good son (Hwa Tang, one of the fugitive Death and exile are as determined. I t not cause him the loss of another son in same way." "If your Grace," said To-le "[thus] loves the minister of War, you better abandon the State. If death can avoided, no matter to what distance you f The duke became frightened, and made on his attendants call E-leaou, an attendant of minister of War, entertain him with spi and instruct him to inform the minister what was agitated]. The minister heard it a sigh, and said, "This must have been To-le I have a slanderous son, and have not been to put him to death. I myself also have [managed to] die [before this]. But since duke issues his commands, what can be do He then took counsel with the duke about d ing Ch'oo from the State, and proposed to t him to hunt at Mang-choo, and thence to him away. The duke entertained Ch'oo to dr and gave him large presents at the feast, n ing gifts also to his followers. [His father] minister did the same. Chang Kae was prised at it, and said, "There must be a re for this." He made Tsze-p'e (Hwa Ch question E-lëzou with his sword at his n and all the truth was thus disclosed to the Kae wanted to kill To-lëaou, but Tsze-p'e "The minister is old, and [the exile of] I was too great a trial to him. In the 5th month, on Ping-shin, Tax was going to see the minister and take leave, when he met To-lēaou driving t father to court. Chang Kae could not rest his anger, and along with Tsze-p'e, K'ëw and Ch'ing P'ëen, he killed To-lëaou. [At same time] they carried off the minister, the declared a revolt, and recalled the exiles. Jin-yin, the Hwas and Hëangs entered Yoh Ta-sin, Fung K'ëen, and Kang tried to withstand them at Hung. house of the Hwa family was near the Loo and they took possession therefore of the district (Nan-le, which was adjacent), and it in revolt. In the 6th month, on Kang-[the duke] repaired the old wall of the city the gate of Sang-lin, and appointed guard them.'

Par. 4. This eclipse took place in the fores of June 3d, B.C. 520. The Chuen says:—the occurrence of this eclipse the duke as Tsze Shin saying, "What is this for? We calamity does it indicate, or what blessin "At the solstices and equinoxes," was the re "an eclipse of the sun does not indicate calam. The sun and the moon, in their travelling, at the equinoxes, in the same path; and at solstices, they pass each other. On other mon an eclipse indicates calamity. The yang princ cannot overcome [the yin], and hence then always [disaster from] water."

Par. 5. Kung-yang has for the Signature of Shuh Kung, styled I chang ( He has not appeared onnexion with the business of the State, and his record of his death must have been made imply because of his relationship to the ducal House.

The Chuen says:—'At this time Shuh Cheh wept because of the eclipse of the sun. Ch'aoutez said, "Tsze-shuh will [soon] die. He weeps when there is no occasion for it." [Accordingly], in the 8th month, Shuh Cheh died.'

The Chuen resumes here the narrative of the troubles in Sung:—'In winter, in the 10th month, Hwa Tang came with an army of Woo, to relieve the Hwas. [About the same time], W∞ Che-ming of Ts [had arrived] to garrison [the capital of] Sung. Puh, the commandant of Ch'oo, said, "We find in the 'Art of War,' that, if beforehand with the enemy, we should make up our minds to attack them, and that, if behindhand with them, we should wait the decay [of their strength]. [Why should we not attack them now], while they are tired and have not yet got settled? If they enter [the city] and establish themselves, the Hwas will be very numerous, and our regrets will then be too late." His advice was followed; and on Ping-yin the armies of Ts'e and Sung defeated that of Woo at Hung-k'ow, capturing its two commanders, the Kung-tsze K'oo-k'an, and Yen-chow Yun. Hwa Tang led the remainder of the army, and with it defeated the army of Sung, on which the duke wanted to quit [the city and flee]. Pull of Ch'oo said to him, "A amail man like myself can take the opportunity to die [for you], but I cannot escort you in your flight. I beg your Grace to wait [the result of another battle]." He then sent round [the city] saying, "They who display a flag will be for the duke." The people all did so, and the duke, who saw them from the Yang gate, descended, and went round among them, saying, "If the State perish and your ruler die, it will be a disgrace to you, and not the fault of me alone." Woo Che-ming of Ts'e said, "It is better that we all be prepared to sacrifice our lives than that we [merely] use a small force. And that we be so prepared the best plan is to cast away our long weapons. The enemy have many such weapons, but let us all use swords." This was agreed to. and the Hwas were put to flight. They followed and engaged them again, when Puh of Ch'oo took his lower garment, wrapped up a head in it, with which he ran about, shouting, "I have got Hwa Tang." On this they defeated the Hvas at Sin-le.

'Teih Leu-sin dwelt in Sin-le, and after the fight he took off his armour before the duke, and returned to his allegiance. Hwa Tow, who lived in Kung-le, did the same.

'In the 11th month, on Kwei-we, the Kungtaze Shing (See on par. 4 of last year) arrived with a force from Tsin. Han Hoo of Ts'aou effected a junction with Seun Woo of Tsin; and along with Yuen Ho-ke of Ts'e, and the Kung-tsze Chaou of Wei, they came to the relief of Sung. On Ping-seuh they fought with the Hwas at Chay-k'ëw. Ching P'een wished to draw the troops up in the crane fashion, Thile his charioteer preferred that of the goose. Tsze-luh (Hëang E) drove the Kung-tsze Slung, and Chwang Kin was spearman on the right. Kan Chow drove Hwa P'aou warden of Leu, with Chang Kae as spearman. These two chariots met, and Shing was withdrawing, when Hwa P'aou called out, "Shing!" on which he was angry and returned [to the fight]. As he was adjusting his arrow to the string, Paou had already bent his bow. [Shing] said, "May the powerful influence of duke Ping [now] assist me!" On this the arrow of P'aou went past between him [and Tsze-luh]. [Again] he was adjusting his arrow, when [P'aou] had again bent his bow. "If you don't let me return your shot," said [Shing], "it will be mean." [P'aou on this] took away his arrow, and Shing shot him dead. Chang Kae took his spear, and descended from the chariot. An arrow [from Shing] broke his thigh, but he supported himself on the ground, and struck at Shing, breaking the cross-board of his chariot. Another arrow killed him; and then Kan Ch'ow begged for his death from an arrow. "I will report you to our ruler," said Shing; but he replied, "He who does not die, being in the same file or the same chariot, is doomed to the greatest punishment in the army. If I expose myself to this doom and follow you, how should the ruler use me? Be quick." On this [Shing] shot him dead. A great defeat was inflicted on the Hwas, and they were besieged in Nan-le.

'Hwa Hae beat his breast and cried out. Seeing Hwa Ch'oo, he said, "I am [another] Lwan (See the rebellion and fate of Lwan Ying of Tsin in Sëang's 28d year)." "Do not frighten me," said Ch'oo. "It will be my misfortune if I die after you." They then sent Hwa Tang to Ts'oo, to ask assistance. Hwa Ch'oo, with 15 chariots and 70 footmen, broke through the duke's army, ate with Tang near the Suy, wept and escorted him on his route, and then returned and re-entered [Nan-le]. Wei Yueli of Ts'00 led a force to [rescue and] meet the Hwas. Fan, the grand-administrator, remonstrated, saying, "Of all the States it is only in Sung that they have served their ruler, but there also they are now contending for the capital. Is it not improper to pass over the ruler, and assist his subjects?" The king said, "You mention this too late. I have promised them my assistance]".']

The Chuen says:—'Fei Woo-keih Par. 5. of Ts'00 took bribes from Tung-kwoh (An uncle of Choo), and said to the people of Ts'ae, "Choo is not observant of the orders of Ts'oo; our ruler and king intends to set up Tung-kwoh in his room. If you do not anticipate the king's wishes, he will lay siege to Ts'ne." The people of Ts'se were afraid, expelled Choo, and made Tung-kwoh marquis. Choo complained to Ts'oo, and the viscount was about to punish Ts'ae, when Fei Woo-keih said to him, "The marquis P'ing had a covenant with Ts'oo, and therefore he was raised to the State. His son was disaffected, and therefore we [now] displace him. King Ling put to death Yin, heir-son [of Ts'ae]. His son (Tung-kwoh) and you had the same object of hatred, and his gratitude to you must be extreme. Is it not proper further to make him the marquis of Ts'ae? Moreover to make and unmake rests with you. Ts'ae has no other [to look to]."'

Par. 6. "The Chuen says, "The duke was going to Tsin; but when he arrived at the Ho, Koo (See on XV. 5) had revolted from Tsin, which was going to attack Seen-yu. In consequence of this the duke's visit was declined."

XXII. 1 In the [duke's] twenty-second year, in spring, the marquis of Ts'e invaded Keu.

2 Hwa Hae, Hëang Ning, and Hwa Ting of Sung, fled from Nan-le of that State to Ts'oo.

3 We had a grand review in Ch'ang-këen.

4 In summer, in the fourth month, on Yih-ch'ow, the king [by] Heaven's [grace] died.

5 In the sixth month, Shuh Yang went to the capital to the burial of king King.

6 The royal House was in confusion.

7 The viscounts of Lëw and Shen, having with them the king Măng, took up their residence in Hwang.

8 In autumn, the viscounts of Lew and Shen entered the royal city with the king Mang.

9 In winter, in the tenth month, the king's son Mang died.

10 In the twelfth month, on Kwei-yëw, the first day of the moon, the sun was eclipsed.

Par. 1. The Chuen says:—'This spring, in the 2d month, on Këah-tsze, Pih-kwoh K'e of Ts'e led a force and invaded Keu. The viscount of Keu was going to fight, when Yuen-yang Muh-che remonstrated with him, saying, "The force of Ts'e is a poor one, and its demands are not great. Our best plan is to yield to it; a great State should not be angered." The viscount would not listen to this counsel, and defeated the troops of Ts'e at Show-yu. [On this], the marquis of Ts'e [himself] invaded Keu, when the viscount made his submission. The marshal Tsaou went to Keu to superintend a covenant, and the viscount went to Ts'e for the same purpose. The covenant was made outside the Tseih gate. In consequence of all this Keu conceived a great hatred of its ruler.'

Par. 2. Read the narrative after par. 5 of last year. The Chuen here says:—'Wei Yueh of Ts'oo sent a message to [the duke of] Sung, saying, "My ruler has heard that you have some bad officers, who are occasioning you sorrow. Had you not better [send them away], to the disgrace of their ancestral temples? My ruler begs to receive them, and execute them." [The duke] replied, "From my want of ability I was not able to love my uncles and elder brothers, thereby occasioning sorrow to your ruler. I thank you for the condescension of your message. Ruler and subjects, we are here fighting daily, and your ruler says, 'I must assist the subjects.' Still I accept his commands. But people have a saying, that one should not pass by the door of a house in confusion. If your ruler vouchsafe his kind protection to my poor State, it is my hope that he will not give honour to the worthless, thereby encouraging men to create disorder. Let your ruler think of the case."

of the case." 'The people of Ts'oo were troubled by this reply; but [the officers in charge of ] the auxiliaries from different States took counsel together, saying, "If the Hwa, knowing to what straits they are reduced, should sell their lives dearly, and if Ts'oo, ashamed of not accomplishing its object, should fight with spirit, this will not be to our advantage. The better plan is to send [the rebels] away, as if it were brought about by Ts'oo; nor can they do anything after this. We came to succour Sung, and we shall remove the authors of its injury;—what more should we seek for?" They therefore begged earnestly that [the rebels] might be allowed to go away, and the people of Sung agreed. On Ke-sze, Hwa Hae, Hëang Ning, Hwa Ting, Hwa Ch'oo, Hwa Tăng, Hwang Yen-shang, Sing Tsang, and Sze Ping, went forth and fled to Ts'oo. The duke make Kung-sun Ke grandminister of War, Pëen Yang grand-minister of Instruction, Yoh K'e minister of Works, Chung Ke master of the Left, Yoh Ta-sin master of the Right, and Yoh Wan grand minister of Crime, in order to quiet the minds of the people.

Most of ics think that the duke himself took no any of these reviews.

disguised as buyers of rice, carry their armour on their backs [in bags], and rest outside the gate of Seih-yang. He then surprised Koo, and extinguished [its sacrifices], took the viscount Yuen-te, back with him, and appointed Sheh To to guard the city.'

Par. 6. The Chuen says:—'On Ting-sze, king King was buried. His son Chaou, by means of the many old officers who had lost their offices and emoluments, and of the families sprung from [the kings] Ling and King, proceeded to raise an insurrection, and led the men-atarms of Këaou, Yaou, and Tsëen, to drive out the viscount of Lew, who on Jin-seuh fled to Yang. The viscount of Shen then took king Taou (king King's son Mang of par. 9), and carried him back from the Chwang palace [to his own house]; but in the night Hwan, [another] son of king [King], took him again and went to the palace; and [next day], on Kwei-hae, the viscount left [the capital]. Hwan took counsel with duke Chwang of Shaou, saying, "If we do not kill Shen K'e (The viscount), we shall not succeed. If we [propose to] make a second covenant with him, he is sure to come. There are many who have conquered by violating their covenants." His proposal was agreed to, but Fan K'ing-taze said, "Such language is wrong. The thing is sure not to succeed." They then carried the king with them, and pursued the viscount of Shen. At Ling they made a great covenant, and [all] returned, [after which] they put to death Chih Hwang, by way of apology for themselves. The viscount of Lew went to Lew, and the viscount of Shen absconded, fleeing, on Yill-ch'ow, to P'ing-che. body of the king's sons pursued him, when he killed Hwan, Koo, Fall, Joh, Taung, Yen, Ting, and Chow. The king's son Chaou [on this] fled to King, which was attacked on Ping-yin, when the inhalitants fled to the hills. The viscount of Lew entered the royal city. On Sin-we, duke Këen of Kung was shamefully defeated at King. On Yih-hae, duke P'ing of Kan was also defeated.

'When Shuh Yang arrived from the capital, he spoke of the confusion of the royal House. Min Ma-foo said, "The king's son Chaou is sure not to succeed. Those with whom he is associated are those whom Heaven has disowned."

This is the third time in the period of the Ch'un Ts'ëw that the House of Chow was nearly ruined by dissensions in itself, but the classic takes no notice of the two former occasions, Its silence is difficult to account for, and the same course would probably have been pursued here but for the visit of Shuh-yang to the capital when the troubles were going on. Tae K'e (戴溪; Sung dyn.) says, 'From the beginning of the Ch'un Ts'ëw till now, the royal House had thrice been in confusion, the calamity always arising from relations in it between father and sons, elder and younger brothers, through which the distinction between sons of the queen proper and of other ladies of the harem was not kept clear. King Hwuy, by his favouritism of his son Tae, had nearly endangered the position of his eldest son, when duke Hwan made the covenant in the prince's behalf at Show-che (See V. v. 4, 5), and his place was established. Then king Seang, through again favouring Tae, was obliged to leave the capital and reside in Ch'ing (See V. xxiv. 4), till duke Wan of Tain restored him, and established the royal House. But for those two leaders, the confusion of the House of Chow would not have been postponed till this time. The Ch'un Ts'ëw makes record of it now, through pity for the feeble condition to which the House was reduced, and regret that such leaders as Hwan and Wan were no more to be found. Alas!

Par. 7. The Chuen says:—'The viscount of Shen wished to send notice of [the king's] distress to Tsin. In autumn, in the 7th month, on Mow-yin, he carried the king with him to Ping-che; thence they went to Poo-keu, and halted in Hwang.'

Hwang was a city of Chow, in the north-west of the pres. dis. of Kung ( ), dep. Ho-nan. The Mang was a son of king King, probably by his proper queen. The death of the king's eldest son Show is mentioned in the Chuen after par. 4 of the 15th year. We may suppose that Mang was a younger brother of Show, on whom the succession to the throne now naturally devolved, and that he had been so designated. We have seen, however, that the king had wished, before his death, to divert the succession to Chaou, older in years, but the son of a concubine. Hence arose the two parties, whose struggles produced so much confusion. Lew Ch'ang, Hoo Gan-kwoh, and others, take the in the text, as condemnatory of the viscounts, but the K'ang-he editors remark correctly that itself expresses neither praise nor blame, and that the supporters of Mang were in the right. Mang died before the end of the year, and therefore does not enter into the chronological line of kings, though he received the posthumous epithet of king Taou (恒王). Altogether his position was anomalous, and hence the style of the text, where he is not called __ simply, nor 天 干, but 王 with his name attached (王猛).

Par. 8. The Chuen says:—'The viscount of Lew went to Lew, and the viscount of Shen made king [King's] son Ch'oo keep guard in the royal city, having bound by a covenant in the temple of [king] Ping all the officers. On Sin-maou, Sin Heih attacked Hwang, but he suffered a great defeat; and, being taken, he was burned on Jin-shin in the market-place of the royal city. In the 8th month, on Sin-yew, the minister of Instruction, Ch'ow, with the royal arnıy, was shamefully defeated at Ts'ëen-shing, after which all the officers revolted. On Ke-sze, they attacked the palace of the viscount of Shen, and were defeated. On Kang-woo he returned their attack. On Sin-we he attacked Tung-yu.

'In winter, in the 10th month, on Ting-sze, Tseih T'an and Seun Leih, led the Jung of Këw-chow, with the troops of Tsëaou, Hëa, Wän, and Yuen, to replace the king in the royal city. On Käng-shin, the viscount of Shen and Fun of Lëw, with the king's army, were shamefully defeated at Këaou, and the men of Ts'ëen-shing defeated the [Jung] of Luh-hwän at Shay.'

The 'royal city' is correctly said by Too to have been Këah-juh (如深). Maou observes that to this city king Woo removed the 9 tripods, and that it is to be distinguished from Chingchow (成局) or the 'lower capital (下都)' which was built by the duke of Chow to receive the refractory people of Yin. From the time of king Ping's removal of the seat of govt. essiwards, down to king King, all the kings of Chow had dwelt in Këah-juh. It was not till 4 years after this, that King's successor, of whom we must also speak in English as king King (被王), occupied Ching-chow, in consequence of the present disturbances still continuing. Kung-yang says that the 'royal city' of the text is the western Chow, or western capital of Chow (西島), but it was not till after the period of the Ch'un Ts'ëw that Këah-juh came to be thus denominated.

Par. 9. The Chuen continues:—'In the lith month (The text says the 10th), on Yih-yev, the king's son Mang died, and the proper mourning and funeral rites could not be performed for him. On Ke-ch'ow, king King (**) 王, an own brother of Mang;—his name was Kae, 仁) succeeded to the throne, and lodged in the house of Tsze-leu.

'In the 12th month, on Käng-seuh, Theih T'an, Seun Leih, Kea Sin, and the marshal Tuh, of Tsin, led their forces, and encamped at Yin, at How-she, at K'e-ts'euen, halting at Shay; while the king's army encamped at Fan, and at Heae, halting at Jin-jin. In the intercalary month, K'e E, Yoh Ching, and Kwei of the right column, of Tsin, crossed [the E and Loh] with their forces, and took Ts'een-shing. The king's army encamped at King-ts'oo; and on Sin-ch'ow it attacked King-ts'oo, and threw down the [wall on the] west and south.'

in the Chuen, gives the reason why 王廷 of parr. 8, 9 is here replaced by 王子廷; but this is not necessary. Had Mang lived, his reign would have dated only from the next year. Of the sons of the dukes of Loo, who came to an untimely end before the expiry of the year in which their fathers died, the text simply says, 'Son So-and-so-died (See VI. xviii. 6: IX. xxxi. 8).' Here in writing of the royal House, it was necessary to prefix the 王.

Par. 10. This eclipse took place in the afternoon, on the 18th November, B.C. 519. Too would change the Kwei-yëw into Kwei-maou (ﷺ); but calculation shows the day to be correct. He was led to the conclusion that there was no Kwei-yëw day in this 12th month, by accepting the statement in the preceding Chuen about the intercalary month which is incorrect. The intercalary month this year must have been a double 4th.

Twenty-third year.

II. 1 In the [duke's] twenty-third year, in spring, in the king's first month, Shuh-sun Shay went to Tsin.

2 On Kwei-ch'ow, Shuh Yang died.

3 The people of Tsin seized our internuncius, Shuh-sun

4 The troops of Tsin laid siege to Këaou.

5 In summer, in the sixth month, Tung-kwoh, marquis of Ts'ac, died in Ts'oo.

In autumn, in the seventh month, Kang-yu, viscount of Keu, came a fugitive to Loo.

7 On Mow-shin, Woo defeated the armies of Tun, Hoo, Shin, Ts'ae, Ch'in, and Heu at Ke-foo, when K'wan, viscount of Hoo, and Ch'ing, viscount of Shin, were killed, and Hëa Nëeh of Ch'in was taken.

8 The king [by] Heaven's [grace] resided at Teih-ts'euen, and the chief of the House of Yin raised king [King's] son Chaou to the throne.

In the eighth month, on Yih-we, there was an earthquake.

10 In winter, the duke was going to Tsin; but when he arrived at the Ho, he fell ill and returned.

Part. 1, 3. Here, as elsewhere, Tso-she has The Chuen says:—'A body of men from [the capital of] Choo had been walling Yih, and on their return were to go by way of Le-koo. Kung-sun Ts'oo said, "Loo will withstand us. If we want to return by Wooshing, let us keep along the hills to the south." Seu Ts'oo, K'ëw Joh, and Maou Te said, "The way [there] lies low; if we meet with rain, it will be impassable, and we shall not [be able to] return." Accordingly they determined to go by Le-koo, [first passing Woo-shing]. The men of Woo-shing had blocked up the way in front [of a pass], and cut the trees in the rear, only not quite through; but when the troops of Choo had entered, they pushed the trees down, and took the whole of them, killing Ts'00, Joh, and Te. The people of Choo complained of this to Tsin, which sent an officer to Loo to inquire into the matter. On this Shuh-sun Shay went to Tain where they seized and held him. The words of the text are, "The people of Tsin seized our internuncius Shuh-sun Shay," because he was a commissioner [from the State].

'The people of Tsin required him to argue the matter on trial along with a great officer of Choo; but Shuh-sun said, "It is the old rule of Chow, that the minister of one of the regular States should rank with the ruler of a small State. Choo, moreover, is one of the E. Tsze-fuh Hwuy is here, commissioned by my ruler as my assistant. I beg that you will let him be confronted with [the officer of Choo], for I do not dare to disallow the rule of Chow." Accordingly, he would not be put upon his trial.

'Han Sëuen-taze made the men of Choo collect all their people, intending to deliver Shuh-sun to them. When that minister heard of it, he dispensed with the attendance of his people and his weapons, and went to court. Sze Me-mow said to Han Seuen-tsze, "Your measures are not good. If you deliver Shuh-sun to his enemies, he will die [first]. If Loo lose Shuh-sun, it is sure to destroy Choo, and where will the ruler of Choo turn to when he has lost his State? You may then repent of it, but of what use will that be? What is called the lordship of covenants implies the punishment of the disobedient. If [the princes of the States] are all to seize one another, of what use is a lordship of covenants?" After this [Shuhsun] was not delivered [to Choo], but [he and Tsze-fuli Hwuy] were assigned, each of them, a separate lodging. Sze Pih received their statements, and accused them to Seuen-tsze, when they were both seized; and Sze Pih drove Shuhsun, with four of his followers, past the lodging of the Choo-ites, on the way to the officer [who should take charge of him]. The viscount of Choo was then sent home first, and Sze Pih said [to Shuh-sun], "In consequence of the difficulty of getting forage, and the sickness of your followers, we will assign you a lodging in [another of our] great cities." Shuh-sun stood from one morning [till next], waiting for his orders; and then a lodging was assigned to him in Ke, and Taze-fuh Chraou-pih was placed in another city.

'Fan Heen-tsze sought bribes from Shuh-sun, and sent to ask him for some caps. He got the fashion of the [other's] cap, and sent two caps to him saying, "These are all." Shin Fung, on account of Shuh-sun, went with bribes to Tsin; but Shuh-sun sent word to him to come and see him, and he would tell him how to distribute the bribes. When Fung came to see him, he did not let him go forth. The officers in charge who lived with him at Ke begged from him his watch-dog. He refused it; but when he was about to return to Loo, he killed it, and gave it to them to eat. Wherever Shuhsun was lodged, though it might be only for one day, he would have the walls and roof put in repair. When he left the house, it was [always] as when he first came to it."

Par. 2. See on par. 5 of last year. Shuh Yang was succeeded, as a great officer of Loo, by his son Shuh E (权 詣).

Par. 4. The Chuen continues here the namtive of the troubles in Chow, and should be read in connection with that on par. 9 of last year:—'This spring, in the king's 1st month, on Jin-yin, the 1st day of the moon, the two armies (I. a., of the king and of Tain) laid siege to Këaou. On Kwei-maou. the people of Këaou and Sin dispersed. On Ting-we, the army of Tsin was at P'ing-yin, and the king's at Tsih-yih. The king sent word that he was more at ease; and on Käng-seuh [the army of Tsin returned]."

Këaou was a city of Chow, but its particular locality has not been ascertained. I translate the troops of Tsin.' Woo Gan-kwoh had been only an inferior officer; and as we know that he was not such, he adds that he is represented so, to express the sage's disapproval of all Tsin's proceedings in succouring so feebly the king in his distress! According to the Chuen, the siege of Këaou began on Jin-yin, 12 days before Kwei-ch'ow, on which Shuh-yang died. This 4th par., therefore, should precede the 2d; but we may suppose that as the official notice from Tsin to Loo of the siege could not arrive till after that officer's death, and was given as in the text without the specification of the day, the historiographers entered the event according to the time of its communication.

Par. 5. Tung-kwoh owed his elevation to the marquisate of Tarae to Taroo (See on XX. i. 6); and he was probably on a visit to the court of that State when he died.

Par. 6. About Kang-yu and duke Koou, mentioned in the end of the Chuen here, see the narrative on XIV. 5. The Chuen says:- 'King yu, viscount of Keu, was oppressive and food of swords. Whenever he had a sword cast, he would try it on people. The people felt sore under him, and he was also intending to revolt from Ts'e, when Woo Ts'un led the people on to expel him. As he was about to leave the city, he heard that Woo Ts'un was standing with a spear on the left of the road; and, being atraid, he proposed to stop, and die [where he was]. Yuen-yang Muli-che, however, said to him, "Let your lordship pass by him. It will be sufficient for Woo Ts'un to be spoken of for his strength. Why should be seek to make himself famous of murdering you? On this, he came a fugitive to Loo, and the people of Tre restored duke Keson.

Pur. 7. Kuh-lëang has here for X, and 盈for 逞. Kung-yang has 楹 for 逞. Kefoo was in the pres. Show Chow ( ), dep. Fung-yang, Gan-hwuy. The Chuen says:—'A budy of men from Woo invaded Chow-lae, to the rescue of which hurried Wei Yueh with the army of Ts'oo and the forces of [several of ] the States. The men of Woo withstood him at Chung-le, when [just at that time] Tsze-hëa (The chief minister of Ts'00, unable to command in this expedition) died, and the courage of the army of Ts'oo died away. The Kung-taze Awang of Woo said, "The States that follow with Ts'00 are numerous, but they are small. They have come through fear of Ts'oo, and because they could not help it. I have heard that, in the conduct of affairs, the party whose energy is superior to its hesitancy, though it may be the smaller, is sure to be successful (See the Shoo, III. iv. 7; but the application is very forced). The rulers of Hoo and Shin are young and reckless. Neeh, the great officer of Chin, is stout, but stupid. Tun, Heu, and Ts'ae hate the govt. of Ts'oo. Its chief minister is [just] dead, and the courage of its army has become chilled. The commander is of low rank, and has many favourites; no unity marks his procodures and orders. The seven States are engaged in the same service, but they have not the mme heart. With this commander of low rank and incompetent, his commands cannot inspire any great awe;—Ts'oo can be defeated. If we divide our forces, and first fall on Hoo, Shin, and Chiu, they are sure to flee. When those three States are defeated, the forces of the others will be shaken in mind. They will all get into confusion, and Ts'oo will be put to a great rout. Let our men in front put away their preparations and assume but small appearance of martial energy, while those that follow afterwards go in strong array, with ranks well Ordered."

'The viscount of Woo followed this counsel, and on Mow-shin, the last day of the moon, a battle was fought at Ke-foo. He sent 800 criminals in front to attack the troops of Hoo, Shin, and Ch'in, which maintained a struggle with them; but behind these criminals the army of Woo was drawn out in three divisions, that in the centre following the king, the right commanded by Kwang, and the left by Yen-yu. Some of the criminals fled, and some held their ground; but the troops of the three States were thrown into confusion by them, and being then attacked by the army of Woo, they were defeated. The rulers of Hoo and Shin were taken, and the great officer of Ch'in. The Woo-ites set free their other prisoners, and made them flee to [the men of ] Heu, Ts'ae, and Tun, saying, "Our rulers are fead." They themselves followed them with shouts, and the troops of those three States took to flight. The army [also of Ts'00] was greatly routed. The phraseology of the text, that "The two viscounts were extinguished, and Hëa Nëeh of Ch'in taken," is varied, from its application to rulers and an officer. (This seems to mean that the capture or the death of a ruler was spoken of as his "extinction," while the capture of an officer might be spoken even of his "death"). The text does not say that "a battle was fought,"—because [the army of ] Ts'oo had not formed in order of battle.'

These two canons, the one on the use of the terms and and, and the other on the silence of the text about Ts'oo, have given rise to a great deal of speculation. I should judge myself, that a must imply the death of the party to whom it is applied, but then should indicate capture, and capture only.

I have translated ## K by 'the chief of the House of Yin (See VIII. xvi. 10),' which must be the meaning of the terms. The viscount of Yin took the lead in supporting Chaou, whose elevation to the throne is therefore ascribed to him;—we need not seek any other recondite meaning in the use of K. There were now two kings. The text decides in favour of king King by the name of A applied to him.

The Chuen says:—'In summer, in the 4th month, on Yih-yew, the viscount of Shen took Tsze, and the viscount of Lew took Ts'eang-jin and Chih-jin. In the 6th month, on Jin-woo, king King's (景土) son Chaou entered Yin. On Kwei-yew, Yu, [viscount] of Yin, inveigled and killed Lew To. On Ping-seuh, the viscount of Shen came by way of Fan, and the viscount of Lew by way of Yin to attack Yin. The former arrived first and was defeated, when the other returned. On Ke-ch'ow, Hwan earl of Shaou, and Nan-kung Keili led a body of nien from Ching-chiow to garrison Yin. On Kangyin, the viscounts of Shen and Lew, and Fan Ts'e, conducted the king to Lew. On Kenhwoo, the [late] king's son, Chaou, entered the royal city, and halted in Tso-heang. In autumn, in the 7th month, on Mow-shin, Sin Lo placed him in the palace of Chwang. Sin of Yin defeated the army of Lew in Tang, and on Ping-shen it was defeated again at Sin. On Këah-tsze, Sin of Yin took Se-wei. On Pingyin, he attacked K'wae, the people of which dispersed.'

Par. 9. The Chuen says:—'In the 8th month, on Ting-yew, Nan-kung Keih was killed by an earthquake. Chang Hwang said to duke Wan of Lew, "Let your lordship exert yourself. By the strength of your father your enterprize will be successful. When [the kings of] Chow [formerly] perished, there were earthquakes along the three rivers (The King, Wei, and Loh; Wei, and Loh; Now a great officer of the western king has perished in this earthquake; —Heaven is casting him off. The eastern king will have a great triumph.'

to affairs in Ts'00:—

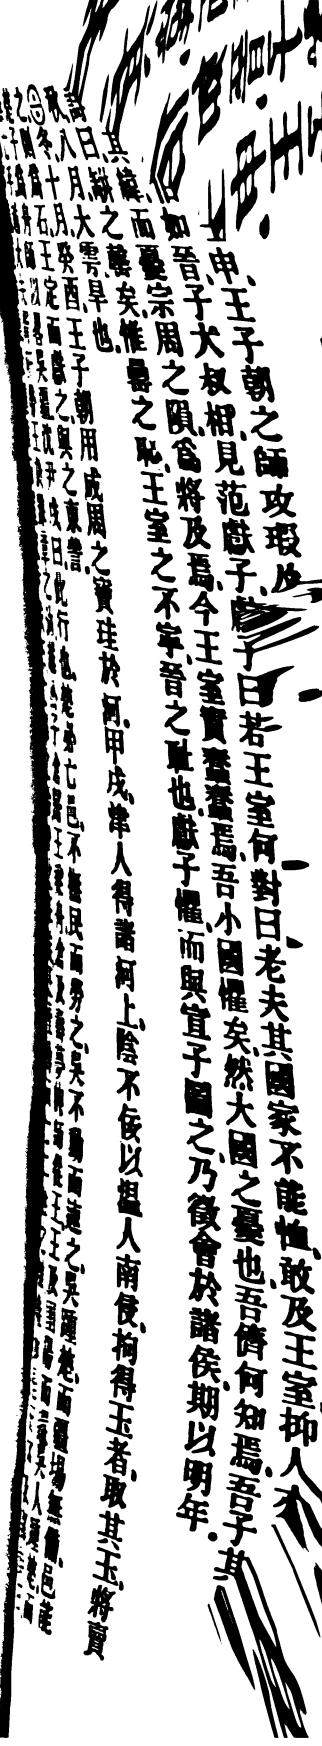

a became chief minister or Tsze-hea;—see on par. rtify Ying. Seuh, director ang (Nang Wa) is sure re not able to defend it, Anciently, the defences of the sons of Heaven were the rude triba of every side of the kingdom; and when their authority became low, their defences were the various States. The defences of those States were their neighbours, all round them; and when their power became low, their defences were their four borders. They attended carefully to them, and formed alliances with their neighbours as helpers. Then the people quietly cultivated the country, and the important labours of the three [seasons] were successfully accompliahed. The people had no cause for anxiety in the State, and there were no apprehensions from abroad; it was not thought necessary to fortify the cities. But now we are afraid of Woo, and are fortifying Ying. Small is the defence. Even that proper to a State, when its power is low, is beyond us;—how can we escape the loss [of Ying]? Formerly, the earl of Leang dug a moat about his palace, and the people dispersed (See on V. xix. 8). When the people abandon their superiors, nothing but ruin can come. If we adjusted correctly our borders, kept our lands and fields well regulated, made our stations of refuge and assembly where they were most difficult of access, cultivated the affection of the people, arranging them clearly in companies of five, so as to be on the look out [against danger], maintained good faith with the neighbouring States, looked well after the discharge of their duties by our officers, maintained all the ceremonies of intercourse, were neither assuming nor covetous, neither weak nor violent, thus completing our defences and preparations, and awaiting whatever might occur, what should we have to fear? The ode (III. i. ode L. 6) says.

> 'Ever think of your ancestor, Cultivating his virtue.'

Have we not examples in Joh-gaou, and Funmaou, down to Woo and Wan? Their territory did not exced 100 le square. But they carefully attended to their borders, and did not fortify Ying? Now our territory is several 1000 le square, and we must fortify Ying! Is not our case a hard one?"']

XXIV. In the [duke's] twenty-fourth year, in spring, in the king's second month, on Ping-seuh, Chung-sun Këoh died.

Shuh-sun Shay arrived from Tsin.

In summer, in the fifth month, on Yih-we, the first day of the moon, the sun was eclipsed.

In autumn, in the eighth month, there was a great 4 sacrifice for rain.

On Ting-yëw, Yuh-le, earl of K'e, died.

In winter, Woo extinguished Ch'aou.

There was the burial of duke P'ing of K'e.

The Chuen continues here its narrative of the troubles in Chow:—'This spring, in the king's first month, on Sin-ch'ow, duke Keen of Shaou and Nan-kung Yin introduced duke Hwan of Kan to the [late] king's son Chaou. The viscount of Lew said to Chang Hwang, "The Kan is also gone to him." "What harm will that do?" was the reply. "It is only those who have virtue in common that can concert righteous measures (See the Shoo, V. i. Pt. i. 8, where the characters, however, have a difft. meaning). The Great Declaration says (Shoo, V. i. Pt. ii. 6), Chow has hundreds of thousands and millions of ordinary men, but they are all divided in their ways. I have of ministers, capable of government, ten men, one in heart, and one in practice." It was through this that Chow arose. Let your lordship's care be about virtue, and do not be concerned about the want of men." On Mowwoo, the king's son Chaou entered Woo.]

See ix. 4; et al. This was Mang He-tsze. He was succeeded by his son Ho-ke (何点), who is numbered among the disciples of Confucius.

Comp. XIV. 1, where the return of Par. 2. Ke-sun E-joo from his detention in Tsin is recorded, as that of Shuh-sun Shay is recorded here. There, however, only the name E-joo, appears in the text, without the surname, and here both Tso-she and Kuh-leang omit the surname, having also 姑 instead of 含. The critics have much to say on these points, with which we need not trouble ourselves. See the K'ang-he editors in loc.

The Chuen says:—'Sze Me-mow of Tsin went to meet Shuh-sun in Ke (See on parr. 1, 3 of last year), [and bring him away]. Shuhsun made Leang K'e-hing wait inside the door, having said to him, "If I look to the left and cough, kill him; but if I look to the right and laugh, hold your hand." When Shuh-sun saw Sze Pih, the latter said, "My ruler, thinking his duty as lord of covenants required him to do so, has detained you long. There are some small gifts of our poor State, which he now presents to your followers, and he has sent me to meet you, Sir." Shuh-sun received the offerings, and returned [to Loo]. The words of the text, "In the second month, Ch'oh ( ; without the clau-name) arrived from Tsin," are intended to honour Tain (?).

[There is appended here a short note about | the affairs in Chow:—'In the 3d month, on Kang-seuh, the marquis of Tsin sent Sze Kingpih to go and ask about affairs in Chow. He took his position by the Kan-chae [gate], and questioned great multitudes. In consequence, the people of Tsin repulsed the [late] king's son Chaou, and would not receive his messengers.

This eclipse took place at sunrise, on the 1st April, B.c. 517. The Chuen says:-'On the occurrence of this eclipse, Taxe Shia said, "There will be floods." But Ch'aou-ts: said, "There will be drought. The sun but passed the equinox, and the yang influence has not yet predominated. When it does do so, it will be in a very great degree, and we must have drought. The yang influence, not getting vent

The affairs of Chow are here resumed:— 1st. 'In the 6th month, on Jin-shin, the army of the [late] king's son Chaou attacked He and Hang, the people of both of which dispersed

2d. The earl of Ching went to Tain, with Tsze-t'ae-shuh in attendance on him. At an interview with Fan Hëen-tsze, the latter asked Tsze-t'ae-shuh what he thought about the state of the royal House. "I am an old man," was the reply, "who cannot do as he ought for his own State; how dare I think about the royal House? But people have a saying that the widow does not regard her woof, but is anxious about the fall of the honoured [House of ] Chow, meaning that [she is afraid of ] what will happen to herself. The royal House is now indeed shaking, and our small State is full of apprehension. But it should be matter of anxiety to your great State; what knowledge can we take of it? You Sir, should take speedy measures in reference to it. The ode (II. v. ode VIII. 3) says:—

> 'When the pitcher is exhausted, It is to the shame of the jar.'

The disquietude of the royal House is to the shame of Tsin." Hëen-taze became frightened, and consulted with Seuen-tsze, upon which they summoned a meeting of the States for the peri-year.'] Par. 4. This sacrifice was offered, says 180, because of drought; and thus Shuh-sun's anticpation, mentioned under par. 3, was verified. Wark Taou observes here, 'The vaticination of Pe Tsaou was not equal to that of Tsze-chan, and the vaticination of Taze Shin was not equal 10 that of Ch'aou-tsze. This may show that the gers could not calculate so well by their he officers could on grounds of reason.'

He wished [afterwards] to sell it, but changed into a stone. When the king ttled [on the throne], Puh-ning presented im, and received the city of East Tsze.']

6. Ch'aou,—see VI. xii. 4. It now beto Ts'oo. The Chuen says:—'The visof Ts'oo fitted out a naval expedition to ch the borders of Woo. Seuh, commandShin, said, "In this expedition Ts'oo is we are toiling them. While Woo is g quiet, we are stimulating it to move.

) follow in our footsteps, as preparations have not been made on our borders, is it possible we should not lose [one or more] cities?"

'Seu Gan, a great officer of Yueh, met the king with complimentary offerings at the bend of Yu-chang, and the Kung-tsze Ts'ang of that State sent him a ship, following him also with a force, along with Show-mung. When he had got to Yu-yang, the king returned.

'The men of Woo then followed; and as the people on the borders were not prepared for them, they extinguished Ch'aou and Chungle, and returned. The commandant of Shin said, "Here is the commencement of the loss of Ying. By this one movement of the king, we have lost two commanders. How often can this be repeated without the consequences reaching Ying? Might not the words of the ode (III. iii. ode III. 8),

'Who laid the steps of the evil, Which has reached the present distress?'

be spoken of the king?"'

Too says here that Ch'aou was a city of Ts'oo to which Lew Ch'ang objects that in that case the term 'extinguished' () could not be applied to it. The truth, no doubt, is that Ch'aou had once been independent, but had been reduced by Ts'oo to the State of a foo-yung, or attached territory.

XV. 1 In the [duke's] twenty-fifth year, in spring, Shuh-sun Shay went to Sung.

In summer, Shuh E had a meeting with Chaou Yang of Tsin, Yoh Ta-sin of Sung, Pih-kung He of Wei, Yëw Keih of Ch'ing, and officers of Ts'aou, Choo, T'ăng, Sëeh, and Little Choo, in Hwang-foo.

3 Grackles came to Loo and built nests in trees.

4 In autumn, in the seventh month, on the first Sin day there was a great sacrifice for rain. On the last Sin day, we sacrificed for rain again.

In the ninth month, on Ke-hae, the duke retired to Ts'e. He halted at Yang-chow.

6 The marquis of Ts'e came to condole with the duke in Yay-tsing.

7 In winter, in the tenth month, on Mow-shin, Shuh-sun Shay died.

8 In the eleventh month, on Ke-hac, Tso, duke of Sung, died in K'euh-keih.

9 In the twelfth month, the marquis of Ts'e took Yun.

Par. 1. The Chuen, which Maou K'e-ling says that he cannot understand, as introduced here, says:—'This spring, Shuh-sun Ch'oh having gone to Sung on a complimentary mission, the master of the Right, who lived near the T'ung gate, visited him, and spoke meanly of the great officers of the State, and especially so of the minister of Works. Ch'aou-taze told his people about the conversation, saying, "The master of the Right will, probably, have to flee from the State. The superior man tries to dignify his own person, and then goes on to dignify others; he thereby observes the rules of propriety. But the master vilifles the great officers [of his State], and speaks contemptuously of the Head of his own surname. He is thereby treating his own person with contempt; and can he have any rules of propriety? But without those rules, he is sure to come to ruin."

'The duke of Sung gave Ch'aou-tsze a public reception, and sang the Sin kung (A lost ode), to which Ch'aou-tsze responded with the Keu hëah (II. vii. ode IV.). Next day, at the feast, when they were merry with drinking, the duke made him sit on his right, when they wept as they talked together. Yoh K'e was assisting [at the ceremonies], and reported this to others, when he had retired, saying, "This year both our ruler and Shuh-sun are likely to die. I have heard that joy in the midst of grief and grief in the midst of joy are signs of a loss of mind. The essential vigour and brightness of the mind is what we call the hwan and the pih. When these leave it, how can the man continue long? "

'The sister of Ke Kung-joh (An uncle of Ke Ping-tsze) was the wife of [the viscount of] Little Choo, and the mother of the wife of [duke] Yuen of Sung. [She, again,] bore a daughter, who was now being given as wife to Ke P'ing-tsze. Ch'aou-tsze, having come to Sung on his complimentary mission, was also to receive her, [and conduct her to Loo]. Kungjoh was in his suite, and said to the lady Ts aou (The duchess) that she should not give [her daughter to Ping-taze] for that Loo was going to expel him. She reported this to the duke, who stated it to Yoh K'e. "You will do right," was that officer's reply, "in giving her to him. The ruler of Loo will have to quit his State. The government of it has been for three generations in the hands of the Ke (Wan-tsze Hang-foo; Woo-tsze Suh; and now Ping-tsze E-joo). Four rulers of [the House of] Loo have now lost the control of the government (Seuen, Ching, Scang, and Ch'aou). There has not been a case when [the ruler] could carry out his will without the people. The ruler of a State should on this account be the protector and comforter of his people. The ode (III. iii. ode X. 6) says,

'The men are not;—
It is the sorrow of my heart.'

The ruler of Loo has lost the people; how can he get his will? If he keep quiet, and wait the issue of events, he may get on; any movement will be to his sorrow."

Par. 2. Here and afterwards Kung and Kuh have 太原 for 太亮. In the same way, Kung-yang has 世心 for 大心. Shuh E was the son of Shuh Yang;—see on XXIII. 2. Hwang-foo was another name for the Hih-jang of VII. vii. 5. This meeting here was notice of in the previous year;—a narrative there after par. 3.

The Chuen says:—'In summer, a was held at Hwang-foo, to consult royal House. Chaou Këen-tsze [of Tsi Yang) gave orders to the great offic various States to contribute grain to and to provide men to guard his terri ing. "Next year we will in-state him.

'Tsze-t'ae-shuh had an interview w Keen-tsze, and was asked by him ceremonies of bowing, yielding preced moving from one position to another. said Tsze-t'ae-shuh "are matters of de and not of ceremony." "Allow me to Këen-tsze, "what we are to unde ceremonies." The reply was, "I h our late great officer Tsze-ch'an a monies [are founded in] the regular pr Heaven, the right phænomena of eart actions of men.' 'Këen-tsze said, "Extreme is the greatness i ceremonies!" "Ceremonies," replied Tsze'se-shuh, "determine the relations of high and w; they are the warp and woof of Heaven and larth; they are the life of the people. Hence t was that the ancient kings valued them, and ence it is that the man who can now bend, now traighten, himself so as to accord with ceremony is called a complete man. Right is it hat ceremonies should be called great!" Këente taid, "I would wish all my life to keep hese words in mind, [and observe them]."

'Yoh Ta-sin of Sung said, "We shall not contribute grain; our [dukes] are guests of Chow:—how can such a thing be required of mests?" Sze Pih said, "Since [the covenant of Tseen-t'oo, what service has there been in which Sung has not shared? what covenant in which it has not taken part? It was then said that the States should together support the myal House. How can you evade this condition? You are here by the command of your ruler to join in the great business in hand:—would it not be improper for Sung to violate the covenant?" The master of the Right did not lare to reply, but received the schedule, and retired.

'Sze Pih reported the incident to Këen-tsze, mying, "The master of the Right of Sung is sure to become an exile. Bearing his ruler's orders is a commissioner here, he wished to break the bovenant, and thereby come into collision with the lord of covenants. There could be nothing nore inauspicious than this."'

Par. 3. Kung-yang has Es instead of Keu-yuh was the ancient name for the mino packle, which is now commonly called the nd-ko (八 哥). Tso-she says the record s of a thing previously unknown, and Yen Sze-koo observes that while the mino is found n many places in China, it does not cross the ise river, and was therefore not found in Too further lays stress on the R as neaning to build a nest in a tree, which is contrary to the habits of the mino, which breeds n holes in walls and banks; so that there were n the phænomenon of the text two prodigies. The Chuen gives a ridiculous narrative:— Sze he said, "How strange! I have heard that in he times of [the dukes] Wan and Ching the 10ys had a ditty, which said, 'Here are grackles apace!

The duke flies in disgrace.
Look at the grackles' wings!
To the wilds the duke flings,
A horse one to him brings.
Look how the grackles go!
In Kan-how he is low,
Wants coat and trowsers now.
Behold the grackles' nest!

Far off the duke doth rest. Chow-foo has lost his state, Sung-foo comes proud and great. O the grackles so strange! The sougs to weeping change.'

So ran the ditty, and now the grackles are here, and building their nests. Is the [other thing] about to happen?"'

The flight of duke Ch'aou from Loo was near at hand. We may be sure it had taken place before the above ditty was composed and the appearance of the grackles received its interpretation.

Par. 4. On the sacrifice for rain see the Chuen on II. v. 7. The 6th month of Chow, or the 4th of Hëa, was the season for it; but there is no difficulty in conceiving of its occurrence shortly after, in the 7th month of Chow. As there are three sin days in every month, the 1st must have been near the beginning of the 7th month; —Ying-tah makes it out to have been, this year, the 3d day of it. The repetition of the sacrifice indicates, as Tso says, the greatness of the drought ( ). Kung-yang's idea, that the second sacrifice was a feint to bring the people together, with the intention of attacking and expelling Ke-sun, is inadmissible.

Par. 5. For 己文 Kuh-liang has 乙文.
On the euphemism of 沃 (一溪) for 本, see on III. i. 2. Kung-yang has 表 for 景. Yangchow was in the north-east of the present Tungp'ing Chow (東中), dep. of T'ae-gan.
It had originally belonged to Loo, but was taken by Ts'e, we may presume in the 21st year of duke Sëang. It was therefore a kind of border city, and here the duke stayed his flight for a time, until he could ascertain the mind of the marquis of Ts'e regarding him.

The Chuen says:—' Before this, Ke Kungnëaou (An uncle of Ke-sun Ping-tsze, by a concubine of his grandfather) had married a daughter of Paou Wan-tsze of Ts'e, who bore to him [a son] Shin; and on Kung-nëaou's death, [his brother] Kung-hae, with his steward Shin Yih-koo, and Kung-sze Chen (Also a Ke), undertook the management of his house, By and by, [his widow] Ke Sze had an intrigue with her cook Shen; and becoming afraid, she made a concubine beat her, and then showed the marks to the wife of Ts'in Ch'uen (A great officer of Loo whose wife was a sister of Kungnëaou), saying, "Kung-joh (Kung-hae) wanted to use me, and when I refused, he [thus] beat me." She also complained to Kung-foo (A brother of Ping-tsze), that Chen and Yih-koo had tried to force her. Ts'in Ke (the wife of Ts'in Ch'uen) reported what she had heard to Kung-che (Another brother of Ping-tsze), who, along with Kung-foo, laid it before P'ing-tsze. On this, the minister made Chen a prisoner in P'ëen, and seized [also] Yih-koo, intending to put him to death. Kung-joh wept and bewailed the case, saying, "To kill these is to kill me. I will make intercession for them." Ping-tsze, however, made his waiting boy refuse him admittance, and up to midday he had no opportunity of presenting his request. [In the meantime], the officer in change of [Yih-koo] came to ask for his orders, and Kung-che made him dispatch his prisoner without delay. In consequence of this Kung-joh had a grudge against P'ing-tsze.

'The cocks of Ke [-sun] and the [Head of the] How [family] were in the habit of fighting. Ke-sun sheathed the head of his cock, on which How-she put metal spurs on his. In consequence Ping-tsze was enraged, and increased his own mansion at the expense of that of the other, reproving him besides; and this made How Ch'aou-pih also have a grudge at P'ing-tsze.

'Hwuy, a cousin of Tsang Ch'aou-pih, had circulated slanders against Tsang-she, and then fied to Ke-she. Tsang-she [attempted to] seize him, but P'ing-tsze was enraged, and made a prisoner of Tsang-she's steward. [About this time] it had been arranged to offer the te sacrifice in the temple of duke Sëang, but only sixteen dancers were forth-coming, all the rest being employed at Ke-she's. On this Tsang-sun said, "This may make us say that we cannot use [the proper ceremonies] in the temple of our late ruler;" and this made the great officers have a grudge at Ping-tsze.

'Kung-joh presented a bow to Kung-wei (a son of the duke), and went with him to shoot outside the city, when they consulted about doing away with Ke-she. Kung-wei informed [his brothers] Kung-kwo and Kung-fun of the design, and they made the attendant Lëaouts oo communicate it to the duke. The duke had been sleeping, and seized a spear to strike the attendant, who ran off. The duke said he would seize [the plotters]; and though he gave no orders to that effect, they were afraid, and did not come forth, nor see the duke for some months. [Finding at the end of that time that] he was not angry with them, they made the attendant speak to him again. The duke used a spear to frighten him, when he again ran off. A third time they made him speak of the matter, and the duke said, "This is a thing beyond a small man like you." Kungkwo then spoke himself, and the duke consulted Tsang-sun, who saw the difficulty of the attempt. He then communicated it to How-sun, who thought it feasible, and encouraged it. He next told it to Tsze-këa E-pih, who said, "They are slanderers who urge your lordship on to such a hazardous thing. If it do not succeed, you will receive the name (=blame) of it. It is not to be done. You and several of your predecessors have lost your hold of the people. If you would now seek by means of them to accomplish this object, you cannot be sure of success. The government, moreover, is in his hands, and it will be difficult to take measures against him." The duke would have dismissed him, but he declined to go, saying, "I have now been a party to your wishes in this thing. If word of it should leak out, I should not be allowed to die a natural death." So he took up his lodging with the duke.

'Shuh-sun Ch'aou-tsze was gone to K'an, and the duke was residing in the Long treasury (See Ana. XI. xiii.). In the 9th month, on Mow-seuh, he attacked Ke-she, and having killed Kung-che in the gate, entered the house. P'ing-tsze ascended a tower, and made a request, saying, "Your lordship, without examining into my offences, has sent your officers to punish me with shield and spear. Allow me to wait near the E, till my offences are investigated." This was refused, and he requested that he might be imprisoned in Pe. This also was refused, and he then asked to be allowed to leave the courtry with five chariots; but neither was this Tsze-kea-tsze said, "Your lordship should grant his request. The government has long been in his hands. Many of the suffering people get their food from him. His followers are many. If traitors rise when the sun has gone down, we cannot know what the result may be. The anger of his many [adherents] should not be nourished. Nourished and not dealt with, it will accumulate. When it is so nourished and accumulated, the people will begin to have new purposes, and they will then unite with those who seek the same objects as he. Your lordship will repent of it." The duke did not listen to this counsel, and Howsun strongly urged that Ping-teze should be put to death. The duke sent him to meet Mang E-tsze (Chung-sun Ho-ke), [and bring him to him].

'[In the meantinie], Tsung Le, Shuh-sun's master of the Horse, said to all his people, "What do you think of matters?" No one giving any reply, he said, "I am but an officer of a family, and do not pretend to know about the [business of the] State; but whether will it be better for us that Ke-she be, or that there be no Ke-she?" All replied, "No Ke-she is no Shuh-sun-she. Le then said, "Then let us go, and rescue him?" And with this he led his followers off to Ke-she's, burst through the league at the north-west corner, and entered the house The duke's men had put off their buff-cosis, and were squatting about, with their quive lids in their hands, so that they were [easily] driven away. Mäng-she made a soldier get up at the north-west corner to see what Ke-she was doing, and when he told him that he say Shuh-sun's flag, Mang-she seized How Ch'aoupih and killed him on the west of the south gate, after which he attacked the duke's men-Taze-kea-taze said, "All we officers who have on false pretences forced the duke to this will leave the State with our offence upon our heads. Let your lordship remain. E-joo will now feel himself compelled to change his conduct in the service of your lordship." The duke said, "I cannot bear to do it." He then went with Tsang-sun to the tombs, and took counsel with him, after which he took his departure. On Ke-hae he withdrew to Ts'e, halting in Yangchow.'

This flight of duke Ch'aou was mainly the result of his own weakness and incapacity. During all his rule, he had enjoyed only the name of marquis. The power of the State had been in the hands of the three clans, and principally in those of the Ke-sun; and in this condition things might have gone on. Pring-tsze was not prepared to seize the State for himself, and Ch'aou precipitated his own fate.

Par. 6. Yay-tsing was a city of Ts'e, in the east of the pres. dis. of Ts'e-ho ( ), dep. Tse-nan. The marquis of Ts'e, we shall see, proposed to meet the duke in Ping-yin, but Ch'aou went as far as Yay-tsing, to shorten his host's journey. They spoke together inside a tent, and Ch'aou-tsze proposed to dispose [somehow] of all [his followers], and to restore the duke [alone]. The followers wished to kill Ch'aoutsze, and placed men in ambush for the purpose in the way [by which he must return to Loo]; but Chen, the master of the Left, told the duke of their plan, who made Ch'aou-tsze return by way of Choo. [Notwithstanding this], Pingtsze was [now] of a different mind; and in winter, in the 10th month, on Sin-yew, Ch'aoutsze fasted in his chamber, and made his priest and the keeper of his ancestral temple pray that he might die. On Mow-shin (The 7th day after) he died. Chen, the master of the Left, was going to return with the duke on horseback to Loo; but the other followers seized and held him.'

['The Chuen gives here a short note about the progress of the struggle in Chow:—'On Jin-shin, duke Wan of Yin crossed [the Loh] itto Kung, and [attempted to] set fire to Tung-tsze, but his attempt was unsuccessful.']

Par. 8. K'ëuh-keih, was a city of Sung,—in the pres. dis. of K'e (本上), dep. K'ae-fung. The Chuen says:—'In the 11th month, the duke of Sung was preparing to go to Tsin on the duke's account, when he dreamt that his eldest son, Lwan, was succeeding to the dukedom in the temple, and that he himslf and [his father], duke P'ing were attending on him in their full robes. In the morning, he called the six ministers together, and said to them, "In my want of ability, I was not able to serve my uncles and elder brothers, [as I ought to do] (Referring to the events in XX. 4, et al.), to the grief of yourselves;—this was my fault. If by your powerful help I preserve my head and neck till I die a natural death, then let the board in my coffin on which my limbs are stretched not equal that used for my predecessors." Chung-ke replied, "If your grace, for the sake of the altars, should privately diminish any of the accompaniments of your feasts, we, your servants, should not presume to take any knowledge of it. But as to the laws of the State of Sung, and the rules for life and death, there are the ordinances of our former rulers. Your servants must keep to them to the death; we dare not fail in observing them. There are regular punishments for such failure as an unpardonable offence, Your servants dare not incur such a death; your order would only disgrace us."

'After this the duke went on his journey; but on Ke-hae, he died in K'euh-keih.'

Par. 9. Yun,—see VI. xii. 8, et al. Tso says the marquis of Ts'e laid siege to Yun. We must understand that he did so in the interest of duke Ch'aou, so that the people yielded the city at once, and the text simply says he took it.

[The Chuen gives here two narratives. 1st, about the Tsang-sun family. "At an earlier period, Tsang Ch'aou-pih had gone to Tsin, when Tsangliwuy stole his valued tortoise-shell of Leukeu, and consulted it as to whether a course of good faith or its opposite would be better for him. The answer was in favour of a deceitful course. The steward of Tsang-she wanted to go to Tsin to ask him [about some matters], and Hwuy begged to go instead. Ch'aou-pih asked him about [other] affairs of his family, and he told him everything; but when he asked him about his wife, and his full brother Shuh-sun, he gave him no reply. Thrice he asked in this way; and when on his return Hwuy met him in the suburbs, he asked him again, and got no answer. On his arrival he halted outside [his house], and made inquiries, to find that there was nothing the matter with those parties, on which he seized and disgraced Hwny who fied to How. Fang Këa of How made him superintendent of the market there. When he had carried his accounts to Ke-she, Tsang-she made five men, with spear and shield, lie in wait for him in the T'ung-joo street. When he came forth, they pursued him, on which he turned, and fled, but was seized outside the central gate of Ke-she's mansion. "Why do ye enter my gate with arms," said Ping-tsze, enraged, and he [seized and] confined Tsang-she's steward. This produced ill will between the two officers; and when Ch'aou-pih followed the duke, P'ing-tsze gave his place to Hwuy, who then said, "The Leu-keu did not deceive me!"

2d, about Ts'oo:—'The viscount of Ts'oo made Wei Shay wall Chow-k'ëuh, and bring back the people of Këa to it, and wall K'ëwhwang, and remove the people of Tsze to it. He also made Heung Sëang-mei wall round the suburbs of Ch'aou, and Ke Jen do the same with those of Keuen. When Tsze-t'ae-shuh heard of these things, he said, "The king of Ts'oo will [soon] die. He is not allowing the people to rest in their settlements, which must make them sad and distressed. The distress will reach the king;—he cannot continue long.']

XXVI. 1 In the [duke's] twenty-sixth year, in spring, in the king's first month, there was the burial of duke Yuen of Sung.

2 In the third month, the duke arrived from Ts'e, and resided in Yun.

3 In summer, the duke laid siege to Ch'ing.

In autumn, the duke had a meeting with the marquis of Ts'e, the viscounts of Keu and Choo, and the earl of K'e, when they made a covenant in Chuen-ling.

5 The duke arrived from the meeting, and resided in Yun.

6 In the ninth month, on Kăng-shin, Keu, viscount of Ts'oo, died.

In winter, in the tenth month, the king [by] Heaven's [grace] entered Ching chow.

8 The chief of the House of Yin, and the earls of Shaou and Maou, fled to Ts'oo, having with them the [late] king's son Chaou.

Par. 1. Tso observes that duke Yuen was now buried with the same ceremonies as the former rulers of Sung. His request as related under par. 8 of last year was thus not attended to.

Tso-she here introduces the statement that on King-shin of the 1st month the marquis of Ts'e took Yun. But the concluding par. of last year records the taking of Yun; and Too thinks it is mentioned here in the Chuen, to explain the fact of the duke's residing in Yun, as stated in the next par. Fuh K'ëen, however, is probably correct in holding that in the 12th month of last year the marquis of Ts'e commenced the siege of Yun, as stated by Tso-she, and that the place was not captured till the time now given. This, of course, leaves XXV. 9 open to the charge of inaccuracy, but we have often met in the text with much greater divergences from fact.

Par. 2. Too repeats this par. with the variation of k for k, adding that it is composed as from the point of view of Loo(言要塊); on which Too remarks that, the duke having now entered within the boundaries of Loo, we have the term 32, 'arrived;' but so he was stiff not in his capital, we have the name of the place given. The 至自夢, according to the analogy of other passages, would imply that the duke had been to the capital of Ts'e, and announced his return in the ancestral temple in his own capital. He had not been to the capital of Tre, but so he had had an interview with the ruler of that State, the is held to be justified. There is more difficulty with the use of the 3. Kin K'vei inferred from the term that Ke Ping-taze, while keeping the duke in a State of exile, yet made the usual sacrifice and announcement in the temple for him, as if he had been present! This is not at all likely. We may suppose, with Maou, that the duke went through the usual ceremonies, after a fashion, in Yun.

Par. 3. Ching,—the city of the Ming-sun cian; see on IX. xv. 3, 4. The pour duke was not able to besiege Chring himself; the real assailants were the troops of Tsre. Because the marquis of Tre, however, took no part in the operations in person, and the attempt came to nothing, the text, it is supposed, ignores the action of Ts'e in the matter.

The Chuen says:—'In summer, the marquis of Tre, intending to restore the duke, gave orders that [his officers] should not receive any bribes from Loo. Shin Fung, however, followed Joo Kee to the army of Ts'e, carrying with him two pieces of flowered silk, rolled up tight like an ear-stopper, and said to Kaou E, an officer of Taze-yew (Keu of Leang-kew, a great officer of Ts'e), that, if he could bribe him, he should be made successor to the present Head of the Kaou family, and should receive 5000 ye of grain. [In consequence of this], Kaou E showed the silk to Tsze-yew, who desired to have it, and then E said to him that the people of Loo had bought such silks, made up in 1000 pieces, but that the roads not being open, they had first sent him these as a specimen. Tsze-yew accepted the silks, and said to the marquis, "That your officers do not do their utmost for the ruler of Loo is not because they are unable to serve you, but because of the strange things which have occurred. Duke Yuen of Sung was going on his account to Tsin, and died in K'euh-keih. Shuh-sun Ch'aou-tsze was seeking to restore his ruler, when he died without any illness. I do not know whether Heaven has abandoned Loo, or whether the ruler of it has somehow offended the Spirits, in consequence of which these things have happened. If your lordship wait in K'euh-keih, you can send us to follow the ruler of Loo, and form an opinion in the case. If the enterprise be feasible, let the force be increased, and you can then follow; there will be no opposition. If it should not be successful, your lordship need not take the trouble to follow."

'The marquis adopted this advice, and sent the Kung-tsze Ts'oo with a force to follow the duke. The commandant of Ching, Kung-sun Chaou had said to Ping-taze, "I am charged with this great city to defend the State. I beg to be allowed to cope with the enemy." His request was granted; but when he wished to give hostages for his fidelity, Pfing-tase refued, saying, "I believe you, and that is enough." The commandant then sent word to the army of Tate, saying, " The Mang is a worn-out House of Leo. Its calls upon (hing have been excessive, and we cannot endure them. We ask to be allowed to rest our shoulders [now] on Tre." The army of Ta'e then laid siege to Ching, the people of which attacked the soldiers who vere watering their horses at the Tase; but [the conmandant] said that was done to satisfy the minds of the multitude. But when Loo and completed its preparations, he then sent word that he could not overcome the freluctance of the multitude [to surrender].

The armies of Loo and Ts'e fought at Ch'uype. Taze-ymen Taceh of Tate pursued Sech Shing-taze, and discharged an arrow, which his the ridge of his shield. Passing the yoke, it glanced on the pole, and its point entered [the shield] to the depth of 3 inches. Shing-taze sent back an arrow, which cut the martingale of one of his [pursuer's] horses, and killed it. Tseeh was putting another horse to his charlot, and some of the men [of Loo], thinking he was Ising Le, helped him, on which he (子里is understood to be the same as Tseeh. It would seen to be so; but we have thus two designations a him,—Tsze-yuen and Tsze-keu) said that he was a man of Tre. They were then going h strike at him, but be shot one of them dead. His charioteer cried to him to shoot another, but he said, "The multitude may be frightened, but they should not be enraged." Tsre-name Tae continued the pursuit of Yay Seeh, shouing out insulting language. Seeh said, "Battle is not the place for such expressions of private anger; in return for such personal conduct, I will fight with you." The other repeated his insults, and Seeh then also answered him in the same way.

'Jen Shoo sent an arrow at Ch'in Woo-tess, which hit him in the hand so that he let fall his bow, and began reviling. Shoo told this to Ping-taze saying, "There is a superior man, with a white face, with thick beard and eyebrows, and an awful mouth." Ping-tsze said, "It must be Tsze-k'ëang. Were you not fighting with him." "I called him," replied the other, "a superior man;—how should I dare to fight with him?"

· Lin Yung was ashamed to remain as spearman on the right of Yen Ming, and descended from the chariot. [When he was on the ground], Yuen Ho-ke cut off one of his ears, on which Yen Ming abandoned him. Yuen-taze's charioteer said to him, "Look firmly at his feet;" and be struck Lin Yung, and cut off one of his fet, after which he got on one leg into another chariet and went back [to the army of Loo]. Yes Ming thrice entered the army of Ts'e, crying out to Lin Yung to get into his chariot."

It does not appear from the Chuen what was the issue of the battle of Ch'uy-pe; but we may conclude that the siege of Ching was fruitless.

['The Chuen resumes the narrative of the distractions in Chow:- In the 4th month, the gency [of the king's affairs]. In the 5th onth, on Mow-woo, an officer of Lew defeated army from the royal city at She-she. On ow-shin an officer of the royal city and one of w fought in She-kuh, when the forces of Lew ffered a severe defeat."

Parr. 4, 5. We may presume that Chuening was in Ts'e; but its position has not been termined. The covenant there, says Tso, id reference to the plans to restore the duke. came to nothing, however. The duke remed to his residence in Yun. On the in

r. 5, see on par. 2.

[The Chuen continues the narrative about now:—'In the 7th month, on Ke-sze, the scount of Lew went forth [from his city] with a king. On Kang-woo, they halted in K'eu, and a body of men from the royal city burned lew. On Ping-tsze the king passed the night Choo-she, and on Ting-ch'ow they halted at lwan-kah. On Kang-shin the king entered lew-mei, and on Sin-sze he halted at Hwah. The Leih and Chaou Yang of Tsin led a force to ke-establish the king's authority, and made Joo Kwan guard the difficult pass of Këueh.']

Par. 6. The Chuen says:—'In the 9th month, on the death of king P'ing of Ts'00, Two-chang, the chief minister, wanted to appoint Two, in his place.

"The heir-son Jin," said he, " is young, nor whis mother the [king's] proper wife, for she had really been contracted to his son Keen. Three is old and a lover of what is good. To give the appointment to him as the eldest will be in the order of nature, and when we elect him for his goodness the State will be well governed. Ought we not to make these things of Primary regard,—a king in the order of nature, and the good government of the State?" Tazee was angry, and said, "This is to throw the thate into confusion, and show hatred of our [late] ruler and king. There is the State which is our support abroad;—it ought not to be insult-There is the legitimate heir of the king; be ought not to be disowned. If we set aside the relative [of Tsin], we shall accelerate its mmity. To disown the heir will be inauspiciwa, and I shall receive the name of the deed. Though you gave me all under heaven, I would till not agree to such a proposal; why should I o it for the State of Ts'00? The chief minisr must be put to death." On this the minister as afraid, and raised king Ch'aou in the place n his father].'

Par. 7. The Chuen says:—'In winter, in the kh month, on Ping-shin, the king set out with s troops from Hwah. On Sin-ch'ow, he was Kësou, after which he halted in She. In the th month, on Sin-yëw, the army of Tsin duced Kung, [on which] Ying, earl of Shaou, ove out the late [king's] son Chaou, who fled Ts'oo, along with members of the House of mou, Tih earl of Maou, Koo Head of the ouse of Yin, and Nan-kung Yin, carrying with em the archives of Chow. Yin Ke fled to eu, and held it in revolt. The earl of Shaou et the king at She, and made a covenant with e viscounts of Lew and Shen, and they then receded to attack Yu-tsih, and halted at T'eang. On Kwei-yew the king entered Ching-10w. On Kësh-sëuh a covenant was made in i the temple of [king] Seang. The army of Tsin [then] returned, Ch'ing-kung Pan being left with troops to guard [the territory of] Chow. In the 12th month, on Kwei-we, the king entered the Chwang palace.

"The [late] king's son Chaou sent an announcement to the various States, saying, "King Woo subdued Yin; king Ch'ing secured tranquillity throughout the kingdom, and king Kang gave the people rest. They all invested their full brothers with the rule of States, which might serve as defences and acreens for Chow. They also felt that they would not enjoy themselves alone the result of the achievements of Wan and Woo, and [reasoned] that if any of their descendants went astray or were overthrown, getting plunged into calamity, [the princes, their relatives would succour and save By-and-by, king E suffered from an them. evil disease, and the princes all hurried to sacrifice to their hills and rivers, praying for the king's person. The mind of king Le proved stubborn and tyrannical, but the myriads of the people could not hear [to hurt him], and made him take up his residence in Che. [Two of the] princes gave up their own places, that they might attend to the king's government, and when king Seuen showed that he had firm and wise] purpose, they surrendered all their offices to him. After him, in the days of king Yew, Heaven had not pity upon Chow. The king blindly pursued an improper course, and lost his throne. Then came king E in violation of the statutes, so that the princes set him aside, and raised king [Yëw's] proper heir to the throne, who removed [the capital] to Keahjuh:—thus were the brothers [of the king] able to employ their strength in support of the royal House.

"In the time of king Hwuy, Heaven did not grant tranquility to Chow, and allowed Tuy (See the Chuen after III. xix. 4) to be born, with his calamitous propensities, which extended subsequently to Shuh-tae (See on V. xxiv. 4), so that both Hwuy and [king] Sëang had to escape from danger, and leave the royal capital. Then Tsin and Chring took off those evil parties, and gave comfort and settlement to the royal House:—thus were our brothers able to fulfil the commands of the former kings.

"In the 6th year of king Ting (The 8th year of duke Seuen) there came down among the people in Ts'in these ominous utterances:—'Chow shall have a king with moustaches, who will be able to discharge well the duties of his office. The States will be submissive, and present their offerings, for two reigns attentive to their duties. Then in the royal House will be an intruder on the throne, and the princes, not taking the [necessary] measures, shall experience disorder and calamity in consequence.' When king Ling was born, he had a moustache, but he was a king of very spirit-like and sage qualities, and had no bad relations with the States. Both he and king King happily finished their reigns. But now the royal House is in confusion. K'e of Shen and Tih of Lëw have torn all under heaven into disorder, violating with an imperious conduct all rules, and saying, 'The former kings received the throne on no regular law. Let us give out our commands, according to our own minds; who will dare to call us to account?' They thus led on their merciless partizans, and threw the royal House into disorder, insatiable in their encroaching desires, covetous beyond all measure, and guilty of disrespect to the Spirits. They insolently cast aside all penal laws, violated the covenants which they had taken, were haughty and violent in their demeanour, and falsified the orders of the former king, while Tsin, against all principle, supported and assisted them, with the intention of allowing them to carry out their illimitable designs.

"[Thus] my unworthy self, in terror and agitation, am driven abroad, and am skulking here in King-man (Ts'00), not knowing what things will come to. If you, my brothers, and relatives of other surnames, will vindicate and obey the laws of Heaven, and not assist those cunning knaves, thus following the rules of the former kings, and not accelerating the approach of Heaven's judgments, but pardoning my unworthy self, and taking measures about me: this is what I desire. I venture to set forth all that is in my heart, and the regular rules of the former kings, that the States may deeply consider it. The instructions of the former kings were to this effect:—'When the queen has no son, another, the cidest son of the king, should be selected. Where years are equal, the choice must fall on the most virtuous. Where the virtue is equal, the choice must be decided by the tortoise-shell. The king must not appoint a son [merely] because he loves him; the kung and other ministers must not be influenced by their private leanings:'—these were the ancient rules. The queen Muh and the [late] king's eldest son Show died prematurely, and left the world (See the Chuen after XV. 4). Shen and Lew selfishly aided and appointed a younger son, in violation of the rule of the former kings; which is matter for all you princes, old and young, to take action upon."

'When Min Ma-foo heard this notification of Chaou the [late] king's son, he said "It is right that such notifications should be circulated. But Chaou violated the charge of [king] King, and kept aloof from the great Tsin, seeking his own exclusive aim;—he has been guilty of the greatest impropriety. What can this composition do?"

There follow here two narratives, having reference to Ts'e:—'There appeared a comet in Ts'e, and the marquis gave orders for a deprecatory sacrifice. Gan-tsze said to him, "It is of no use; you will only practise a delusion. There is no uncertainty in the ways of Heaven; it does not waver in its purposes:—why should you offer a deprecatory sacrifice? Moreover, there is a broom-star in the sky;—it is for the removal of dirt. If your lordship have nothing about your conduct that can be so described, what have you to deprecate? If you have, what will it be diminished by your deprecation? The ode (She, III. I. ode II. 3), says,

Then this king Wan,
Watchfully and reverently,
Did bright service to God.
So did he secure great blessing.
His virtue was without deflection,
And he received the allegiance of the States from all quarters.'

Let your lordship do nothing contrary to virtue, and from all quarters the States will come to you;—why should you be troubled about a comet? The ode (A lost ode) says,

'I have no beacon to look at, [But] the sovereigns of Hën and Shang. It was because of their disorders That the people fell away from them.'

If the conduct be evil and disorderly, the people are sure to fall away, and nothing that priests and historiographers can do will mend the evil." The marquis was pleased, and stopped the sacrifice.'

2d. 'The marquis of Ts'e was sitting with Gan-taze in his State-chamber, and said, "How beautiful is this chamber! Who will have it [hereafter]?" "Allow me to ask," said Ganteze, "what you mean." "I suppose," the marquis replied, "the possession of this will depend on [men's] virtue." The minister said, "According to what your lordship says, the pussessor will perhaps be Head of the Chia family. Although that family has not great virtue, it dispenses bounties to the people The tow, the gow, the foo, and the charg, with which it receives [its payments] from the State are small (See the 1st narrative after III. 1), but those with which it gives out to the people are large. Your exactions are great, and the benefactions of the Chin are great; so that the people are giving their affections to that family. The ode (II. vii. ode IV. 3) 1474

'Though I have no virtue to impart to you. We will sing and dance.'

The bounties of the Ch'in family to the people are making them sing and dance. Heresiter, should any of your descendants be somewhat remiss, and the Ch'in family not have disappeared, the State will belong to it." "Good!" said the duke; "what then ought to be done?" Gan-tsze replied, "It is only an attention to rules of propriety which can stop [the progress of events]. By those rules, the bounties of a family cannot extend to all the State. Some must not change the business of their fathers husbandry, some mechanical art, or trade; Inferiors must not be negligent; higher officer must not be insolent; great officers must not take to themselves the privileges of the ruler. "Good!" said the marquis. "I am not able to attain to this; but henceforth I know how State can be governed by the rules of propriety "Long have those rules possessed such a riche was the reply. "Their rise was contemporaneous with that of Heaven and Earth. That the ruler order and the subject obey, the father be kind and the son dutiful, the elder brother loving and the younger respectful, the husband be harmonious and the wife gentle, the motherin-law be kind and the daughter-in-law obedient; —these are things in propriety. That the rule in ordering order nothing against the right, and the subject obey without any duplicity; that the father be kind and at the same time reverence. and the son be dutiful and at the same time able to remonstrate; that the elder brother, while loving, be friendly, and the younger docile, while respectful; that the husband be rightern, while harmonious, and the wife correct, while gentle; that the mother-in-law be condescending, while kind, and the daughter-in-law be style of propriety." Gan-tsze replied, "It was | place."]

winning, while obedient;—these are excellent | what the ancient kings received from Heaven things in propriety." "Good!" said the duke, | and Earth for the government of their people, [again]; "henceforth I have heard the highest and therefore they ranked it in the highest XXVII. 1 In the [duke's] twenty-seventh year, he went to Ts'e. He arrived from Ts'e. and resided in Yun.

2 In summer, in the fourth month, Woo murdered its ruler, Lëaou.

3 Ts'oo put to death its great officer, Këoh Yuen.

4 In autumn, Sze Yang of Tsin, Yoh K'e-le of Sung, Pih-kung He of Wei, and officers of Ts'aou, Choo, and T'ang, had a meeting in Hoo.

In winter, in the tenth month, Woo, earl of Ts'aou, died.

6 K'wae of Choo came a fugitive to Loo.

7 The duke went to Ts'e.

8 The duke arrived from Ts'e, and resided in Yun.

Par. 1. A second time the duke had been to the marquis of Ts'e without accomplishing anything, and he returns to his quarters in Yun. That city is always specified, because alone would indicate that he returned to the capital of Loo. As Tso says, the mention of Yun tells how the duke was kept from his capital ( A H).

Par. 2. The Chuen says:—'The viscount of the death of [the coo, wishing on occasion of the death of [the coo, wishing on occasion of the death of [the coo, wishing on occasion of the death of [the coo, wishing on occasion of the death of [the cooperation of the cooperation

Par. 2. The Chuen says:—'The viscount of Woo, wishing on occasion of the death of [the king of] Ts'oo to invade that State, sent the Wo Kung-tszes Yen-yu and Chuh-yung with a Orce to lay siege to Ts'ëen, and sent Ke-tsze of en and Chow-lae on a mission to the upper

States, and to go on to Tsin, to observe how it was going on with the different princes. The Yëw-director Jen, and Keun director of Yuh, (The 義, and 王 or 王 or 工, are of doubtful meaning) proceeded with a force from Ts'00 to relieve Ts'ëen, and were reinforced by the marshal of the Left, Seuh, director of Shin, at the head of the gentry of the capital and the men belonging to the king's Horse. They met with the army of Woo at K'ëung; and in the meantime, the chief minister Tsze-chang proceeded with a naval force to the bend of the Sha, and then returned. Këoh Yuen, director of the Left, and Show director of Works, proceeded to Ts'een with another force, so that the army of Woo could not retreat.

'The Kung-tize Kwang' of Woo thought, "This is my time; it must not be lost;" and he said to Chuen Sheh-choo, (See at the end of the 2d narrative after XX. 1), "The upper States have a saying that if you do not seek for a thing you will not get it. I am the [former] king's heir. I wish to seek the kingdom. If the thing succeed, although Ke-tsse come [back], he will not displace me." Sheh-ohoo said, "The king may be killed; but my mother is old and my son is young; what can I do in this matter?" Kwang replied, "I will be as you [to them]."

'In summer, in the 4th month, Kwang concealed some men-at-arms in an underground chamber, and invited the king to a feast. The king made his men-at-arms line the road, [from his palace] to [Kwang's] gate. At the gate, the steps, the [inner] doors, and the mats, were the king's friends, on either side of them, with swords. They stripped the bodies of the attendants who brought in the viands, and made them change their clothes outside the door; and those attendants then crawled in on their kness, [other] sword-bearers going with them on either side, close to their persons; and thus the viands were handed [to the king]. Kwang pretending that he was suffering in his feet, entered the underground chamber, and Chuen Sheh-choo came in with a fish in which he had placed a clagger. Seizing the weapon, he stabbed the king, and at the same time [two] swords met in his breast. Thus he killed the king;—and Hohleu made his son a minister.

'When Ke-tsze arrived, he said, "If the sacrifices to our former rulers be not neglected, nor the people be without a [proper] master; if the offerings be presented at our altars, and the State be not allowed to fall;—he shall be my ruler. Against whom should I cherish resentment? I will mourn the dead and serve the living, while I await the decree of Heaven;—I will not create disorder. Him who is on the throne I will follow;—according to the way of our former kings." He then reported the execution of his mission and wept, at the grave [of Lëaou], after which he resumed his position, and awaited the orders [of the new king].

'The Kung-tsze Yen-yu fled to Seu, and Chuh-yung fled to Chung-woo. The army of Ts'oo withdrew, on hearing of the confusion in Woo.'

The critics have exercised their ingenuity, and that with little success, to find out the ground on which the murder of Lëaou is ascribed to Woo. The K'ang-he editors say, 'It was Kwang who murdered his ruler, and yet the text assigns the deed to Woo, and not to Kwang. Hoo Gan-kwoh holds that the guilt is thereby ascribed to the great ministers;—which is one view. Ch'an Joh-shwuy ( Ming dyn.) says that the style of the text is intended to make people investigate the matter, when they will discover the true criminal;—which view is preferable. Too Yu held that guilt is thereby fixed on Lëaou himself, and K'ung Ying-tah and Lëw Ch'ang argue that all the people wished the death of Lëaou; but this view cannot be sustained. See our remarks at length under VI. xvi. 7.'

Par. 8. Kuh-lëang has 太阳 for 谷民. The Chuen says:—'Këoh Yuen was a man upright and peaceable, but he was hated by Fei Wookeill, and Yen Tseang-see commander of the Left, who was a partizan of Woo-keih. The chief minister, Tsze-chang, was fond of gifts and lent an ear to slander. [Accordingly], Woo-keih, to calumniate Këoh Yuen, said to Taze-chang, "Tsze-goh (Yuen's designation) wishes to invite you to drink with him;" and then he said to Taze-goh that the chief minister wished to come and drink with him in his house. That officer said. "I am of low rank, and unworthy of a visit from the chief minister. If he issist on paying me a visit, the kindness is extreme; wherewith shall I recompense him?" Wookeih replied, "The chief minister is food of buff-coats and sharp weapons. Bring forth what you have of these, and I will make a selection from them." In this way he took Eve of each, and said, "Place these at your gate. When he comes, he is sure to see them, and you can then present them to him."

'On the day for the feast, [Yuen] erected a tent on the left of his gate, [with those things in it]; on which Woo-keih said to the minister, "I had nearly brought misfortune on you. Tsze goh is intending evil to you, and has got menat-arms at his gate. You must not go. Moreover, in the recent expedition, we should have got our will upon Woo, but for Taze-goh who took bribes and returned. He also imposed on the other commanders, and made them retire, saying that it would be inauspicious to take advantage of the disorders [in Woo]. As Woo had taken advantage of our mourning, would it not have been proper to take advantage of its confusion?" The minister sent a messenger w look at Këoh's house, and there were the bascoats. He did not go [to the feast] therefore, but called for Yen Treang-sze, and told him the When Tacang-sre retired, be circumstances. gave orders to attack Kech's house, and to burn it. When Tsze-goh heard of it, he killed himself. [Meantime], the people would not burn the house, and an order was issued that all who would not burn it should be held 🐸 equally guilty with Këoh. ()n this some took a rush rope, and some took a handful of straw, but they threw them down [again], and would not burn the house. The chief minister then caused it to be done, and extinguished all the branches of the Keoh family and its partizant, putting to death Yang Ling-chung with his younger brothers Hwan and To, and Tsin Chin, with his sons and younger brothers. The kindred of Tsin Ch'in cried out in the city, "Yen and Fel are making themselves kings, and by their own authority working calemity to the State of Ts'oo, weakening and thinning the royal House, and deceiving the king and the chief minister for their own gain. The chief minister believes them entirely;—what is to become of the State? This distressed the chief minister.'

On this paragraph again we have much speculation, to explain the ascription of the death of Yuen to Ts'00.

Par. 4. Hoo,—see III. xxiii. 10, et al. On III. xxiii. 10, Too says that Hoo was in Ching, to which the K'ang-he editors assent, nor do they make mention of any other Hoo there or in other places. But if there were only the one Hoo of Ching, why was no minister of that State present at this meeting? On VII. ix. 9, Kung.

mys that Hoo was a city of Tsin. There probably two places of the name.

Chuen says:—'The meeting at Hoo in tumn was to give orders about guarding and to consult about restoring the duke ol. Sung and Wei were eager for his ition, and strongly urged it. Fan Heenowever, had taken bribes from Ke-sun, ld to Tsze-lëang (Yoh K'e-lè), the minister rks [of Sung], and Pih-kung Ching-teze "Ke-sun knew not what offence he had tted, when his ruler attacked him. He is likely to die here!" The duke sent Tsze-këa-tsze on a mission to Tsin, which his followers were defeated at Tseuabout affairs in Ts'oo. 'Throughout Ts'oo inguage of the people about the fate of Yuen (See on par. 3) never ceased, and all, when presenting their sacrifices, reviled the chief minister. Sen, director of Shin, spoke to Tsze-chang, saying, "No one knows what were the offences of the director of the Left (Këoh Yuen), and of the director of the middle stables, (Yang Ling-chung) and yet you put them to death, thereby producing those revilings and murmurings, which to this day have not ceased. I am myself in doubts about it. A virtuous man would not kill another even to stop revilings;—is it not strange that you should kill men to excite them, and take no measures in the matter? Now Woo-keih is the slanderer of Ts'oo, as all the people know. He removed Chaou Woo (See on XV. 3); caused the expulsion of Choo the marquis of Ts'ae (See on XXI. 6); ruined our late king's eldest son Këen, and caused the death of the Leen Yin, Ch'ay (See the 2d narrative at the beginning of the 20th year). He has stood like a screen before the king's ears and eyes, so that he should neither hear nor see. But for this, the gentle mildness, the humility and economy, of king P'ing, who excelled both Ch'ing and Chwang, would have been universally acknowledged. That he did not gain to himself all the States was simply owing to Woo-keih. Now he has further put to death three innocent men, so as to excite great revilings, which have almost affected yourself. And yet you are taking no measures in regard to him;—what can you expect from such a course? Then Yen Tsëangsze, by falsifying an order from you, atterly destroyed the families of three officers, among the best men of the State, who had committed no failure of duty in their offices. Woo has got a new ruler, and the borders are daily in a state of terror. If any great affair occur in our State, you will be in peril. Wise men take off slanderers, to secure their own repose, but you love alanderers to put yourself in peril. Extreme is your delusion!" Tsse-chang said, " I am guilty in this, and shall now take good measures in the case." In the 9th month, on Ke-we, Taze-chang put to death Fei Woo-keih and Yen Tsëang-sze, utterly destroying all the branches of their families. Thus he satisfied the people, and the revilings ceased.

Par. 7. The Chuen says, "In winter, the duke went to Ts'e, when the marquis begged to offer him an entertainment. Tsze-këa-tsze said, "Morning and evening you stand in his court; —how should he invite you to [the ceremony of] an entertainment. It is to a drinking [feast only]." Accordingly there was a drinking feast, and [the marquis] made the assistant-administrator offer the cup, and asked leave to take his own ease [elsewhere].

'A daughter of Taze-chung (the Kung-taze Yin, who fied to Ta'e in the duke's 12th year. See on XII. 8) who was called Ch'ung was in the harem of the marquis, and intimated that she wished the duke to call her to see him. On this Taze-këa-taze left the feast, carrying the duke with him.'

Par. 8. [The Ch'uen appends here a brief note:—'In the 12th month, Tseih Ts'in of Tsin required the guards from the different States to go to Chow. The people of Loo declined the service on account of the troubles in their State.']

- XXVIII. I In the [duke's] twenty-eighth year, in spring, in the king's third month, there was the burial of duke Taou of Ts'aou.
  - 2 The duke went to Tsin. He halted in Kan-how.
  - In summer, in the fourth month, on Ping-seuh, Ning, earl of Ch'ing, died.
  - 4 In the sixth month, there was the burial of duke Ting of Ch'ing.
  - 5 In autumn, in the seventh month, on Kwei-sze, Ning, viscount of Tang, died.
  - 6 In winter, there was the burial of duke Taou of Tang.

Par. 1. This was the 6th month since his death. The burial was late.

Par. 2. Kan-how was a city of Tsin, in the south-east of the pres. dis. of Ching-gan (

The duke found that Ts'e was tired of him, and now threw himself on the protection of Tsin.

The Chuen says:—'This spring, the duke was going to Tsin, and wanted to proceed to Kan-how. Tsze-kea-tsze said to him, "When one has to request a refuge from another, and at once proceeds to where he would be at ease, who will have any pity for him? You should go [only] to the borders [at first]." The duke would not listen to this suggestion, [and proceeded to Kan-how], and sent word [from it] to the capital of Tsin, begging that he might be met there. The marquis, however, said, "Heaven is afflicting the State of Loo, and its ruler has long endured his sorrow abroad. Without sending a single messenger to me, however, he threw himself upon one merely related to him by affinity. It should suffice for him to have got [the marquis of Ts'e] to meet him." The duke was made to return to the borders, and then he was met.'

The critics think that all these notices of the movements of the duke, where he went, where he halted, &c., are from the pencil of Confucius himself;—to show that the ruler of Loo was still in existence, and indicate his condemnation of the usurpation of Ke-sun See the note by the K'ang-he editors on this par.

Parr. 8, 4. Kung-yang has for inc. The burial of the earl of Ching in the 8d month after his death must have been so hastened on for some extraordinary reason.

[The Chuen introduces here a narrative of affairs in Tsin:—'K'e Shing and Woo Tsang of Tsin exchanged wives, in consequence of which K'e Ying (Head of the K'e family, and son of K'e Woo mentioned in the Chuen appended to IX. iii. 4,) purposed to seize them. Consulting, however, the marshal Shuh Yëw on the subject, that officer said, "We read in a book of Ch'ing that those who hate what is right and dislike what is correct are very many. The sway of what is unprincipled is established. I am afraid you will not escape evil consequences, [if you do it] The ode (She, III. ii. ode X. 6) says,

'The people have many perversities;
Do not you set up your perversity before them.'

Suppose you let them alone for the present. Ying said, "If our K'e family privately punishem, what is it to the State?" Accordingly beized the criminals. [In the meantime] K' Shing bribed Seun Leih, who spoke for him the marquis; and K'e Ying was seized. One his officers said, "He is sure in any case to disbut let my master hear of the death of Shingan Tsang, and it will be a satisfaction to him." Uthis he put both those men to death. In some mer, in the 6th month, Tain put K'e Ying death, and Sze-wo of Yang, who was a particular of his and had aided his lawlessness. On the account he [also] was put to death, and the fan lies of K'e and Yang-sheh were extinguished.

'Formerly Shuh-heang had wished to mar a daughter of Woo-shin, duke of Shin, but I mother wanted him to take one of her kindr rather. He said to her, "My mothers (I.a.) inmates of his father's harem) are many, but I father has few children by them. I must keep loof from your kindred." She replied, "The v of Tsze-ling (Woo-shin. His wife was Hea I See on VII. x. 8, et al.) proved the death of the husbands, one ruler, and her son, and ruin a State, and two of its ministers. Ought y not to keep aloof from her? . Here again Kung-yang has if for Chuen has here another long narrative airs in Tsin :—' In autumn, Han Seuen-Isin died, and the government passed hands of Wei Heen-tsze (Mentioned the Chuen on IX. xxiii. 7). He divided s of the K'e and Yang-sheh families, er into 7, and the latter into 8 districts; e Sze-ma Me-mow great officer of Woo; , of Kie; Sze-ma Woo, of Ping-ling; w, of Kang-yang; Che Seu-woo, of Too-Han Koo, of Ma-show; Mang Ping, of 1 Sësou, of T'ung-te; Chaou Chaou, of ng; Lëaou Gan, of Yang-she. He gave ipointaients to Kea Sin and Sze-ma cause of their services to the royal and theirs to Che Seu-woo, Chaou Chaou, o, and Wei Mow, because he considered augh they were the sons of concubines, uld not fail in their offices and could the inheritance of their fathers. The our all received their districts, and then I before Wei-tsze, showing that they pointed because of their worthiness. to Ching Chuen, "As I have given is own son by a concubine) a district, say that I am acting partially?" "Why hey do so?" was the reply. Mow is of haracter that, though kept at a distance, not forget his ruler, and, though kept as avourite, he will not assume anything s associates. In presence of gain he f righteousness; in the midst of diffihe seeks to maintain his purity. He p his heart, and abstain from all licennduct. You have given him a district, it not proper to do so? Formerly, ing Woo subdued Shang, and obtained aussession of all the land, 15 of his broexerved States, and 40 other princes of name of Ke did the same;—these were intments of kindred. They were made of the virtue of their subjects, whether r distantly related. The ode (She, III. i. . 4) says,

*Now this king Wan
Was gifted by God with the power of judgment,

So that the fame of his virtue silently grew. His virtue was highly intelligent, Highly intelligent and of rare discrimination;

Capable of leading, capable of ruling,—
To rule over this great nation,
Rendering a cordial submission, able to produce cordial union.

When the sway came to king Wan, His virtue left nothing to be dissatisfied with.

He received the blessing of God, And it was extended to his descendants.'

To have a mind able to determine what is right is called 'the power of judgment.' When virtue through its correctness is responded to with harmony, we have its 'silent exertion.' Extending a bright influence over all quarters is called 'illumination.' Earnest beneficence without selfish partiality is called 'discrimination.' Teaching without being weary is called 'lead. 'The ruler' is he who makes happy by his rewards and awes by his punishments. 'Submission' is when there is a universal subjection to gentleness and harmony. 'Cordial union' is the effect of the choice of what is good, and following it. Character of which heaven and earth are the warp and woof is called 'accomplished.' When these nine virtues are found without error, there is nothing in the conduct to occasion dissatisfaction. Thus it was that king Wan received his dignity from Heaven, and his descendants were blessed through him. In your promotions you have approximated to the virtue of Wan. Far-extending will be the effect!"

'When Kea Sin was about to proceed to his district, he appeared before Wei-tsze, who said to him, "Come here, Sin. Formerly, when Shuhhëang went to Ch'ing, Tsung Mëeh of that State, who was an ugly man, wished to see him, and followed for that purpose the servants who were removing the dishes [of the feast]. As he stood below the hall, he uttered one sentence so excellent, that when Shuh-hëang, who was about to drink, heard it, he said, 'That must be Tsung Ming;' and with this he descended the steps, took him by the hand, and ascended with him, saying, 'Formerly, a great officer of Këa, who was ugly, married a wife who was beautiful; but for 8 years she neither laughed nor spoke. He drove with her to [the marsh of] Kaou, and there shot at a pheasant and hit it, upon which she laughed for the first time and spoke, so that the officer said, 'One's ability should not be unexercised. If I had not been able to shoot, you would not have laughed nor spoken.' Now Sir, your features are rather undistinguished, and if you had not spoken, I should probably have remained unacquainted with you. Your [ability of] speech must not be unexercised.' In this way they became like old acquaintances. Now you have done good service to the royal House, and therefore I have given you your appointment. Go and be reverently attentive to your duty. Minish not aught in the energy of your services."

'When Chung-ne heard of the appointments made by Wei-tsze, he considered them to be just, and said, "He has not failed in his duty to those near him of his own House, nor has he erred in his promotion of others more remote. His conduct may be pronounced just." When he heard of his charge to Këa Sin, he considered it to be loyal. The ode (III. i. ode I. 6) says,

'Ever strive to be in accordance with the will [of Heaven],

And you will be seeking for yourselves much happiness.'

This is loyalty. Wei-tsze's appointments were just, and his charge was loyal;—was it not likely that his posterity would continue long in the State of Tsin?'

Par. 6. Though the duke was in exile, we see that Ke-sun kept up the reciprocities of Loo with foreign States, as if there had been nothing the matter with itself.

[The Chuen gives a narrative here, illustrating the faithfulness of Wei Mow above:—'In winter, a man of Kang-yang had a lawsuit, which Wei Mow was not able to determine, and he referred it [to the capital]. The principal member of the man's family offered a bribe of some female musicians, which Wei-tsze was going to receive. Mow said to Yen Muh and Joo Kwan, "Our lord is noted through the States for not receiving bribes, but there could be no greater case of such acceptance, if he receive [what is offered by] this man of Kang-yang. You must remonstrate with him." They agreed to do so; and when [Weitsze] retired from the audience of the marquis, they were waiting in his court-yard. When his meal was brought in, he called them [to join in it]; and during its course, they sighed three times. When it was over, he made them sit down [with him], and said, "I have heard my uncles repeat the common saying that 'Mest makes a man forget his sorrow;'—what was the reason that while the food was being served up, you gave [those] three sighs." They answered both together, saying, "We were drinking with a friend, and ate nothing [last] evening. When the first course came in, we were afraid there might not be sufficient, and therefore we sighed. When the second course came, we condemned ourselves, and thought, 'How could we be feasted by the general, and not get enough? This was the reason of the second sigh. And when the last course was ended, [we thought], 'Would that it were with minds of superior men as it is with the bellies of small men like us!—that they were satisfied when they had enough!" On this Wei-tsze refused [the bribe of ] the man of Kang-yang.']

XXIX. 1 In the [duke's] twenty-ninth year, he came from Kanhow, and resided in Yun. The marquis of Ts'e sent Kaou Chang there to condole with him.

2 The duke went to Tsin, and halted in Kan-how.

- 3 In summer, in the fourth month, on Kang-tsze, Shuh E died.
- 4 It was autumn, the ninth month.
- 5 In winter, in the tenth month, [the people] of Yun dispersed.

Par. 1. In XXVI. 2, it is said that the duke came from Ts'e ( ) and resided in Yun. Though he had not been to the capital of Ts'e, he had had a meeting with the marquis, which was held sufficient to authorize the record that he came from Ts'e. But though he had entered Tsin, and been met perhaps on its borders (See the Chuen on XXVIII. 2) by officers from its court, he had not had a meeting with the marquis; and therefore it could only be said here that 'he arrived from Kan-how.'

The Chuen says:—'When the duke came from Kan-how, and [again] resided in Yun, the marquis of Ts'e sent Knou Chang to condole with him, and that officer merely addressed him by the title of "Sir;" on which Tszekën-tsze said, "The ruler of Tse is humbling you. You are only being disgraced." The duke then went [back] to Kan-how.' The duke had left Ts'e and gone to Tsin, hoping that he would receive better treatment, and substantial help. On the contrary he found himself worse off, and on his return to Yun, the marquis of Ts'e only treated him with contempt. The style of the messenger in calling him 'Sir (主君)' was the mode of addressing a great officer. The incssage of condolence was really a message of mockery.

[There is a narrative here about affairs in Chow:—'In the 3d month, on Ke-maou, Ying earl of Shaou, Koo chief of the House of Yin, and the son of Loo earl of Yuen (See the Chuen on XVIII. 4) were put to death in the capital. On the return of Koo of Yin (See on XXVI. 8), a woman met him in the suburbs of Chow, and condemned his conduct, saying, "When in Chow, he encouraged others to do evil; when he left it, he numbered the days till his return:—

this fellow is not likely to last beyond 3 years." In summer, in the 5th month, on Kang-yin, the [late] king's son Chaou-keu entered Leen, and held it in revolt. Yin Puh-ning defeated him.]

Par. 2. The Chuen says:—'Every year P'ing-tsze bought horses, and provided clothes and shoes for the [duke's] followers, and sens them to Kan-how. The duke seized those who brought the horses and sold them, on which the horses were not again sent.

'The marquis of Wei sent him a horse of his own chariot, which was called K'e-fuh. It fell into a ditch and died, and the duke was going to have a coffin made for it, but Tsze-këa-tsze said to him, "Your followers are in distress. Please give [the value] to them to get food." On this he had it wrapped up in a curtain, [and buried it].

'The duke gave Kung-yen a robe of lamb's fur, and sent him to present a Lung-foo [piece of jade] to the marquis of Ts'e. Kung-yen took the opportunity to present [also] the robe, and the marquis was pleased, and gave him [the city of ] Yang-kuh.

'The mothers of Kung-yen and Kung-wei (Both, the duke's sons. See the Chuen on XXV. 5) were both withdrawn to the birth-chamler, when their sons were born. Kung-yen was born first, but Kung-wei's mother said, "We retired here together. Let us announce the births of our children [also] together." Three days after, Kung-wei was born, and his mother gave the announcement of his birth first, so that the duke considered him the elder of the two. Now, however, the duke was selfishly glad because of [the gilt of ] Yang-kuh; and thinking [also] of what had happened in Loo, he said. "It was Woo-jin (Kung-wei) who wrought this misery, and though the last-born he is considered the elder;—his falsity is of long standing." Acordingly he degraded him, and appointed Kungen to be his eldest son and heir.'

Par. 3. Kuh-lëang says here:—'Ke-sun E-joo, aid, "Shuh has died without any illness. This s [another proof of] why we are without the luke. It is by the will of Heaven, and not from any offence of mine."' His glossarist Fan Ning observes that Shuh E had wished to bring the duke back. Of this Tso-she says nothing, nor of E's dying without any apparent cause.

Par. 4. [The Chuen appends here a long narrative on the subject of dragons:—'In autumn, a dragon appeared in the suburbs of Këang, on which Wei Heen-tsze asked Ts'ae Mih [the grand historiographer], saying, "I have heard that of all the scaly tribes the dragon in the most knowing, because it cannot be got alive. Is it true to say that it is thus knowing?" Mih replied, "This is only men's want of knowledge; it is not that the dragon is really knowing. Anciently they kept dragons, and hence there were in the kingdom the families of Hwan-lung, (Dragonrearer) and Yu-lung (Dragon-ruler)." Hëen-tsze said, "I have heard myself of those two families, but do not know their history;—what is the meaning of their names?" [The historiographer] replied, "Formerly, there was Shuh-gan of Lëw, who had a distant descendant called Tung-100, very fond of dragons, and able to find out their tastes and likings, so as to supply them with meat and drink. Many dragons came to him, and he, according to their nature, reared them in the service of the emperor Shun, who gave him the surname of Tung, and the clan-name of Hwan-lung. He was [also] invested with [the principality of] Tsung-ch'uen, and the family of Tsung-e is of his posterity. Thus in the time of the emperor Shun, and for generations after, dragons were reared.

"We come [then] to K'ung-këah of the Hëa dynasty, who was [so] obedient and acceptable to God, that God gave him teams of dragons; two from the Ho and two from the Han,—in Pairs, male and female. K'ung-këah could not feed them, and no members of the Hwan-lung samily were to be found. But amid the remains of the family of T'aou-t'ang (Yaou) was a descendant called Lew Luy, who had learned the art of rearing dragons from the family of Hwan-lung. With this he undertook to serve K'ung-kësh, and was able to feed the dragons. The sovereign esteemed his service, gave him the clan-name of Yu-lung, and appointed him to the place of the descendants of Ch'e-wei (See on IX. xxiv. 1). One of the female dragons died, and he secretly preserved it as mineed meat in brine, supplying with it the table of the sovereign of Hea, who enjoyed it, and required him to find thers [for the same use]. On this Lew Luy was fraid, and removed to Loo-heen. The family of Fan is descended from him."

'Hëen-tsze said, "What is the reason that here are none now?" Mili replied, "Every ind of creatures must have its own officers, the carefully attend to the laws of its nature, norning and evening thinking of them, and the, if for a single day they fail in their duties, hould be liable to death, lose their offices, and lave no support. When the officers rest in the erformance of their appointed duties, the reatures come to them [abundantly]. If they leglect and abandon those duties, the creatures ease to appear, and lie concealed;—their production is restrained and stopped. In this way there were the officers of the five elementary principles, who were called the five officers, received their several clan-names and surnames, and were appointed dukes of the highest rank. They were sacrificed to, [after death], as Spirits, and received honour and offerings, at the altars of the land and grain, and at the five [regular] sacrifices. The chief officer of wood was called Kow-mang; of fire, Chuhyung; of metal, Juh-show; of water, Heuenming; of earth, How-t'oo. The dragon is a creature of the water; there is no longer an officer of the water; and therefore it is not got alive. If this be denied, [consider] what we have in the Yih of Chow. In the case of the diagram K'een (=), on the line which appears changed in Kow (), we have, 'The dragon lies hid in the water; it is not the time for active employment;' on that which is changed in T'ung-jin (==), 'The dragon appears in the fields;' on that which is changed in Ta-yew (==), 'Flies the dragon in the heavens;' and on that which is changed in K'wae (=), 'The dragon goes too far. There will be reason for repentance;" and where all its lincs would be as in K'wăn (宣言), 'There appear all the dragons without a Head. It is fortunate.' Then in the case of K'wan, on that line which is changed in Poli (==), we have, 'The dragons fight in the wilderness.' If the dragon had not constantly -morning and evening-appeared, who could have thus described it?" Hëen-tsze asked, "What were the families of the five officers, sacrificed to at the altars of the land and grain, and of the five Spirits of the elementary substances?" Mih again replied, "In the time of Shaon-haou, there were four men, called Ch'ung, Kae, Sew, and He, able to regulate [the kingdoms of ] metal, wood, and water. Ch'ung was made Kow-mang; Kae, Juh-show; and Sew and He, Heuen-ming. For ages those families did not fail in their duties, but completed the merit of K'ëung-sang (Shaou-haou). These shared in three of the sacrifices. Chuen-hëuh had a son called Le. who became the Chuh-yung. Kungkung had a son called Kow-lung, who became the How-t'on. These shared in two of the sacrifices. How-t'oo was sacrificed to at the altar of the land; at that of the Spirit of the grain, the director of Agriculture. A son of Lëen-shan was called Ch'oo, and he shared in this sacrifice. During the Hea dynasty and previously they sacrificed to him. Ke, the ancestor of Chow, was also director of Agriculture. From the Shang dynasty downwards, they have sacrificed to him."'

[We have here another narrative about affairs in Tsin:—'In winter, Chaou Yang and Seuen Yin of Tsin led a force, and walled Joo-pin, after which they laid upon the [districts of the] State a contribution of a koo (—480 catties) of iron, in order to cast penal tripods, on which they inscribed the penal laws prepared by Fan Seuen-tsze.'

'Chung-ne said, "Tsin is going to ruin! It has lost its [proper] rules [of administration]. Tsin ought to keep the laws and rules which T'ang-shuh received for the regulation of his people. If the ministers and great officers would keep them in their several positions, the people would be able to honour their higher classes, and those higher classes would be able to preserve their inheritances. There would be nothing wrong with the noble or the mean. We should have what might be called the [proper] rules. For this purpose duke Wan made his officers of different degrees, and formed the laws of P'e-leu (See on V. xxvii. 5), thus becoming lord of covenants. When those rules are now abandoned, and tripods with the penal laws on them are formed instead, the people will study the tripods, and not care to honour their men of rank. But when there is no distinction of noble and mean, how can a State continue to exist? Moreover, the penal laws of Seuen-tsze are those adopted at the review in E (See the Chuen at the beginning of VI. vi.),—the enactments which led to the disorder of Tsin; how can they be made its laws?" The historiographer Ts'ae Mil said, "The families of Fan and Chung-hang are in danger of perishing. Chunghang Yin (I. q. Seun Yin) is an inferior minister, and yet he intrudes into the duties of a higher rank, presuming to make these articles with the penal statutes, to form the laws of the State. This is giving an example of lawlessness; and moreover he involves the Fan family, and will ruin it by the change he is making. Wherein the Chaou family is concerned, Chaou-mang indeed has been a party to this, but he could not help it. If he cultivate his virtue, he may escape [the fate of Yin]."'

Compare with the remarks attributed here to Confucius the narrative appended to VI. 2.]

滅王不以不 億吾 斷 封 釈

XXX. 1 In his thirtieth year, in spring, in the king's first month, the duke was in Kan-how.

In summer, in the sixth month, K'eu-tsih, marquis of Tsin, died.

3 In autumn, in the eighth month, there was the burial of duke King of Tsin.

4 In winter, in the twelfth month, Woo extinguished Seu, and Chang-yu, viscount of Seu, fled to Ts'oo.

Par. 1 The duke had gone, the previous spring, to Kan-how, and, we may suppose, had remained there. It was of no use for him to think now of returning to Yun, as that city had been abandoned by the inhabitants. The in the text, instead of the inhabitants. The in the text, instead of the in it is accounted for by the fact that Yun was in Loo, a city belonging to the duke, in which circumstances obliged him for a time to take up his residence, whereas he could only be described as 'being in K'an-how,' which belonged to another State. But is there anything more, any judgment of Confucius, indicated by the record, A H H K, repeated as it is at the commencement of the two next years? Dukes of Loo had more than once, on previous occasions during the period of the Ch'un Ts'ëw, been absent from their capitals at the beginning of the year, but once only does the text record the fact, in the A H To of IX. xxix. 1. See the notes there. The critics are divided on the question. Too Yu (Trying to explain Ts'o's language here, which the K'ang-he editors do not give, and which I have tried in vain to understand) finds in the language the expression of condennation,—indicating that the duke was an exile, through his own misconduct, and obstinacy in rejecting the counsels of Tsze-këa; and this view is strongly advocated by Maou Se-ho. Lëw Ch'ang and others see in the language the expression of the sage's sympathy with the duke. Loo had cast him out, but the sage would thus keep Loo in mind of him (ATA), and show his own opinion that the duke was still the only ruler of the State. It is sufficient for the student to be content with the fact as it is recorded.

Parr. 2, 8. The funeral of the marquis took place earlier than it should have done, according to the rule prescribed for such a ceremony. That the duke, though in Tsin, took no action on the occasion, shows that his residence in that State was barely permitted.

The Chuen says:—'Yëw Keih of Ch'ing went to Tsin to offer the condolences of his State, and to accompany the funeral. Wei Heen-taze sent Sze King-pih to question him, saying, "On the death of duke Taou, Tsze-se came with condolences, and Tsze-këaou attended the funeral (See the 1st narrative of the Chuen after IX. xv. 7); what is the reason that you, Sir, have no second commissioner with you?" replied, "The reason why the States acknowledge the supremacy of the ruler of Tsin lies in the rules of propriety, by which are [here] to be understood the service of a great State by a small one, and the cherishing of the small State by the great one. The service appears in obedience to the commands which are given from time to time; the cherishing, in the great State's compassion for the other's wants or inabilities. In consequence of the situation of our poor State between great States, we perform our duties and render our contributions. If we have unhappily not been able [at any time] to present our contribution against unforeseen evils, it was not because we presumed to forget your commands.

'The rule of the ancient kings was, that, on the death of the prince of a State, a simple officer should be sent from other States to express their condolences, and a great officer to attend the funeral. Only on occasions of marriage, friendly alliances, complimentary missions, and offerings, was a minister to be sent. (In occasions of death among the rulers of Tsin, when there was leisure in our poor State, our former rulers have at times assisted, and held the traces of the bier. If there was no leisure [from existing affairs, even an officer and great officer have not been sent as the letter of the rule required. Your great State approved, in its kindness, where our observances exceeded, and did not condemn where they were deficient, entering intelligently into the circumstances of our condition, and accepting what we were able to do, as a compliance with propriety. On the death of king Ling (In the 29th year of duke Sëang), our ruler was in Ts'oo, and our great officer Yin Twan went to the capital. He was but a junior minister of our State, but the king's officers threatened no punishment;—they pitied our not having the means to do otherwise. Now, Sir great officer, you ask why we have not followed the old fashion. The old fashion went sometimes beyond the rule, and sometimes fell short of it. I do not know which old fashion we ought to have followed. If you say that which went beyond the rule, our ruler is too young to have observed it. If you say that which fell short of the rule, then I am here. Do you consider the matter."

'The people of Tsin could not question him any further.'

Par. 4. Kung-yang has 禹 for 观 Chuen says:—'The viscount of Woo required the people of Seu to seize Yen-yu, and the people of Chung-woo to seize Chuh-yung (See the Chuen on XXVII. 1), on which those two Kung-tazes fled to Ts'oo. The viscount of that State made them a large grant of land, and determined where they should remove to, making Ta-sin, the inspector of [the king's] horses, meet them and conduct them to Yang as their residence. Jen the Yëw-director, and Seuh commandant of Shin, the marshal of the Left, walled that city, and annexed to it part of the lands of Shing-foo and Hoo. This was done with the intention of injuring Woo; but Tsze-se remonstrated, saying, "Kwang of Woo has lately got that State, and is showing affection to his people. He regards them as his sons, and shares in all their sufferings;—it must be with the intention of using them. If we were to cultivate good relations with the borders of Woo, and make them submit to our gentleness, we should have reason to fear that State's attacking us; but we go and give territory to its enemies, and thereby increase its anger;—this surely is improper. Woo is connected by a long descent with the House of Chow; but lying apart along the sea, it has not had intercourse with the other Ke States. Now, however, it has begun to be great, and may be compared with one of the States of the kingdom. Kwang also is very accomplished, and will wish to pursue a similar course to the former kings. We do not know whether Heaven will make him the object of the wrath, causing him to clip and ruin the State of Woo, and aggrandize with it some other surname, or whether it will in the end make him the instrument of blessing Woo. The result will not be distant; why should we not meanwhile allow our Spirits to be quiet, and our people to rest in peace, till we see how the scale turns? Why should we ourselves commence a toilsome struggle?" The king would not listen to this advice; and the viscount of Woo, enraged [with the course of Ts'oo], in the 12th month seized the viscount of Chung-woo, and then went on to invade Seu. He raised embankments on the hills so as to lay the capital under water, and on Ke-maou he extinguished the State. Changyu, the viscount of Seu, cut off his hair, and went forth, with his wife, to meet his enemy, who condoled with him and sent him aval. making his most intimate officers follow him; on which he fied to Ts'oo. Seuh, commandant of Shin, was leading a force to relieve Seu, but he did not arrive in time; so he walled E and assigned it to the viscount of Seu for a residence. The viscount of Woo asked Woo Yun, saying. "When you spoke formerly of invading Ts'00, I knew the advisableness of such a measure (See XX. the 2d narr. at the beginning). But I was afraid the king would send myself, and I disliked another man's receiving the merit of my exploits. Now it will be my own; -what do you say to attacking Ts'oo?" Yun replied, "The govt. of Ts'oo is in the hands of many, who are riance among themselves, and not one of ) could bear the burden of calamity. If we three armies to harass it, when one of them sches, all the forces of Ts'oo will turn out. then retire; and when they retire let us ce again. Ts'oo will thus be weary with Ts'oo thus began to be distressed.

marching; and when we have thus repeatedly harassed and worn it out, leading it wrong also in many ways, if we follow up our plan with all our three armies, we are sure to make a great conquest." Hoh-leu followed this counsel, and XXXI. 1 In his thirty-first year, in spring, in the king's first month, the duke was in Kan-how.

2 Kë-sun E-joo, had a meeting with Sëun Leih of Tsin in Teih-leih.

3 In summer, in the fourth month, on Ting-sze, Kuh, earl of Sëeh, died.

4 The marquis of Tsin sent Sëun Leih to condole with the duke in Kan-how.

5 In autumn, there was the burial of duke Hëen of Sëeh.

6 In winter Hih-kwang came a fugitive to Loo with [the city of] Lan.

7 In the twelfth month, on Sin-hae, the first day of the moon, the sun was eclipsed.

Par. 1. See on the 1st par. of last year. Too-she observes here that the record 'indicates the duke's incompetency both in Loo and abroad.' His own subjects would not have him in Loo, and neither Ts'e nor Tsin would afford bim effectual succour.

Par. 2. We have here and in par. 4 an account of negotiations which might have ended in the restoration of the duke to Loo, but for the obstinacy of him and his followers. Duke King of Tsin had been succeeded by his son Woo (4-),—duke Ting,—who was anxious to signalize his accession by such an exercise of his influence. Kung-yang, here and afterwards, las for fr. Teih-leih was a city of Tsin. The Chuen says:—'The marquis of Tsin proposed sending an army to restore the duke, but Fin Heen-trze said to him, "If you summon Ke-sun and he do not come, it will be evident that he is a traitor to his ruler. What do you my to attacking him after [he has refused to come]?" [Accordingly], the people of Tsin summoned Ke-sun to their State, and Hëen-tsze privately sent word to him to be sure to come, saying that he would undertake that he should not suffer anything. When they met as described in the text, Seun Leih said, "My ruler has charged me to say to you, 'Why have you expelled your ruler? Chow has a regular punishment for him who has a ruler and does not erre him.' Do you consider the case." Kesun, who had on a cap of white silk, wore clothes of sackcloth, and was barefoot, prostrated himself, and replied, "I have not found it in my power to serve my ruler, and I will not presume to flee from the punishment which he may order. If he considers that I am chargeable with guilt, let me be confined in Pe to await the result of his investigation; and then let it be with me as he shall determine. If out of regard to my fathers, he do not entirely cut off the family of Ke, but appoint [only] me to die, or if he do not put me to death, or send me into exile, it will be his kindness, which till death even I will not forget. But if I am allowed to follow him, and return to Loo, this is what I desire. Should I dare to have any other thought?"'

Par. 3. Tso-she observes here that we have this record, because the earl of Seeh and the duke had covenanted together; and to illustrate his meaning, Too says that this is the first time that the name of an earl of Sech has appeared in the text, and Tso-she thought it necessary to assign the reason for it. Other canons, however, account for the occurrence of the name here differently.

Par. 4. This is the sequel of par. 2. Chuen says:—'In summer, in the 4th month, Ke-sun followed Che Pih (Seun Leih) to Kanhow, when Tsze-këa-tsze said [to the duke], "Let your lordship return with him. If you cannot bear the shame of [a day], how can you bear that of your whole life?" The duke assented, but all [the rest of his followers] said, "It all lies in a single word. You must [get Tsin to] expel him."

'Seun Leili expressed to the duke the condolences of the marquis of Tsin, and said, "My ruler charged me, in accordance with your lordship's orders, to reprove E-joo. He does not presume to flee from [a sentence of ] death. You can [now] enter Loo." The duke said.

"Through the kindness of your ruler, having regard to the friendship between our predecessors, and extended to me a fugitive, I will return, and cleanse and set in order my ancestral temple to do service to him, but I cannot see that man. I swear by the Ho that I will not see him." Seun Leih covered his ears, and ran away, saying, "My ruler feared that this would be his offence. He dare not take any further knowledge of the troubles of Loo. I will report to him what has occurred." He then retired, and said to Ke-sun, "Your ruler's anger is not yet abated. Do you return for the present, and offer the sacrifices." Tsze-këa-tsze urged the duke to enter among the troops of Loo with a single chariot, assuring him that Ke-sun would in that case return to Loo with him; and he wished to do so, but all the [other] followers put such a constraint upon him that he could not return.'

Kuh-lëang gives a different account of this affair. Acc. to Tso-she's account, there is a difficulty with the 声. If the way was now open for the duke's return to Loo, there was occasion for congratulation rather than condolence. Acc. to Kuh-lëang, Seun Leih was sent to condole with the duke that he could not enter Loo, and to say, 'I have spoken about it in your behalf, but E-joo refused.' The K'ang-he editors seem to admit both accounts, or to think at least that Kuh-lëang gives the truth, which is veiled under the speeches in Tso-she.

Par. 5. [The Chuen here continues the narrative at the end of last year:—'In autumn, a body of men from Woo made a stealthy inroad into Ts'oo, attacked E, and overran the country about Ts'ëen and Luh. Sëuh, commandant of Shin, led a force to relieve Ts'een, on which the troops of Woo retired. Those of Ts'oo did the same, after removing the people of Ts'een to

'A force from Woo [then] laid siege to Heen; and Seuh and K'e, marshals of the Left and the Right, led troops to relieve it; and when they had got to Yu-chang, the Woo-ites retired. In this way Woo began to use the plan of Tszeseu (Woo Yun).']

Par. 6. Kung-yang has F for . There should be a 朱 before 黑, but it was inadvertently omitted by the historiographers, or, which is more likely, has dropped out of the text. Lan was a city of Choo, --- in the south-east of the pres. dis. of Tang ( ), dep. Yen-chow.

The Chuen snys:—'The fugitive was of low rank, but his name is given, importance being attached to the [fact of his surrendering] territory (See on V. 4). The superior man will say, "The care which is to be exercised in the case of the name appears here. [Hill-kwäng] had this territory, and so he has his name [recorded], though it would have been better for him that it had not been so. Revolting with the territory, although he was of low rank, it was necessary to mention the territory, and thence to name the man, so that in the end his doing what was not righteous could not be obliterated; therefore the superior man is anxious that his movements should be in accordance with propriety, and his conduct with righteousness. He does not take a crooked course for gain, nor does ho think the doing of righteousness a distress. Some seek to have their name [famous], and cannot get it; some wish to have their name concealed, and it is displayed [instead];—it is a warning against unrighteousness. Ts'e P'aou was Wei's minister of Crime, a great officer by inheritance, but he did what was unrighteous, and is recorded as 'a ruffian' (See XX. 3). Shoo-kie of Choo (IX.xxi.2), Mow-e of Keu (V.4), and Hih-kwang of Choo, left their States, carrying their lands with them. Their object was simply to seek for their support, not to have their names famous; but though their rank was low, it was necessary to give their names. These two cases serve as a warning against an unbridled temper, and a stigma upon covetousness. As to those who in their own persons attempt difficult enterprises to imperil great men, if their names were distinguished, men who are fond of hazardous undertakings would hurry to follow them. As to those who filch cities and revolt from their rulers, thinking they may, perchance, get great gain, if they were left unnamed, covetous and audacious men would more strongly attempt the same thing. Thence it is that the Chun Ts'ëw mentions Ts'e P'aou simply as ' a ruffian,' and gives the names of those three revolters, as a warning to unrighteousness;—the excellent design of its style is [thus] to point out wickedness and the want of propriety. Hence it is said, 'The style of the Ch'un-Ts'ëw, in speaking of men, is quiet but perspicuous, gentle but discriminating.' Men of high rank can make themselves illustrious; good men are encouraged, and bad men are made afraid. Therefore the superior man highly esteems it."'

Par. 7. This eclipse occurred in the forenoon of Nov. 7th, B.C. 510.

The Chuen says:—'The night [before this eclipse], Chaou Këen-tsze dreamt that there was a boy naked, and singing in a prolonged tone of voice. In the morning, he asked the historiographer Mih to divine about it, saying, "I had this dream, and now the sun is eclipsed; what can the meaning be?" Mih replied, "Six years from this, in this month, Woo will enter Ying. But in the end it will not be successful. The day of its entering Ying will be Kang-shin. The sun and moon are in Wei of [Ta-] shin (See on XVII. 5), but Kang-woo was that in which the change in the sun's appearance appeared. Fire overcomes metal; therefore Woo will not succeed."'

XXXII. 1 In his thirty-second year, in spring, in the king's first month, the duke was in Kan-how. He took K'an.

2 In summer, Woo invaded Yueh.

3 It was autumn, the seventh month.

In winter, Chung-sun Ho-ke joined Han Puh-sin of Tsin, Kaou Chang of Ts'e, Chung Ke of Sung, She-shuh Shin of Wei, Kwoh Ts'an of Ch'ing, and officers of Ts'aou, Keu, Sëeh, K'e, and Little Choo, in walling Ch'ing-chow.

In the twelfth month, on Ke-we, the duke died in Kan-how.

Par. 1. K'an,—see II. xi. 9. Tso repeats on this par. his remark on the first of last year, with the addition that it shows also how the duke could not use his friends,—referring to his repeated neglect of the counsels of Tsze-këa. He says nothing of the duke's capture of K'an. Kung-yang erroneously says it was a city of Choo, but this is inconsistent with what we read of it in the Chuen on XI. i. 4. The questions of how and why the duke took it must be left unanswered.

Par. 2. The Chuen says:—'This was the first instance of a [regular] expedition on the part of Woo against Yueh. The historiographer Mih said, "In less than 40 years Yueh is likely to have possession of Woo! The year-star is now in Yueh's quarter of the heavens, and Woo, invading that State, is sure to experience an evil influence from it."'

Par. 4, Kuh-lëang has 太叔 for 世叔, and after 莒人 he has 朱 人, where Kung-yang also has 朱 婁人.

The Chuen says:—'In autumn, in the 8th month, the king sent Foo Sin and Shih Chang to Tsin, to ask that Ch'ing-chow might be walled. The son of Heaven said, "Heaven sent down calamity on Chow, and made my brothers all have a feeling of insubordination, to the grief of you my uncle. You princes of my own surname, and those of other surnames, have not dwelt in quiet, [because of my troubles], now for ten years, and for five you have had the labour of guarding my territory. There is not a day in which. I, the one man, forget your service. My grief is like that of the husbandman, who is looking for a good year [after one of scarcity], and trembling waits for the [coming] season. If you, my uncle, will extend your great kindness, and repeat the service of [your ancestors], the two Wan, by removing the sorrow of the House of Chow, thereby getting the blessing of Wan and Woo, to establish your position as lord of covenants, and publish abroad your good name, then I, the one man, will have got what I greatly wish. Formerly king Ching assembled the princes, and fortified Ching-chow, that it might be the eastern capital [of the wingdom];—thus honouring the virtue of [king] Win. Now I wish, by the blessing and powerful influence of king Ch'ing, to repair the walls of Ch'ing-chow, that my guards may be relieved of their toil, that the States may be able to rest, that the evils which prey on us like insects may be removed far away;—and this is to be done by the strength of Tsin. I lay it upon you, my uncle, that you may take it into serious consideration, and thus I, the one man, will not excite [any longer] the dissatisfaction of the people, and you will have the glory of the beneficence, which [the Spirits of] my predecessor will reckon to be your merit.

'Fan Hëen-tsze said to Wei Hëen-tsze, "It is better to wall the city than to keep on guarding Chow,—as the son of Heaven has said. If there be any future troubles, Tsin need not take any knowledge of them. By following the king's orders, we shall give relief to the States, and Tsin will be freed from a cause of anxiety;—if we do not earnestly address ourselves to this, in what other thing should we engage?" Wei Hëen-tsze approved, and sent Pih-yin to reply, "We dare not but receive with reverence the orders of the son of Heaven, and will at once send instructions to the various States. How early or how late and in what order [the work is to be done], shall be as you prescribe."

'In winter, in the 11th month, Wei Shoo and Han Puh-sin went to the capital, and assembled the great officers of the [various] States in Teints'euen, where they renewed the [existing] covenant, and gave orders for the walling of Ch'ing-chow. [On this occasion] Wei-tsze took a position with his face to the south (As if he had been a ruler giving audience), which made Pëw He of Wei say, "Wei-tsze is sure to meet with [some] great calamity. To arrogate such a place, and there give orders for our great undertaking, does not belong to his office. The ode (She, III. ii. ode X. 8) says:—

'Revere the anger of Heaven,
And presume not to be mocking and selfcomplacent.
Revere the changing moods of Heaven,
And presume not to be gadding about;'

less should one arrogate a place [that , to carry out a great undertaking." -ch'ow, Sze Me-mow surveyed Ch'ingcalculated the height and thickness I [that had to be built], measured the he moats and ditches, determined the of the ground, estimated the distance rts [from one another], reckoned the ne work and the number of the workprovision for the materials, and wrote smount of provisions, in order to asservices to the different States, with ty of work to be done by their men. is specifications to the officers [of the states], and submitted the whole to nt of Lew. Han Keen-tsze underaperintendence of the work; and thus i] command was executed.'

The Chuen says:—'In the 12th e duke was ill, and gave gifts to fficers all round, which they would e. Tsze-këa-tsze, however, received presented to him,—a piece of jade igers cut upon it, a ring, and a peih; all the others accepted their gifts., the duke died, and Tsze-këa-tsze ie gifts to the treasurer, saying, "[I because] I did not dare to oppose the er." All the others did the same. If the text, that "the duke died in shows how he was not in the proper ich an event.

Keen-tsze asked the historiographer g, "Ke-she expelled his ruler, and submitted to him, and the States his act. His ruler has died out of 10 one incriminates him." Mih reings are produced in twos, in threes 1 pairs. Hence in the heavens there ee Shin; in earth there are the five substances; the body has the left the right, and every one has his mate Kings have their dukes, and princes ministers who are their doubles. oduced the Ke family to be the ne marquis of Loo, as has been the g. Is it not right that the people nit in this case? The rulers of Loo fter another, lost their power, and of the Ke family have, one after igently improved their position. The forgotten their ruler, and, though v] died abroad, who pities him? The [same] altars are not always maintained in a State; rulers and ministers do not always retain their [different] positions; from of old it has been so. Hence the ode (II. iv. ode IX. 8) says,

'High banks become valleys, Deep valleys become heights.'

The surnames of the sovereigns of the three [previous dynasties] are now borne by men among the people,—as you know. Among the diagrams of the Yih there is Ta-chw'ang ( thunder mounted upon that of heaven;—thus thunder mounted upon that of heaven;—thus showing the way of Heaven. Ching Ke-yew was the youngest son of duke Hwan, the beloved son of Wan Kënng. When she first felt that she was pregnant, she consulted the tortoiseshell, and the diviner told her that she would have a son of admirable character and famous, that his name would be Yew, and that he would be a help to the ducal House (Comp. the narrative appended to IV. ii. 5). When the child was born, as the diviner had said, there was the character Yew (友) on his hand, by which he was named. Afterwards, he did great and good service to Loo, received Pe, and was made minister of the highest rank. His descendants Wan-taze and Woo-taze auceessively increased their patrimony, and did nothing contrary to the old services of their family. On the death of duke Wan of Loo, when Tung-mun (the Kung-tsze Suy of VI. xviii. 5, et al.; called also Sëang-chung] killed his proper heir, and raised the son of a concubine to the marquisate, the rulers of Loo from that time lost their power, and the government was in the hands of the Ke family. The deceased was the fourth of them. When the people have ceased to know the ruler as such, how should he possess the State? Hence it appears that rulers of States should be careful of the insignia and names of rank, and should not let them be in the hands of others."'

The last eight years of duke Ch'aou's life were thus spent by him as a fugitive from Loo in Ts'e and Tsin. He was evidently a man of little character or capacity; and the wonder is that Ke-sun E-joo did not take the title of marquis of Loo to himself.

In the [duke's] first year, in spring, in the king's third month, the people of Tsin seized Chung Ke of Sung in the capital.

In summer, in the sixth month, on Kwei-hae, the coffin of duke [Ch'aou] arrived from Kan-how. On Mow-shin the duke came to the [vacant] seat.

In autumn, in the seventh month, on Kwei-sze, we buried our ruler, duke Ch'aou.

In the ninth month, there was a grand sacrifice for rain

5 We set up a temple to duke Yang.

6 In winter, in the tenth month, there fell hoarfrost, which killed the pulse.

TITLE OF THE BOOK.—定公, 'Duke Ting.' As duke Ch'aou's sons had been the instigators of the attack on Ke Ping-tsze which had led to their father's expulsion from the State and his death in exile, it was not to be supposed that one of them would now be called to the marquisate. Ping-taze was not prepared to seize the State for himself; and as some action was now necessary, in consequence of duke Ch'aou's death, he agreed to the appointment of Sung (A), a son of duke Scang, and a younger brother of Chraou, who had been among his followers in Ts'e and Tsin. We are not told who the mother of Sung was, but he must at this time, we may conclude, have been over 40 years of age. His honorary title denotes 'Giving rest to the people, and greatly anxious (安民大 属日定》

Ting's 1st year synchronized with the 11th of king King (故王); the 3d of Ting of Tsin (定); the 39th of King of Ts'e; the 26th of Ling of Wei (靈公); the 10th of Ch'aou of Ts'ae (昭); the 5th of Hëen of Ch'ing (默公); the 1st of T'ung, duke Yin, of Ts'aou (隱公通); the 21st of Hwuy of Ch'in (惠公); the 9th of Taou of K'e (卓); the 8th of King of Sung (景公); the 28th of Gae of Ts'in (京公); the 7th of Ch'aou of Ts'oo (昭); and the 6th of Hoh-leu (盟盧) of Woo.

Par. 1. The three Chuen all make two paragraphs of this, taking the 4 characters 元年 春王 as the 1st, and 三月, 云云, as the other; and the K'ang-he editors follow their example. But 元年春王 do not make sense by themselves; and to suppose that was purposely suppressed by Confucius, to mark his condemnation of all the circumstances of the time, appears to me quite unreasonable. The K'ang-he editors say:—'On the omission of 正月 after 元年, Too Yu observes that it is owing to the fact that duke Ting's accession only took place in the 6th month. Many of the critics have followed him, holding further that the suppression shows the impropriety of Ke-she's exercising the ducal prerogative of giving out the times of new moon;—and this view is altogether in accordance with the facts and reason of the case. Shaou Paou, Chaou Hang, and Yu Kwang, however, think the omission is owing simply to there having been nothing to record under the 1st and 2d months of this year.' I cannot hesitate to accept this latter explanation; unless, indeed, as it may be, I H have dropped out of the text. On the whole of the paragraph, as I have printed it, the Chuen narrates:—'In spring, in the king's first month, on Sin-sze, Wei Shoo of Tsin assembled the great officers of [many of ] the States in Teili-ts'euen, to proceed to the walling of Ching-chow. Wei-tsze took the government of the undertaking, on which Pew He of Wei said, "It is not right in him to take another position than his own, when we are [thus] proceeding to strengthen the [residence of the] sou of Heaven. A violation of right in such a great matter is sure to be followed by great evil. If Tsin do not lose the States, Wei-tsze will probably come to an early death." Wei Heen-tsze then proceeded to entrust the service to Han Këen-tsze and Yuen Show-kwo, while he himzelf hunted in Ta-luh, setting fire to the coverts; and as he was returning, he died in Ning. Fan Heen-tsze refused to his body the coffin of cypress wood, because he had gone to hunt before reporting the execution of his commision.

'Mang E-tsze [now came to] take part in the walling; and on Kang-yin they erected the building-frames. Chung Ke of Sung, however, then declined his share of the work, saying, "Ting, Seeh, and E must serve for ua" The administrator of Seeh said, "Sung is acting contrary to what is proper, cutting off us small States from Chow. Having taken us with it to Ts'oo, we have always followed it. But when duke Wan of Tsin made the covenant of Tsëen-t'oo, it was said, 'All of us covenanting States shall return to our old duties.' Whether we shall follow [that covenant of ] Tscen-tw or follow Sung, it is [for Tsin] to say.' Chung Ke said, "By that covenant even it should be as I say;" and the administrator replied, "The founder of Seeh, He-chung, dwelt in Seeh, and was master of the carriages to [the founder of the] Hea [dynasty]. He removed to Pei, but Chung-hwuy [again] dwelt in Seeh, and was minister of the Left to Tang. If we were to resume our old duties, we should be officers of the king;—what cause is there that we should do service for any of the States?" Chung Ke said, "Each of the three dynasties is a different thing. How can Seeh have any older [duty] than its present? To do the service of Sung 16 its duty." Sze Me-mow said, "The present chief minister of Tsin is newly appointed (Fan Heen-tsze, who had taken the place of Wei Shoo). Do you (To Chung Ke) in the mean time accept the duty. When I return [to Tsin], I will look into the old archives." Chung he replied, "You may forget it, but will the Spinis of the hills and streams forget it?" Sze l'ih was angry, and said to Han Keen-tsze, "Seeh maket its appeal to men, and Sung makes its appeal to Spirits. The offence of Sung is great. Having nothing, moreover, to say for itself, it presses us with [this appeal to] Spirits;—it is imposing on us. Its conduct is an illustration of the saying 'If you open the door to favourites, you will experience contempt from them (See the Show IV. viii. Pt. ii. 9).' We must make an example of Chung Ke. Accordingly, they seized Chung Ke and carried him back [to Tsin], but in the 3d month they brought him again to the capital.

'The walling was finished in 30 days, and the guarda of the different States were then sent home. Kaou Chang of Ts'e arrived late, and did not engage in the work with the other States. Joo Shuh-k'wan of Tsin said, "Neither Chang Hwang of Chow nor Kaou Chang of Ts'e will escape [an evil fate]. Chang Shuh has acted in opposition to Heaven, and Kaou-tsze in opposition to men. That which Heaven is over-throwing cannot be supported; that which all men are engaged in cannot be opposed."

[It is difficult to reconcile the second part of this Chuen with the text. The seizure of Chung Kein the capital was the bringing of him back to it from Tsin, whither he had been carried after his seizure. On Ke-ch'ow of the 11th month of last year, Sze Me-mow made all the arrangements, and Käng-yin was the day after that on which the work commenced; and not a day in the 1st month of this year. Sin-sze, when the meeting was held in Teih-ts'euen, was the 8th day before Ke-ch'ow.]

Parr. 2, 3. The Chuen says:—'In summer, Shuh-sun Ching-tsze (The son of Shuh-sun Shay or Ch'aou-tsze; his name was Puh-kan, 一人 政) went to meet the coffin of the dake in Kan-how. Ke-sun had said to him, "Tsze-këa-tsze repeatedly spake [to the duke] about me, and always correctly expressed my views. I wish to carry on the government along with him. You must [try to] detain him, and allow him to do as he pleases." Tsze-këaisze, however, would not see Shuh-sun, and wept at a different time [from him over the comin]; and when Shuh-sun sought an interview with him, he declined it, saying, "I had not seen you, when I followed our ruler forth, and he died without giving me any orders. I dare not [now] see you." Shuh-sun then sent to say to him, "Kung-yen and Kungwei were the cause why we all were made unable to serve our ruler; if the Kung-tsze Sung (Duke Ting) will preside over the altars, it is what we all desire. As to all who left the State in attendance on the ruler, we will receive your instructions regarding those who may be permitted to enter it [again]. No one was appointed to be the representative of the family of Tsze-këa, but Ke-sun wishes to carry on the government along with you. These all are the wishes of Ke-sun, and he instructed me to inform you of them." The other replied, "As to the appointment of a ruler, there are the ministers, the great officers, and the keeper of the tortoise-shell in the State [to decide about it]; I dare not take any knowledge of it. As to those who followed the ruler, let those who left the State from a feeling of propriety return, and let those who did so as enemies [of Ke-sun | go elsewhere. As to myself, our ruler knew of my leaving the State, but he did not know that I would enter it [again]; I will go to another State."

When the coffin arrived at Hwae-t'uy, the Kung-tsze Sung entered Loo before it, and those who had followed the duke all went back from that place. In the 6th month, on Kwei-hae, the coffin arrived in the capital, and on Mowshin duke [ling] became marquis.'

The accession of Ting thus took place on the 5th day after the arrival of duke Chraou's coffin, as if the latter had died, like most of his predecessors, in his palace in Loo. On the 5th day (Acc. to Too Yu) after the death of the ruler of a State, his body in its coffin was solemnly conveyed to the ancestral temple, and there and then his successor solemnly took his place; and again, on the 1st day of the next year, another solemn declaration of the new rule was made. This, however, was dispensed with in the present case, and the whole of this year was considered as belonging to duke Ting.

Par. 4. The Chuen says:—' Ke-sun was sending workmen to K'an (The place where the dukes of Loo were interred), intending to separate by a ditch the [last] home of the duke [from the other graves]; but Yung Këa-go said to him, "You could not serve him when alive, and now he is dead, you would separate him [from his fathers], to be a monument of yourself. You may bear to do so [now], but the strong probability is that hereafter you will be ashamed of it." On this Ke-sun desisted from that purpose; but he asked Këa-go, saying, "I wish to give him his posthumous title, so that his descendants may know him [by it]." That officer replied, "You could not serve him, when he was alive, and now that he is dead, you still hate him;—you would thereby show the truth about yourself." He [again] desisted from his purpose, and in autumn, in the 7th month, on Kwei-sze, he buried duke Ch'aou on the south of the road to the tombs. When Confucius was minister of Crime, he united this tomb with the others by means of a ditch.'

Par. 6. Yang was the 8d duke of Loo, a son of Pih-k'in, and grand-son of the duke of Chow. He held the marquisate for 6 years, B.C. 1057—1052, as successor to his brother duke K'an. There had of course long ceased to be any temple to him, and why one was now erected does not clearly appear. All the critics agree in holding that it was done by Ke-sun, though made to appear as the act of the State.

The Chuen says:—'When duke Ch'aou went forth, on that account Ke-sun prayed to duke Yang, and [now] in the 9th month, he erected a temple to him.' The meaning of this Chuen, as Too explains it, is that for some reason or other, on duke Ch'aou's leaving the State, Kesun had selected Yang's displaced tablet from among all the others, and prayed to him for his protection. This he supposed had been accorded to him, and he raised the temple as an expression of his gratitude.

A more plausible account of the affair is devised by Wan Hëaou-kung ( ; early in the Yuen dynasty), who connects the succession of Yang, though only a brother, to duke K'an, with the succession of Ting, to the exclusion of the sons of duke Ch'aou.

[The Chuen appends the following brief notice:—'Duke Këen of Kung set aside his sons and younger brothers, and liked to employ strangers.']

Par. 7. The 10th month of Chow was only the 8th of Hëa. Frost so early, and at the same time so bitter, was an unusual thing, and is therefore recorded. We need not suppose, with | of the food of the people. As Kuh-leang says, some critics, that only the pulse was killed by it. The pulse is specified as an important part 日萩, 毕重也.

Second year.

臨

- In the [duke's] second year, it was the spring, the king's II. first month.
  - In summer, in the fifth month, on Jin-shin, the south gate of the palace, and the two side towers caught fire.

In autumn, a body of men from Ts'oo invaded Woo.

In winter, in the tenth month, we made anew the south gate of the palace, and its two side towers.

Par. 1. [The Chuen gives here the sequel of ] the narr, appended to par. 6 of last year:—'In summer, in the 4th month, on Sin-yew, the sons and younger brothers of the House of Kung put duke Këen to death.']

Par. 2. The 雉門 was 公宮之南 the south or first gate belonging to the duke's palace. See the note on the Shoo, V. xxii. 10. The were two towers, one on either side of the gate. They were also called 配 and 象 魏. Maou says, 'The king and the princes of States had towers at their gates. They raised earth so as to form the towers, and then the frame of the gate was set up between them, and they were called "the gate-towers (門墓)." They were also called kreuch (關, and kwan (1), the last name being given to them because the pictures and descriptions of punishments were hung up on them for the people to look at.

Ho Hew on Kung-yang relates some remarks of Tsze-këa K'eu (In), that this gate and its towers were a usurpation on the part of Loo of the distinctions of the royal palace, and hence that the fire was a token of the displeasure of Heaven. But the premiss is without foundation.

Par. 3. The Chuen says:—'Tung revolted from Ts'00, on which the viscount of Woo made the chief of Shoo-kew entice the people of Troo, advising them to proceed against Woo with an army, while they would then invade Tung; ** that they would thus help Woo by making Ts'oo have no fears of it. In autumn, Name Wa of Ts'oo invaded Woo, and encamped with his army at Yu-chang. The people of Woo then appeared with their boats at that place, [as if they were going to attack Tung], and at the same time privately sent a force against Chraou. In the 10th month, Woo attacked the army of Ts'oo in Yu-chang, and defeated it, after which it laid siege to Chaou, reduced the and took the Kung-tsze Fan of 'Is'oo prisoner.'

In the Chuen, at the end of duke Chraou's 30th year, Woo Yun suggests to the viscount of Woo that he should keep on harassing Tava n many ways leading it astray. The above tive gives one of the delusions practised on in accordance with that advice.

ere is a brief narrative here, apparently ingless in itself, but introductory to par. ext year:—'Duke Chwang of Choo was drinking with E Yih-koo, when that officer went out for a private occasion. [As he did so], the porter begged a piece of meat from him, on which he took his stuff from him, and beat him with it.']

新作,-see on V. xx. 1. Par. 4.

是.罕.旋

- In the duke's third year, in spring, in the king's first month, he was going to Tsin; but when he got to the Ho, he returned.
- In the second month, on Sin-maou, Ch'uen, viscount of 2 Choo, died.
- 3 It was summer, the fourth month.

- 4 In autumn, there was the burial of duke Chwang of Choo.
- 5 In winter, Chung-sun Ho-ke and the viscount of Choo made a covenant in Pah.

Par. 1. We do not know why the duke suffered this repulse from Tsin. Këa Kwei thinks it may have been because Tsin considered that he was dilatory in presenting himself at its court after he succeeded to Loo. It may have been so; but there is no historical evidence to go upon in the matter.

Par. 2. Kung and Kuh have 三月 instead of 二月. The Chuen says:—'In the 2d month, on Sin-maou, the viscount of Choo was in one of the gate-towers (See on II. 2), looking down upon the court-yard, which the porter was sprinkling with a pitcher of water. The sight made him angry, but the porter said that E Yih-koo had made his water in the court (See the Chuen after par. 8 of last year). The viscount ordered that officer to be seized, but he could not be found, which put him in a greater rage, so that he threw himself down on a bench, fell upon a vessel of charcoal, was hurned and died. Before he was put into his grave, five chariots and five men were buried [in an adjoining grave]. It was owing to the irascibility of duke Chwang, and his love of cleanliness, that he came to this end.'

Ch'uen had been viscount of Choo for 83 years. He was succeeded by his son Yih (益), known as duke Yin (鷺公).

Par. 4. [The Chuen appends here:—'In autumn, in the 9th month, the people of Seen-yu defeated an army of Tsin at Ping-chung, and captured Kwan Hoo of that State;—through his reliance on his valour.']

Par. 5. Kung-yang has for the Too does not assign the position of Pah. Most of the critics take it as the same as Tan;—see VII. iv. 1. Tso says the object of this covenant was to confirm the friendship of Loo and Choo. The viscount of Choo is of course the son of duke Chwang; and the transaction is commented on as improper on his part, so soon after the death of his father.

We have here a narrative about the rapicity of the chief minister of Ts'00:—'Ch'aou, marquis of Ts'ae, had made two sets of girdleornaments and two robes of fur, with which he went to Ts'oo, where he presented one set and one robe to king Chiaou. The king wore them at an entertainment which he gave to the marquis, who himself wore the others. Tsze-chang (Nang Wa; the minister) wished to get them, but was refused; in consequence of which he detained the marquis in Ts oo for 8 years Duke Ching of Tiang [also] went to Tsico, with two splendid gray horses, which Taze-chang wanted; and when they were not given to him, he detained the marquis also for 3 years. Some officers of T'ang took counsel together, and asked leave to take the place of those who had attended the marquis to Ts'00. This being granted them, they made those others drunk, stole the horses, and presented them to Tsze-chang, who thereupon allowed the marquis to return to T'ang. These men then presented themselves as prisoners to the minister of Crime, saying, "Our ruler, through his foodness for those horses, put his body in straits, and abandoned his country. We beg leave to assist the parties concerned to recover other horses, which shall be equal to them." The marquis said, "It was my fault. Do not you, gentlemen, subject yourselves to disgrace;"-and be rewarded them all.

'When the officers of Ts'ae heard this, they urgently begged their marquis to present the girdle ornament to Tsze-chang; and this was followed by the minister's saying to the officers, when he was at audience, and saw the followers of the marquis of Ts'ae, "The ruler of Ts'ae has been here so long, because you have not been ready [with the necessary gifts]. If they are not all furnished by to-morrow, ye shall die." When the marquis of Ts'ae had got to the Han on his return, he took a piece of jade in his hand, and sank it in the water, saying, "I sweet by this great stream that I will not cro again to go to the south." He went [by and by] to Tsin, with his son Yuen and the sons of his great officers, and presented them as hostages, begging that Ts'oo might be invaded.']

IV. 1 In the duke's fourth year, in spring, in the king's second month, Woo, marquis of Ch'in, died.

In the third month, the duke had a meeting with the viscount of Lëw, the marquis of Tsin, the duke of Sung, the marquises of Ts'ae and Wei, the [heir-] son of Ch'in, the earl of Ch'ing, the baron of Heu, the earl of Ts'aou, the viscounts of Keu, Choo, Tun, Hoo, and T'ang, the earls of Sëeh and K'e, the viscount of little Choo, and Kwoh Hëa of Ts'e, in Shaou-ling, when they made an incursion into Ts'oo.

In summer, in the fourth month, on Kang-shin, the Kung-sun Sang of Ts'ae led a force and extinguished Shin, carrying back with him Këa, the viscount of Shin, whom he then put to death.

In the fifth month, the duke and the above princes made a covenant in Kaou-yëw.

5 Ching, earl of Kie, died during the meeting.

6 In the sixth month, there was the burial of duke Hwuy of Ch'in.

7 Heu removed [its capital] to Yung-shing.

8 In autumn, in the seventh month, the duke arrived from the meeting.

9 K'euen of Lëw died.

- O There was the burial of duke Taou of K'e.
- 1 A body of men from Ts'oo laid siege to [the capital of] Ts'ae.
- 2 Sze Yang of Tsin and K'ung Yu of Wei led a force, and invaded Sëen-yu.

B There was the burial of duke Wan of Lew.

- In winter, in the eleventh month, on Kang-woo, the marquis of Ts'ae and the viscount of Woo fought with an army of Ts'oo in Pih-keu, when the army of Ts'oo was disgracefully defeated. Nang Wa of Ts'oo fled from that State to Ch'ing.
- 5 On Kang-shin, Woo entered Ying.

Shaou-ling,—see V. iv. 3. The ys:—'In the 3d month, duke Wan of embled the States in Shaou-ling, to about invading Ts'oo. Seun Yin of ed a bribe from the marquis of Ts'ae; n he did not get it, he said to Fan e, "The State is now in a perilous 4 and the other States are disaffected it; shall we not find it a difficult enternvade an enemy in such circumstances? are beginning to come down; fever is Chung-shan (Seen-yu) is not submisthrow away our covenant with Ts'oo, e its enmity, will occasion no injury to t to us the loss of Chung-shan. Our will be to refuse [the request of ] the of Ts'ae. Since the affair at Fange on IX. xvi. 7) we have not been able ur will on Ts'00;—we shall only be toil for ourselves." Accordingly, the of the marquis of Ts'ae was refused. of Tain borrowed a [royal] pennon thers from Ching [to look at]; and vas given to them, a man of no note i, next day, at the top of a flag to the [to humiliate Ching]; and in conse-! this Tsiu lost the States.'

t opportunity was thus lost by Tsin of ing more than its former supremacy ie States, but the above Chuen shows ason of its failure. Though the princes sent at the meeting, they were only n the hands of their ministers, who were ated by any spirit of unity, or regard dvantage but their own. An incursion o was but a lame and impotent consuch a gathering under the sanction sentative of the king; and even that 'inis difficult to make out from the Chuen. iwei (呂大圭; towards the end of dynasty) describes the occasion very - By this meeting in Shaou-ling Tsin ve regained its supremacy among the it it lost the opportunity. Ts'ae, Ch'in, ieu, Tun, and Hoo had been the aubervants of Ts'oo, but they all joined in ing, showing that they were distressed by Ts'oo and weary of it, and wanted to transfer their service to Tsin. For 24 years, from the meeting at P'ing-k'ëw (X. xiii. 4), Tsin had not been able to assemble the States; but now, above, it had got the presence of the viscount of Lew, and, below, it had called together the rulers of 17 States;—the forces of duke Hwan of Ta'e had never been on so grand a scale. Of the [grand] expedition of Hwan, however, it is written that he invaded Ts'00, and that he imposed a covenant [on Ts'oo] at Shaou-ling (V. iv. 1,8); while of this expedition of [duke] Ting of Tsin, where he assembled the rulers of 17 States, it is only said, that "An incursion was made into Ts'oo." An incursion is a small affair. Ting was evidently a man with whom nothing could be done. From this time Tsin could have no hope of again presiding over the States,'

Par. 3. Shin,—see on VI. iii. 1. It is necessary to distinguish this Shin from the city of the same name, belonging to Ts'oo, of the 尹or commandants of which we read so often in the Chuen. It was in the pres. dis. of Koo-ch's (国境), Kwang Chow (尹州), Ho-nan. This latter 沈 is sometimes written 夏 (Ts'in). 社 is here pronounced as 生 (Sang).

The Chuen says:—'The people of Shin did not attend the meeting in Shaou-ling, and they of Tsin sent Ts'ae to attack it. In summer, Ts'ae extinguished Shin.' Maou thinks that it was to the meeting in Shaou-ling that Kung-sun Sang carried the viscount of Shin, and that it was Tsin which there put him to death. It may have been so, and the concluding sentence of the Chuen relates what took place after the meeting.

Par. 4. Kung-yang has 浩油 for 泉鼬. Kaou-yëw was in the pres. dis. of Lin-ying (臨氣), dep. K'ae-fung. It belonged to Ch'ing.

The Chuen says, "In prospect of the meeting, Tsze-hang King-tsze of Wei had said to duke Ling of that State, "It may be difficult to get an agreement of opinion at the meeting, and there will be troublesome speeches about which no one can decide. You should make the litanist To (See Ana. VI. xiv.) go with you." The duke approved of the advice, and instructed Tsze-yu (The designation of To) to go with him; but he declined to do so, saying, "When I do all my four limbs are capable of to discharge the duties of my old office, I am still afraid of not being equal to them, and of giving the penal officer the trouble to record my failings. If I must now discharge two offices, I shall commit some great offence. Moreover, the priest is an ordinary inferior officer, attached to the altars of the land and grain. While those are not moved, he does not go out of the limits of the State;—this is the rule of his office. When the ruler is about to march with an army, the priest sprinkles the alter of the land, anoints the drums, and follows the ruler, carrying the Spirittablets with him. On such an occasion he passes beyond the limits of the State; but when the business is one of civility or friendship, the ruler goes at the head of 2,500 men, or a minister goes at the head of 500; but I take no part in the affair." The duke, however, replied, "You must go."

'When they got to Kaou-yew, it was in contemplation to give Ts'ae precedence over Wei. and the marquis sent the priest To to speak privately to Chang Hwang, saying, "I have heard something on the road, and do not know whether it be true or not. Should I have heard that Ts ae is going to have precedence [at this meeting] over Wei, is it true?" Hwang replied, 'Ts'ae Shuh was the elder brother of Kang Shuh (See the Shoo V. Bkk. ix. and xvii.); is it not proper that [Tsrae] should take precedence of Wei?" Tszeyu said, "Looking at the matter from [the example of ] the former kings, we find that what they exalted was virtue. When king Woo had subdued Shang, king Chring completed the establishment of the new dynasty, and chose and appointed [the princes of] intelligent virtue, to act as bulwarks and screens to Chow. Hence it was that the duke of Chow gave his aid to the royal House for the adjustment of all the kingdom, he being most dear and closely related to Chow. To the duke of Loo (Pih-kin, the duke of Chow's son) there were given—a grand chariot, a grand flag with dragons on it, the heang-stone of the sovereigns of Hea, and the [great bow], Fan-joh of Fung-foo. [The Heads of ] six claus of the people of Yin,—the Teaou, the Seu, the Sënou, the Soh, the Chang-choh, and the We-choh, were ordered to lead the chiefs of their kindred, to collect their branches, the remoter as well as the near, to conduct the multitude of their connexions, and to repair with them to Chow, to receive the instructions and laws of the duke of Chow. They were then charged to perform duty in Loo, that thus the brilliant virtue of the duke of Chow might be made illustrious. Lands [also] were apportioned [to the duke of Loo] on an enlarged scale, with priests, superintendents of the ancestral temple, diviners, historiographers, all the appendages of State, the tablets of historical records, the various officers and the ordinary instruments of their offices. The people of Shang-yen were also attached; and a charge was given to Pih-k'in, and the old capital of Shaouhaou was assigned as the centre of his State.

'To K'ang Shuh (The first marquis of there were given a grand carriage, four f of various coloured silks, of red, of plai and ornamented with feathers,—and [the Ta-leu, with seven clans of the people of the T'aou, the She, the Po, the E, the Fan, and the Chung-k'wei. The boundaries territory extended from Woo-foo southwi the north of Poo-t'een. He received a por the territory of Yëw-yen, that he might dis his duty to the king, and a portion of the belonging to the eastern capital of Sea that he might be able the better to att the king's journeys to the east. Tan Ke ered to him the land, and Thou Shuh the The charge was given to him, as contain the 'Announcement to K'ang (Shoo, V and the old capital of Yin was assigned centre of his State. If not so, there were many elder brothers families of Wan, Woo. Ching, and Kan they obtained no such grants; -shown it was not years which [these kings] Kwan and Isne instigated the fremain scendant of ] Shang poisonously to disp the royal House, on which the king put Shuh to death, and banished Trae Shuh, him seven chariots and an attendance of ty men. His son Ts'ae Chung adopted a ent style of conduct, and pursued a v course, on which the duke of Chow rais to be a minister of his own, introduced the king, and obtained a charge appointi to the rule of Ts'ae. In that charge it · Be not, like your father, disobedient royal orders (Shoo, V. xxvii. 3)';—how the Ts'ae be made to take precedence of Wei own brothers of king Woo were eight duke of Chow was prime minister; Tan was minister of Crime; Tan Ke was min Works; and five were not in any office any preference given to years? [The fi of ] Ts aou was a son of Wan (By a difft. from the duke of Chow or king Woo).and [ lord of Tsin was a son of Woo; yet Ts's [only] an earldom in the teen domain;—s that no preference was given to years. A you are going to give a preference to 1 contrary to the practice of the former When duke Wan of Tsin presided o covenant of Tsëen-t'oo (V. xviii. 8; but text there Ts'ae has precedence of We tries to explain this in harmony with the here), duke Chring of Wei was not pres [only] his full brother E-shuh, who not wic ing took precedence of Ts'ae. The writing of the covenant was—'The king speaks to this effect:— Ch'ung of Tsin, Shin of Loo, Woo of Wei, Këahwoo of Ts'ae, Tsëeh of Ch'ing, P'wan of Ts'e, Wang-shin of Sung, K'e of Keu——.' It is deposited in the royal library, and can there be examined and seen. You wish to observe the old ways of Wān and Woo;—how is it then that you do not make virtue your regulating principle as they did?"

'Chang Hwang was pleased with this repreentation, and laid it before the viscount of Lew, who took counsel upon it with Fan Heen-tsze, the result being that precedence was given to Wei at the covenant.

'In returning from Shaou-ling, Tsze-t'ae-shuh died before he arrived at Ch'ing. Chaou Këen-tze wept for him very sorrowfully, and said, "At the meeting of Hwang-foo (X. xxv. 2), he gave me these nine maxims:—Do not begin disorder; do not trust in riches; do not rely on favour; do not oppose a common agreement; do not carry yourself proudly in ceremonies; do not be proud of your power; do not transfer your anger; take no counsels that are contrary to virtue; do nothing against righteousness."

Par. 5, Kung-yang has instead of 元. Duke Ching was succeeded by his son Kieth (乞), known as duke Yin (旨心), but he was murdered very soon by a younger brother Kwo(日), who established himself in his place, and is known as duke He (巨心).

Par. 7. Yung-shing was in the pres. dis. of Reen-le ( ), dep. King-chow, Hoo-pih. This is now the 4th time within the Ch'un Tsew period that Heu changed its capital. The Chuen says nothing about this removal; but Wang Paou observes that the changes were all ordered by Ts'oo, though the text represents them as if they originated with Heu itself. This removal would be forced on Heu for having obeyed the summons of Tsin, and attended the meeting in Shaou-ling.

Par. 9. This was duke Wan (文) of Lew, who first appears in the Chuen on IX. xxii. 4, by his designation of Pih-fun (伯登), and which records also his elevation to be viscount. His name was K'euen (2). The king sent notices of his death to the princes with whom he had been present at the meeting of Shaouing, according to royal practice. Otherwise, there was no interchange of such communications between the princes of the States and the nobles of Chow. It was also in accordance with byal practice that such notices should only ontain the name of the deceased noble, without pentioning his title. Kung and Kuh give each different reason for the notification of this eath, but both are incorrect. A Chuen, under he 26th year of Ch'aou, however, gives Teih I the name of the viscount of Lew (劉教). he individual probably had the two names, eih and K'euen.

Par. II. This attack on Ts'ae was, no doubt, Tso says, in consequence of Ts'ae's extinction Shin. It was the duty of Tsin to come now to the help of Ts'ae; and as it did not do so, we shall presently find Ts'ae leagued with Woo.

Par. 12. For 室 Kung-yang has 酒. In the Chuen on par. 2, we have Senn Yin urging on Fan Hëen-tsze the necessity of action against Sëen-yu. Chaou P'āng-fei says, 'For Tsin to invade Ts'oo would have been a gain to the other States, but an injury to its own six ministers; hence when duke Ting went out against Ts'oo, the ministers, jealous of his acquiring the merit of success, refused the request of Ts'ae, humiliated Ch'ing, and frustra!ed the whole enterprise. The invasion of Sëen-yu was an injury to the marquis of Tsin, but a gain to his ministers; hence Seun-she, Sze-she, and Chaoushe, one after another, attacked it, to show their merit and ability.'

Notice of the death of the viscount Par. 13. of Lew having been sent to the States, because he had covenanted with their princes, it was in order for them to send representatives to his funeral. Many of the critics fail to see this, and find it difficult to account for this par. Chaou K'wang says the thing was contrary to propriety (非 前景); Kaou K'ang, that only Loo sent a representative, and therefore the thing is recorded. The remarks of Le Leen ( 康; end of the Yuen dyn) are worthy of notice:—'The three Kung ( ) of the son of Heaven (See Shoo, V. xx. 5) were so denominated. Any one who filled that office, and had territory as a noble of the royal domain, was also called Kung, the title following the name of the territory, as in the instances of "The duke of Chae ( )," "the duke of Chow (周公,州公)," &c. The king's other ministers and great officers, who had received investiture as nobles of the royal domain, were all called "viscounts ( )," as in the instances of "the viscount of Wan (清明子)," "the viscount of Lew (劉子)," "the viscount of Shen (單子)," &c. But towards the end of the Chow dynasty, all the nobles of the domain received the title of Kung after their death, as in the instances of "duke Suh of Ching (顶文 肅公)," "duke Ping of Shen (單平公)," &c. The Ch'un Ts'ëw, in this par., takes the opportunity of the burial of "duke Wan of Lëw," to call attention to the usurpation. In the mention of the individual, when alive, as "the viscount of Lew," when dead as "K'euen of Lew," and, at his burial, as "duke Wan of Lëw," we have the careful and severe pencil of the sage.'

Par. 14. For 柏學Kung-yang has 伯喜 and Kuh-löang 伯學. The place belonged to Ts'oo, and was in the present dis. of Ma-shing (麻城), dep. Hwang-chow (黄州), Hoopih.

The Chuen says:—' Woo Yun acted as messenger [to other States] for Woo, [constantly] laying plans against Ts'oo. When Këoh Yuen was put to death by Ts'oo (X. xxvii. 8), the different branches of the Pih family left that State, and P'e, the grandson of Pih Chow-lae, was made grand-administrator of Woo, that he [also] might plan against Ts'oo. From the date of king Ch'aou's accession, there was no year in which Ts'oo was not [somehow] attacked by Woo. The marquis of Ts'ae took advantage of these circumstances, and placed his son K'ëen, and the sons of his great officers, in Woo as hostages [of his fidelity in an alliance against Ts'00]. 'This winter, the marquis of Ts'ae, the viscount of Woo, and the marquis of T'ang, invaded Teoo. They left their boats in a bend of the Hwae; and advancing from Yu-chang, they lined one side of the Han, the army of Ts'oo being on the other. Seuh, marshal of the Left, said to Tszechang (The chief minister of Ts'00), 'Do you keep on this side of the Han, going up or down, according as they move. I will [meantime] lead all the troops outside the wall of defence, and destroy their ships, and then, on my return, I will shut up the passes of Ta-suy, Chih-yuen, and Ming-gae. If you then cross the Han, while I fall on them from behind, we shall give them a great defeat." Having agreed on this plan, he marched [to execute his part of it]; but Hih, [commandant] of Woo-shing, said to Tsze-chang, "Woo uses [shields] of wood, while ours are of leather. We must not remain here long; your best plan is to fight soon." The historiographer Hwang [also] said to him, "The people of Ts'oo inate you, and love the marshal. If he destroys the boats of Woo on the Hwae, and then enters the country, after stopping up the passes in the wall. he alone will have [the merit of] conquering Woo. You must fight soon, or you will not escape [your doom]." Taze-chang then crossed the Han, and drew up his troops. Three battles were fought between Sëaou-pëeh and Ta-pëeh (See on the Shoo, III. i. Pt. ii. 8), and then Tsze-chang, knowing that he could not conquer, wished to flee [to another State]. The historiographer said to him, "You sought the office, when it seemed safe; if now, in difficulty, you flee from it, what State will you enter? You must die in this struggle, and will thus make a complete atonement for your former offences.

'In the 11th month, on Kang-woo, the two armies were drawn up at Pih-keu, when the younger brother of Hoh-leu, [who afterwards called himself] king Foo-k'ae, early in the morning made a request to Hoh-leu, saying, "In consequence of the want of benevolence in Wa of Ts'oo, his officers have no mind to die [in this struggle]. If I first attack him, his soldiers are sure to flee, and if you then follow up my success with the whole army, we are sure to conquer." Hoh-leu refused him permission, but he then said, "I will now give an illustration of the saying that a minister does what is right without waiting for orders. I will die to-day, but [the capital of ] Ts'oo can be entered [in consequence." He then with his own men, 5,000 in number, commenced the battle by an attack on the soldiers of Taze-chang, who took to flight. The army of Ts'00 was thrown into confusion, and that of Woo inflicted a great defeat upon it. Tsze-chang fled to Ching, and the historiographer Hwang died in his war chariot.'

The 蔡侯以吳子 of the text indicates that the marquis of Ts'ae was the mover of the expedition against Ts'oo, of which this battle was the first great event. As Maou says, 經特書蔡侯以之,以主在蔡也. The ruler of Woo appears in this par. for the first time with his title of 子 of viscount, and many of the critics foolishly see in this a sign of the sage's approval. The circumstance seems to be immaterial. Though Ts'ae instigated the expedition, it was of course carried on and carried out by the power of Woo.

Par. 15. Kung and Kuh have instead of Fig. Ying, 10 miles to the north of the preadep. city of King-chow ( ), Hoo-pih, had been the capital of Ts'oo since the time of king Woo (B.C. 740—689).

Continuing the preceding narrative, the Chus says :-- 'Woo pursued the army of Ts'oo to the Taing-fah, and was about to fall upon it there, but king Foo-k'ae said, "A wild beast in the toils will still fight; how much more will men! If they know that there is no escape for them, and so fight to the death, they will be sure to defeat us. If we let the first of them cross, and know that they can escape, the rest will be anxious to follow them, and have no mind b fight. Let us then attack them when the half of them have crossed." This plan was taken, and so the army of Ts'00 was defeated again-[At one place] the men of Ts'oo were taking their meal when those of Woo came upon them, and they fled. The latter ate the food and resumed the pursuit, defeating them again as Yung-she; and with five battles, they reached Ying.

'On Ke-maou, the viscount of Ts'oo took his youngest sister, Me Pe-go, left the city, and crossed the Ts'eu. Koo, the director of Remosstrances, went with him in the same boat, the king, [to keep back] the army of Woo, making men lead elephants with torches [tied to their tails], so as to rush upon it. On Käng-shin, Woo entered Ying, and [the viscount and others] occupied the palaces according to their rank. Tsze-shaou (A son of the viscount) took the palace of the chief minister, where Foo-k'ne was going to attack him, which frightened him so that he left it, and the other then entered it.

'Seuh, marshal of the Left, returned, after getting as far as Seih, and defeated the troops of Woo at Yung-she, but was wounded himself. Aforetime he had been in the service of Hobleu, and therefore felt that it would be a disgrace to him to be taken. He said to his officers, "Which of you can carry off my head?" Wee Kow-pe said, "Will it do if one so mean in rank as I do it?" "Yes," said the marshal; "it has been my error that I [did not know your worth before]. In each of these three battles I have been wounded, and am of no more use." Kowpe then spread his skirt on the ground, cut of the marshal's head, and wrapped it up, after which he hid the body, and made his escape with the head.

'The viscount of Ts'oo, after crossing the Ts'eu, crossed [also] the Künng, and took fage in the marsh of Yun. While he was eping, some robbers attacked him, and [one them] aimed a blow at him with a spear, nich Wang-sun Yëw-yu intercepted by intersing his back, and receiving the weapon in shoulder. The king on this fied to Yun, lowed by Chung Keen carrying his young ter on his back. Yëw-yu [also] slowly rered, and followed him. Hwae, the younger ther of Sin, commandant of Yun, wanted to I the king, saying, "King Ping put my her to death. May I not now put his son to ath?" Sin said, "When a ruler punishes a bject, who dare count him an enemy for it? he ruler's order is [the will of ] Heaven. If a an dies by the will of Heaven, who can be garded as the enemy? The ode (She, III. iii. de VI. 3) says,

'He neither devours the mild,
Nor violently rejects the strong.
He does not insult the poor nor the widow;
Nor does he fear the violent or powerful.'

it is only the truly virtuous man who can do hus. To avoid the powerful and insult the reak is contrary to valour. To take advantage if another's straits is contrary to benevolence. To cause the destruction of your ancestral tembers and the discontinuance of its sacrifices is outrary to filial piety. To take action which will have no good name is contrary to wisdom. I you are determined to violate all these principles, I will kill you."

'[After this], Tow Sin, and another younger rother Ch'aou, fled with the king to Suy, whiher they were followed by the men of Woo, the said to the people of Suy, "The States bout the Han, possessed by descendants of the House of ] Chow, have been all destroyed y Ts'oo. Heaven has now moved our hearts o inflict punishment on Ts'00, and your ruler is oncealing its [ruler]. What is the offence of he House of Chow? If your ruler will try to recompense the House of Chow, and extend his avour to us, so that we may accomplish the purpose which Heaven has put into our hearts, will be the act of his kindness, and the lands Han-yang shall be his." The viscount of foo was on the north of [one of] the palaces the marquis of Suy, and the men of Woo we on the south of it. Tsze-k'e (A brother of ing (h'aou), who was like the king, [told the tter] to make his escape, and as if he himself ere the king, proposed to the people of Suy to liver him up, for that so the king would They consulted the tortoise-shell about and receiving an unfavourable reply, they insed the request of Woo, saying, "Suy, pugh small and isolated, and situated near to Ts'oo, has been preserved by that State. For generations there have been the engagements of covenants between us, which to this day we have not violated. If in the time of its calamity we should abandon it, wherewith should we serve your ruler? The troubles of your ministers would not arise from one man only. you can consolidate under Woo all the territory of Ts'oo, we shall not presume not to obey your orders." On this the men of Woo withdrew. Loo Kin before this had been an officer in the family of Taze-k'e, and [now] appealed to the people of Suy not to give up [the fugitives]. The king requested that Kin might be introduced to him, but he declined the honour, saying, "I do not dare to make your strait a source of profit." The king made a cut over [the region of ] Tsze-k'e's heart, and [with the blood] made a covenant with the people of Suy.

'At an earlier period, Woo Yun had been on terms of friendship with Shin Paou-seu; and when he fled from Ts'oo, he said to him "I shall repay Ts'oo for this." Paou-seu replied, "Do your utmost. You can repay [your wrong], and I can raise up Ts'oo [again]." When king Ch'aou was in Suy, Shin Paou-seu went to Ts'in to beg the help of an army, and said, "Woo is a great pig and a long snake, bent on eating up the superior States, one after another. Its tyranny has commenced with Ts'oo. My ruler having failed to maintain his altars, is now a fugitive in the wilds, and has sent me to tell you of his distress, and to say for him, 'That barbarous State of the east is insatiable. If it become your neighbour, it will be a constant cause of trouble to your borders. While Woo has not settled its conquest, let your lordship [come and] take a portion of it. If Ts'oo indeed perish, the land will be yours; if by your powerful help and comfort [I can preserve it], it will be to serve your lordship with it for generations." The earl of Ts'in sent a refusal [for the present] to him, saying, "I have heard your orders. Go in the meantime to your longing. I will take counsel and inform you of the result." Paou-seu replied, "My ruler is a fugitive in the wilds, and has nowhere to lie down. How dare I go to a place of ease?" He stood leaning against the wall of the courtyard, and cried. Day or night his voice was not silent; a spoonful of water did not enter his mouth;-for seven days. [At the end of that time], duke Gae of Ts'in sang to him the Woo-e (She, I. xi. ode VIII. 7), on which he bowed his head nine times to the ground, and remained kneeling on the earth. Soon after an army of Ts'in took the field.'

Fifth year.

- In the [duke's] fifth year, in spring, in the king's third month, on Sin-hae, the first day of the moon, the sun was eclipsed.
  - 2 In summer, we sent grain to Ts'ae.
  - 3 Yu-yueh entered Woo.
  - 4 Ke-sun E-joo died.
  - 5 In autumn, in the seventh month, on Jin-tsze, Shuh-sun Puh-kan died.
  - 6 In winter, Sze Yang of Tsin led a force, and laid siege to [the chief town of] Sëen-yu.

Par. 1. This eclipse took place, at noon, on aby 10th, B.C. 504. Kung yang has 正月 stead of 三月, which is an error.

[The Chuen introduces here the death of [the ng's] son Chaou who maintained so long a ruggle for the throne:—'This spring, an officer the king killed [the king's] son Chaou in 'too.]

Par. 2. It is the general name for glumaDus grain, now generally applied (See Wilms' Phonetic dict. in voc.) to millet and maize;
t the meaning need not be restricted here.
O-she says that Loo did this to succour Ts'ae its distress, pitying its want of supplies.
Ing and Kuh supply the coording to the dogy of other passages, the text can only be aking of Loo. Other States may have done same thing, though no notice is taken of their action. We can understand how Ts'ae should have been in distress from want of provisions, over-run, as it had been, in the previous year by Ts'oo, and taking a prominent part, as it had done, in the operations of Woo against that State.

Par. 3. Yu-yueh is Yueh; but it is difficult to account for the initial Yu. Too makes it simply an initial sound ( ). Löw Chang tells us that the people of the State themselves called it Yu-yueh, and that the States of Chow called it Yueh; which account would agree with the use of the former style in the text here, Yueh, we may suppose having sent a notification to Loo of its movement. Other explanations have been offered on which we need not dwell. We must understand here as the name of the State. Yueh entered the boundaries, not the capital of Woo, taking advantage, as Tsoshe says, of the viscount of Woo's being in Ts'oo with all his forces.

Par. 4. The Chuen says:—'In the 6th month, Ke P'ing-tsze went to Tung-yay; and on his return, before he arrived at the capital, on Ping-shin he died in Fang. Yang Hoo [the Yang Ho of the Ana., XVIII.i.; he was the principal officer of the Ke family) was going to put his body into the coffin, having [still] on the [precious stone] Yu-fan (which he had worn when the duke was absent from the State]. Chung-lëang Hwae (Another minister of the Ke family), however, would not give it for that purpose, saying, "He had ceased to tread on the [ruler's] steps, and another stone should be used." Yang Hoo wished to expel Hwae, and told Kung-shan Puh-nëw (See on Ana., XVII. v.) the circumstance, but that officer said, "He was acting in the interest of the ruler. Why should you be angry with him?"

'After the burial, Hwan-tsze went to Tungyay. When he arrived at Pe, Tsze-seeh (The above Kung-shan Puh-new), who was in charge of that city, met him, with complimentary offerings because of his journey, in the suburbs. Hwan-tsze received him with respect. Chungleang Hwae, however, to whom he also presented offerings, showed him no respect, in consequence of which he was angry, and said to Yang Hoo,

"You can send him away."'

The form of this notice of the death of P'ingtaze is very troublesome to the critics, and they think that the death of a man who had expelled his ruler, and held the State against him, should not have appeared without some sign of condemnation. Some of them say that it exhibits strikingly the weakness of duke Ting!

The Hwan-taze in the Chuen was the son of Ping-taze, and had succeeded him. His name was Sze (斯).

Par. 5. Shuh-sun Puh-kan was mentioned in the Chuen on I. 2. He was succeeded by his son Shuh-sun Chow-k'ëw ( ) ( ), better known as Shuh-sun Woo-shuh ( ). Both he and Hwan-tsze were young and feeble, and the power of the State fell into the hands of Yang Hoo.

[We have here three narratives in the Chuen. The 1st continues the narrative of the invasion of Ts'00 by Woo with which the last year concludes.—'Shin Paou-seu arrived [in Ts'00] with the army of Ts'in, Tsze-p'00 and Tsze-hoo of that State having command of 500 chariots for its relief. Tsze-p'00, being unacquainted as yet with the ways of Woo, made the troops of Ts'00 engage a body of the Woo-ites, and then joined them himself from Tseih, and a great defeat was thus inflicted on king Foo-k'ae at E. The men of Woo, however, captured Wei Yih at Pih-keu, but his son led the fugitives, and joined Tsze-se, who defeated an army of Woo at Keun-ts'ëang.

'In autumn, in the 7th month, Tsze-k'e and Tsze-p'oo extinguished T'ang. In the 9th month, Foo-k'ae returned to Woo, and set himself up for king; but, being defeated in a battle with the king, he fled to Ts'oo, where he became the founder of the T'ang-k'e family.

'The army of Woo defeated that of Ts'oo at Yung-she, but the army of Ts'in again defeated Woo, whose army occupied Keun. Tsze-k'e proposed to burn that city, but Tsze-se said, "The bones of our fathers and elder bothers are lying exposed there. We cannot collect them, and surely they ought not to be burned." Tsze-k'e replied, "The State is [in danger of] perishing. If the dead have any knowledge, they will enjoy the old sacrifices. Why should they be afraid of being burned?" They did burn the city, and fought another battle, in which Woo was defeated. It was defeated again severely in a battle in the valley of Kung-es, after which the viscount of Woo returned to his own State. He had as a prisoner Yin Yu-p'e, who asked leave to go before him to Woo, but made his escape on the way, and returned to Ts'oo.

'How-tsang, a younger brother of Choo-leng, commandant of Sheh, had followed their mother, [when she was carried a prisoner] to Woo, and [now] he returned without waiting for her. The commandant of Sheh would never look straight at him.'

2d, regarding the course of Yang Hoo, tyrannizing over the Ke family.—'On Yih-hae, Yang
Hoo imprisoned Ke Hwan-tsze and Kung-foo Wăn-pih (A cousin of Hwan-tsze), and drove out Chung-lëang Hwae. In winter, in the 10th month on Ting-hae, he killed Kung-ho Mësou.
On Ke-ch'ow, he imposed a covenant on Hwantsze, inside the Tseih gate. On Käng-yin, there were great imprecations, and he drove out Kung-foo Ch'uh and Ts'in Ch'uen, both of whom fled to Ts'e.'

8d, a continuation of the affairs of Trina. The viscount of Tsioo [re-] entered Ying. Before this, when Tow Sin had heard that the Woo-ites were quarrelling about the palaces [of Tsioo], he said, "I have heard that where there is no spirit of concession there is no harmony, and that, where there is no harmony, a distant enterprize cannot be carried out. The people of Woo thus quarrelling in Tsioo, there is sure to be disorder among themselves, which will compel their return to their own State; how is it possible for them to settle Ts'on?"

'When the king was fleeing to Suy, he wished to get across the Ching-kiew. [Just then]. Me, commandant of Lan, was conveying his children across it, and refused to give the boat to the king, in consequence of which, when tranquillity came again, the king wanted to put him to death. Tsze-se, however, said, to him, "It was by thinking of old wrongs that Taze-chang came to ruin; why should your majesty imitate him?" The king said, "Good!" and he made Me resume his office, intending thereby to keep in mind his own former offences. [At the same time], be rewarded Tow Sin, the Wang-suns Yew-yu and Yu, Chung Këen, Tow Ch'aou, Shin Paou-sëu, the Wang-sun Kea, Sung Muh, and Tow Hwat. Taze-se said to him, "Please pass Hwae by;" but he replied, "He displayed great virtue in overcoming his [own] small resentment, thus acting rightly."

'Shin Paou-seu said, "I acted for the ruler, and not for myself. Since you are now [re-] established what have I to seek? Moreover I blamed Tsze-k'e (See after X. xiv. 5), and shall I now do as he did?" Accordingly he declined any reward.

'The king was going to give his youngest sister in marriage [to some one], but she refused, saying, "A young lady shows what she is by keeping far from all men; but Chung Këen has carried me on his back." She was given to him,

ingly, to wife, and he was made director |

He did not know, and Taxe-ee said, you were not able for the work, you have declined it. After walling a city, if you do not know the height, thickness, and length of the walls, what do you know?" Yewyu replied, "I did refuse the commission on the ground of my incompetency, but you sent me to do it. Every man has what he can do, and what he cannot do. When the king met with robbers in [the march of] Yun, I received the spear in my person. The mark is still here." With this he bared his person, and showed him his back saying, "This is what I could do. What you did at P'e-seeh I could not do." ]

Par. 6. Tso-she says this expedition was undertaken to avenge the affair in which Kwan

Hoo was taken (See after III. 4.).

VI. 1 In the [duke's] sixth year, in spring, in the king's month, on Kwei-hae, Yëw Suh of Ch'ing, at the of a force, extinguished Heu, and carried Sze, bar Heu, back with him to Ch'ing.

2 In the second month, the duke made an incursion Ching.

3 The duke arrived from the incursion into Ching.
4 In summer. Ke-sun Sze and Chung-sun Ho-ke went

4 In summer, Ke-sun Sze and Chung-sun Ho-ke went to 5 In autumn, the people of Tsin seized Yoh K'e-le, the senger of Sung.

In winter, we walled Chung-shing.

7 Ke-sun Sze and Chung-sun Ke led a force, and laid to Yun.

Par. 1. Tso-she says that Ching now extinguished Heu through taking advantage of the defeats which Ts'oo had sustained from Woo. Ching had pursued Heu with implacable hatred (See I. xi. 3), and it might seem that it had now obtained the gratification of its desires, yet we find the State of Heu still existing in the lat year of duke Gae. Here and elsewhere Kungyang has to for ...

Par. 2. The Chuen says:—'In the 2s the duke made an incursion into Ch took K'wang, to punish, in behalf of I action of Ching in attacking Seu-below, the 2d narr. after par. 4). On he did not ask liberty to pass through I on their return Yang Woo made Ke as enter by the south gate [of its capit pass out by the east, halting [afterwarmarsh of Tun. The marquis of Wei raged, and was sending Me Tsze-höa t them. Kung-shuh Wan-tsze [at this time] was old, but he had himself wheeled by men to the marquis, and said to him, "To condemn others and to imitate them is contrary to propriety. During the troubles of duke Ch'aou, your lordship was going to take the Shoo tripod of [duke] Wan, [the tortoise-shell of duke] Ching, which gave such clear responses, and the mirroredgirdle of [duke] Ting, and give the choice of any one of them to whoever would restore him. Your own son and the sons of us your ministers you were ready to give as hostages, if any of the States would take pity on him. This is what we have heard; and does it not seem improper that for a small occasion of anger you should now cover over your former kindly feeling and action? Of all the sons of T'ae-sze (K'ing Wan's queen) the duke of Chow and Kiang Shuh were the most friendly; and will it not be acting under a delusion if, to imitate [the conduct of ] a small man, you throw away [that good relation between Wei and Loo]? Heaven means to multiply the offences of Yang Hoo, in order to destroy him. Suppose that your lordship wait for the present for that issue," The marquis on this desisted from his purpose.'

The rulers of Loo had not in person conducted any military expedition since the 18th year of duke Seuen, a period of 80 years. The power of the State had been in the hands of the three great clans. These were now very much reduced, and we find duke Ting himself taking the field. Yet he was merely a puppet in the hands of the ministers of those clans, who made use of him to further their own ambitious designs against their chiefs.

Par. 4. The Chuen says:—'In summer, Ke Hwan-tsze went to Tsin, to present the spoils of Ching. Yang Hoo forced Mang E-taze to 80 [at the same time] with offerings in return for those which the marchioness [of Tsin] had sent [to Loo]. The people of Tain entertained them both together. Mang-sun, stand-<sup>Ing</sup> outside the apartment, said to Fan Hëen-tsze, "If Yang Hoo cannot remain in Loo, and rests his shoulder against Tsin, by the former rulers Jou must make him marshal of the army of the centre!" Hëen-tsze replied, "If our ruler have that office [vacant], he will employ the proper man [to fill it]. What should I know about it?" [Afterwards] he said to Keen-tsze, "The people of Loo are distressed by Yang Hoo. Mang-sun knows that an occasion will arise, when he thinks Hoo will be obliged to flee the State. He therefore forces himself to make this request for him, to obtain his entrance [into our State]."'

The Chuen gives here two brief narratives:— 1st, about Woo and Ts'oo. 'In the 4th Jonth, Chung-luy, the eldest son of [the viscount of ] Woo, defeated the fleet of Ts'oo, and captured [the two commanders], Chin, viscount of P'wan, and the viscount of Seaou-wei, along with 7 great officers. Ts'00 was greatly alarmed, and afraid it would be ruined. [About the same time], Tsze-k'e was defeated with an army on the land at Fan-yang. The chief minister Tsze-se, however, was glad, and said, "Now it can be done;" and upon this he removed the capital from Ying to Joh, and changed the regulations of the government, in order [the better] to settle the State.'

2d, about troubles in Chow, and the share of Ching in them. 'Tan P'ëen of Chow had led on the adherents of king [King's] son Chaou, and endeavoured by the assistance of Ching to raise an insurrection in Chow. Upon this Ching had attacked Fung, Hwah, Seu-mei, Hoo-shoo, Hoo-jin, and Këueh-wae. In the 6th month, Yen Muh of Tsin went to guard [the territory of ] Chow, and walled Seu-mei.']

Par. 5. The Chuen says:—'In autumn, in the 8th month, Yoh K'e of Sung said to duke King, "Of all the States only we do service to Tsin. If an envoy do not now go there, Tsin will be offended." Having told his steward Ch'in Yin [what he said], that officer observed, "He is sure to send you." After a few days the duke said, "I am pleased with what you said; you must go [to Tsin]." Chin Yin, [on hearing this], said, "Get your successor appointed [a minister] before you set out, and our House will not go to ruin. The ruler also will know that we are proceeding with a knowledge of the dangers it involves." You K'e accordingly introduced [his son] Hwan [to the duke], and took his departure. Chaou Këen-taze met him, and entertained him at a drinking-feast in Mëen-shang, being presented by Yoh K'e with 60 shields of willow. Ch'in Yin said, "Formerly we lodged with Fan-she, but now you are going to lodge with Chaou-she, and are presenting him with gifts besides. You should not have given those willow shields;—you are purchasing misfortune with them. But though you die in Tsin, your descendants will meet with prosperity in Sung."

'Fan Heen-tsze said to the marquis of Tsin,
"He crossed the borders of his State, charged with the orders of his ruler; but before discharging his commission, he has accepted a private invitation to drink, thus acting discrespectfully both to his own ruler and to you. He should not be left unpunished." Accordingly Yoh K'e was seized.

Par. 6. Chung-shing,—see VIII. ix. 18. Loo was not at this time on good terms either with Ching or Tsie, and we may suppose that the walls of Chung-shing were now repaired as a precautionary measure against hostilities.

Par. 7. The omission of plant before must be regarded as an error of the text. The marquis of Ts'e had taken Yun in Ch'aou's 25th year, and given it to that prince. The people left it in Ch'aou's 30th year; and the probability is that, when they re-occupied it, they had endeavoured to do so under the protection of Ts'e. The siege in the text would be to recall them to their allegiance to Loo.

[We have here two brief narratives:—

1st, on the progress of Yang Hoo's encroachments in Loo. 'Yang Hoo imposed another covenant on the duke and the 8 Hwan clans at the altar of Chow, and one upon the people at the altar of Poh; the imprecations being spoken in the street of Woo-foo."

2d, on affairs in Chow. 'In winter, in the 12th month, the king by Heaven's grace took up his residence in Koo-yëw, that he might escape from the insurrection of Tan P'ëen (See the 2d narr. after par. 4).']

Par. 7. The object of Ts'e in now invading Loo was, we may suppose, to force it to revolt from Tsin, as Ching and Wei had done. Loo tried to meet the invaders, when, according to the Chuen, 'Yang Hoo acted as charioteer to Ke Hwan-tsze, and Kung-leen Ch'oo-foo to Mang E-taze. [Hoo] was about to attack at night the army of Ts'e, which got intelligence of the project, assumed the appearance of being unprepared, and lay in ambush to await the onset. Ch'oo-foo said, "Hoo, you have not calculated the danger; you shall die." Chen E said to him, "Hoo, you are plunging the two ministers into danger. I will kill you, without waiting for the officers [of justice]." Hoo became afraid, and withdraw, so that no defeat was sustained.'

This is the second instance of the Par. 8. repetition of a sacrifice for rain. The other was in the 25th year of duke Ch'aon.

Par. 9. [The Chuen goes on here with the account of things in Chow:—'In winter in the 11th month, on Mow-woo, the viscounts of Shen and Lew met the king in the house of King-she (commandant of Koo-yëw). Teeila Ta'in of Tain escorted him, and on Ke-sze he entered the royal city. He lodged [first] in the house of Chang, Head of a ducal clan, and afterwards repaired to announce his arrival in the temple of king Chwang.]

Part. 1, 2. This incursion would be made to retaliate the invasion of Loo by Kwoh Hëa in the previous autumn. The Chuen says:—'The duke made an incursion into Ts'e, and attacked the gate of Yang-chow. The soldiers all sat in ranks on the ground, and talked of the bow of Yen Kaou, how it was 180 cattles in weight. taking it also and handing it round for all to look at. [In the meantime], the men of Yangchow came out, and Yen Kaou seized a weak bow from another man; but Taze-ta'oo of Taeihk'ëw attacked him with a sword, [or spear], and he and another man both fell down; but Yen then shot Tsze-ts'oo in the jaw, and killed him. Yen Seih shot a man in the eyebrow, and retired saying, "I have no valour. I meant to hit his eye." When the army withdrew, Jen Mang preceded it, pretending to be wounded in his foot. His elder brother Hwuy, [when he saw the troops return without Mang], cried out, "Mang must be bringing up the rear!"'

The Chuen introduces here two narratives: —1st, about affairs in Chow. 'In the 2d month, on Ke-ch'ow, the viscount of Shen attacked Kuhshing, and the viscount of Lew attacked E-leih. On Sin-maou, the former attacked Keen-shing, and the latter Yu. The object of these open-tions was to effect the settlement of the royal House.

2d, about the affairs of Tsin and Suss. 'Chaou Yang said to the marquis of Tsin, "U all the States it is only Sung which [heartily] serves Tsin. We should be glad to meet a mersenger from it, still apprehensive lest he would not come. But now by seizing and holding its messenger, we are repelling the States from "." It was [then] designed to send Yoh K'e back to Sung, but Sze Yang said, "We have detained him three years; and if we send him back without any ground for doing so, Sung is sure to revolt from us." Heen-tsze then said privately to Tsze-leang (Yoh K'e), "Our ruler was afraid of not finding an opportunity to serve the rules of Sung, and therefore detained you. Do you get Hwan [your son] to come and take your place for the present." Tsze-leang told this to Chin Yin, o said, "Sung will revolt from Tsin. It would y be throwing Hwan away. You had better it here." [In the end], Yoh K'e was return[to Sung], and died in T'ae-hang, on which Yang said, "Sung is sure to revolt. We better detain his body as a means of seeking ce with it." The body was accordingly sined in Chow."

arr. 3, 4. Dissatisfied with the little sucof his expedition in the 1st month, the z now made, or was compelled by Yang ) to make, another, which was as fruitless. : Chuen says:—'The duke made an incurinto Ts'e, and attacked the outer suburbs in-k'ew. The inhabitants set fire to their p war chariots; but some of the men put the flames with horse-rugs soaked in water, they then broke down [the wall of the subs]. The inhabitants came out, and [the rest the army hurried forwards. Yang Hoo, preding that he did not see Jen Mang, cried "If Mang were here, he would be sure to defeated!" Mang pursued the enemy, but king round, and seeing no others following n, he pretended [to be hit], and threw himf down, when Hoo said, "All behave like itors."

Chen Yueh had a son born at this time, and swaiting the result of these expeditions to the him a name. As some prisoners were ten in the affair at Yang-chow (In the 1st 19th), he gave the child the name of Yang-nw.

Par. 5. Wang K'ih-k'wan thus runs over history of the two last earls of Ts'aou:—
Then duke Shing ( ) had occupied the fldom 5 years, he was murdered by his younger other Tung ( ), who took his place. He sin—duke Yin—after 4 years was murdered his younger brother, Loo, who took his place.

O was succeeded by his son Yang ( ).'

Par. 6. Tso repeats this par. with the addition Kaou Chang as commanding the troops of 'e, along with Kwoh Hëa. This attack was, course, in retaliation for the two incursions o Ts'e.

Parr. 7, 8. Wa was in Wei,—in the pres. dis. Hwah ( ), dep. Wei-hwuy, Ho-nan. The by of Tsin had come to the relief of Loo, but troops of Ts'e had withdrawn before its ival. The duke, however, felt it his duty to on to meet its leaders; but as he had not his capital for that purpose, the 8th par. ply says that he came 'from Wa,' and not m the meeting.' The Chuen says:—'Sze g, Chaou Yang, and Seun Yin, [came to] eve us, and the duke went to meet the army 'sin at Wa. Fan Hëen-taze (Sze Yang) had unb carried with him (As his present of xluction), and Chaou Keen-taze and Chungg Wan-tsze (Seun Yin) had each of them a From this time Loo valued the lamb a present of introduction].'

ur. 10. Kung-yang has 趙 軟 instead of was going to impose a covenant on the juis of Wei at Chuen-tsih; and Chaou 1-tsze said, "Which of you, my officers, venture to make the covenant with the marquis of Wei?" Sheh To and Ching Ho undertook to do it, and the people of Wei asked them to hold the bull's ear, but Ching Ho said, 'Wei is [only] like our Wän or Yucu. How can [its lord] be regarded as the prince of a State?" When the marquis was about to put his fingers into the [vessel of] blood, Sheh T'o pushed his hand in up to the wrist. The marquis was enraged, and Wang-sun Këa hurried forward, and said, "Covenants should serve to illustrate the rules of propriety. Even one like our ruler of Wei did not presume not to do service to [Ta'in as being] observant of those rules, and was going to receive this covenant!" The marquis wished to revolt from Tsin, but had a difficulty with the great officers. Wangsun Këa made him halt in the suburbs; and when the great officers asked the reason, the marquis told them the insults of Tsin, and added, "I have disgraced the altars. You must consult the tortoise-shell, and appoint another in my place. I will agree to your selection." The great officers said, "It is the misfortune of Wei, and not any fault of yours." "There is something worse," said the duke. "They told me that I must send my son and the sons of my great officers as hostages [to Tsin]." The officers replied, "If it will be of any benefit, let the prince go, and our sons will follow him carrying halters and ropes on their backs." It was then arranged that the hostages should go; but Wang-sun Këa said, "If the State of Wei has had any misfortunes, the mechanics and merchants have always shared in them. Let [the sons of] all classes go." The marquis reported this to the great officers, who were willing to send all, and a day was fixed for their setting out. The marquis [in the meantime] gave audience to the people, and made Këa ask them, saying, "If Wei revolt from Tsin, and Tsin 5 times attack us, how would you bear the distress?" They all replied, "Though it should 5 times attack us, we should still be able to "Then," said Këa, "we had better revolt from it at once. We can give our hostages when we are brought to distress. It will not then be too late." Accordingly Wei revolted from Tsin, and refused, though Tsin requested it, to make another covenant.

'In autumn, Sze Yang of Tsin joined duke Hwan of Ch'ing ( ) in an incursion into Ch'ing, when they laid siege to Ch'ung-laou, in retaliation for Ch'ing's [attack of ] E-keuel (See the 2d narr. after VI. 4). They then went on to an incursion into Wei.'

Par. 13. Tso says this incursion was made on account of Tsin. That State now called in the help of Loo to wreak its anger on Wei.

Par. 14. is explained as if it were the part of the river Puh, in the pres. Puh Chow, dep Ts'aouchow, Shan-tung. It was in Wei. The object of the covenant between Ching and Wei was, no doubt, to encourage each other in their revolt from Tsin.

Par. 15. To understand this par., the reader must refer to the long note on VI. ii. 6. The tablets of the dukes Min and He were then made to change places, contrary to the natural order, and this would affect the order in which the tablets of the subsequent dukes had been arranged. This error was now corrected; the tablet of Min was restored to its proper place, and the others placed where they ought always to have been. This is the view of Tso-she, Kung-yang, and Kuh-lëang, who make the former dukes to be He and Min. Maou, however, argues from XII. iii. 8, that the shrinehouse of He continued at that time to follow that of Hwan; but we cannot be certain that the fire which is there mentioned followed what may be called 'its natural course.' Hoo Gankwoh, following some scholar of Shuh, called Fung Shan (蜀人馮山), prefers to understand 先公 of duke Ch'sou, whose tablet, he supposes, had till this time been kept out of the ancestral temple by the influence of the Ke family. But, as the K'ang-he editors observe, if this view, otherwise not unreasonable, were the correct one, the analogy of the Classic would make us expect the name R in the text, rather than the indefinite 先 公.

The Chuen says:—'Ke Woo, Kung-ts'oo Keih, and Kung-shan Puh-nëw could not get their way with Ke-she. Shuh-sun Cheh did not find favour with Shuh-sun-she, and Shuh-chung Che could not get his way in the State. These five men, in consequence, joined Yang Hoo, who wished to take off [the Heads of] the three Hwan clans, and to give to Ke Woo the place of Ke-she, and to Shuh-sun Cheh that of Shuh-sun-she, while he himself took the place of Mang-she. In winter, in the 10th month, they offered sacrifice to the former dukes in their natural order, and prayed [for their sanction to their scheme]; and on Sin-maou, they offered the te sacrifice in the temple of duke He.'

According to this narrative, the re-arrangement of the sacrificial order proceeded from Yang Hoo; and as it was made in contemplation of a cosp, he probably designed to intimate that his object was to put civil matters, as well as religious, 'in a natural order.' The te sacrifice in He's temple, where all the tablets were brought together, would be to console He's Spirit, for the previous degradation of his own tablet.'

Par. 16. The Chuen says:—'On Jin-shin, [Yang Hoo] was going to give an entertainment to Ke-she in the orchard of Proo, with the intention of killing him there, and gave notice to the war-chariots of the capital to come to him on Kwei-sze. Kung-lëen Ch'oo-foo, commandant of Ch'ing, told Mäng-sun of this, and asked why Ke-she (Yang Hoo must have done it in his name) had given such an order. Mäng-sun said he had not heard of it. "Then," observed Ch'oo-foo, "they are going to raise an insurrection, which will be sure to extend to you. Let us be prepared for it beforehand;" and accordingly he arranged with Mäng-sun to be ready to act on Jin-shin.

'[That day], Yang Hoo rode [to the orchard] before the others, and Lin Ts'oo drove Hwantsze, with a body of foresters armed with spears and shields on each side of the chariot, while Yang Yueh brought up the rear. As they drew near to the place, Hwan-taze, in doubt, said to Lin Ts'oo, "Your forefathers were all faithful servants of the Ke family;—is it in this way that you are following their example?" Ts'oo replied, "Your order comes too late. The government is in the hands of Yang Hoo, and the State is submissive to him. To op: ose him is to invite death; and my death would be of no advantage to you." Hwan-taze said, "It is not too late. Can you go with me to Mang-she's?" "I do not dare to grudge dying," was the reply, "but I am afraid I shall not be able to bring you off." "Go," said Hwan-taze.

'Mang-she had selected 300 of his grooms, who were all strong men, and had set them to build a house outside his gate for Kung-k'e. Lin Ts'oo made his horses furious, and when he got to the street, galloped them along [to Mang-she's house]. Yang Yueh sent an arrow after him which missed, and the builders shut the gate, through which some one shot Yang Yueh, and killed him.

'Yang Hoo [now] brought by force the duke and Woo-shuh (Shuh-sun-she) with him to attack Mäng-she; but Kung-leen Ch'oo-foo, at the head of the men of Chring, entered the city by the upper east gate, and fought with the adherents of Yang inside the south gate. This battle was unsuccessful, but in another, in Keih-hëa, the Yang-ites were defeated. Yang Hoo then threw off his armour, went to the duke's palace, and took from it the precious symbol of jade, and the great bow. With these he came forth and halted in the street of Woofoo, where he went to sleep, and afterwards had a meal prepared. His followers said, "The pursuers will be upon us;" but he replied, "When the people hear that I am gone forth, they will all be rejoicing over [Ke-sun's escape from] the summons to death, and will have no leisure to pursue me." His followers, however, said, "Ha! get the horses quickly yoked. Kunglëen Yang (Ch·oo-foo) will be here!" Kung-leen Yang did ask leave to pursue the fugitives, but Mang-sun refused it. Yang also wished to kill Hwan-tsze, but Mang-sun was afraid, and sent Hwan-tsze to his own house.

'Tsze-yen (Ke Woo) drank and replaced the cups, all round, before the shrines in the temple of the Ke family, and then went forth. Yang Hoo entered the pass of Hwan-yang, and held it in revolt.'

From this narrative it appears that by the 'robber' in the text we are to understand Yang Hoo. It was not proper, according to Too, that the name or family name of him, who was merely the minister of a clan in the State, should appear in the text. The precious yal and the great bow have, since Lew Hin of the Han dynasty, been understood to be 'the hwang-stone of the sovereigns of Hea, and the great bow Fan-joh of Fung-foo,' mentioned in the long narrative on IV. 4, as having been given by king Ching to the first duke of Loo. The loss of them in such a way was very insulting to Loo, and might be considered ominous of its destruction.

[The Chuen appends here:—'In Ching, See Chuen (known as , a son of Tszehèa) succeeded Tsze-trae-shuh as chief minister of that State.']

IX. It was [the duke's] ninth year, the spring, the king's first month.

In summer, in the fourth month, on Mow-shin, Chae, earl of Ch'ing, died.

We got [again] the precious [symbol of] jade and the great bow.

In the sixth month, there was the burial of duke Hëen of 4 Ch'ing.

In autumn, the marquises of Ts'e and Wei halted at Woo 5 she.

The earl of Ts'in died. 6

In winter, there was the burial of duke Gae of Tsin.

Par. 1. [We have here two narratives in the | some insubordinate proceedings. It must be so Chuen:—1st, relating to affairs in Sung, a sequel to that after the 2d par. of last year. 'This spring, the duke of Sung wished to send Yoh Ta-sin to make a covenant with Tsin, and to receive the corpse of Yoh K'e, but he declined the mission on the pretence that he was unwell, and it was entrusted to Heang Ch'aou. [In consequence of this], Tsze-ming (Yoh K'e's son, Hwan), ordered the master of the Right (Ta-sin, who is here also called T'ung-mun, App | 14, as a sort of surname from his place of residence) away [when he called upon him], saying, "Why is it that you strike your bells, when I am still wearing deep mourning for my father?" The master replied, "Your mourning could not be affected by that;" and afterwards he remarked to some one, "He could beget a child while wearing his deep mourning; why should I not strike my bells?" Tsze-ming heard of this, and was angry, so that he said to the duke, "The master of the Right will prove injurious to the clans descended from duke Tae. His refusal to go to Tsin must have come from a design to for he had no sickness." On this they drove the master out of the State.'

2d, about the new chief minister of Ching, 1 sequel to the concluding notice of last year: 'Sze Chuen of Ch'ing put to death Tang Seih, and proceeded to employ the penal laws inscribed by him on tablets of bamboo. The superior man will say that in this matter Tsze-jen (Chuen) did not act in a good and generous way. If a man has what will be of advantage to the State, any perversity of his may be overlooked. The three stanzas of the Tsing-neu (She, I. iii., Ode XVII.) had their place assigned them [in the She] because of the "Red-coloured reed" [in the 2d]. The Kan maou (f. iv. ode VII.) with its "What will thou tell him?" had its place from the generous loyalty [which it indicates]. Therefore, when we make use of a man's methods, we do not cast himself away. The ode (I. ii. ode V.) says,

> This umbrageous sweet pear tree! Clip it not nor hew it down;— Under it the Chief of Shaou lodged.

rriter, thinking of the man, loved even his how much more should we compassionate an of whose methods we are making use! jen took no means to encourage ability.']

Chung-ne said, "Shall not hily of Chaou always be troubled with dination?"

6. Woo-she was a city of Tsin,—in the the pres. dis. of Han-tan (世界), dep. ping, Chih-le. The marquises of Ts'e i were now engaged in an invasion of d the text might have been 英俊節

Too supposes that they shrank from publicly announcing in plain terms their commencement of hostilities against a State which had so long been lord of covenants, and therefore sent the modified notification in the text.

The Chuen says:-- 'This autumn, the marquis of Tare attacked [the city] E-e of Tsin. Pe Woo-ts'un's father was about to marry him [at that time] to a lady, but he declined the match, asking that she might be given to his younger brother. "If I do not die," said he, "in this expedition, when I return, I shall take a wife from the House of Kaou or from that of Kwoh." He mounted the wall [of E-e] before any other, but in seeking to get out at the gate, he was killed under the caves. Tung-kwoh Shoo then took it on him to ascend before the rest, and was followed by Le Me, who said to him, "Do you stand aside to the left, and I will do the same to the right. When the others have done scaling, we can then go down [and open the gates]." On this Shoo took the left, and Me was down before him. [After the city was carried], Shoo was resting by Wang Mang, who said to him, "I was the first to get up," on which Shoo fastened his buff-coat and said, "He placed me a little ago in a false position, and you are now doing the same." Mang smiled and said, "I followed you as closely as the outside horse follows the inside."

'Tsin had a thousand chariots in Chung-mow, and as the marquis of Wei wished to go to Wooshe, he consulted the tortoise-shell about passing that place. The shell was [only] burnt [and gave no indication], on which he said, "It will do. The chariots of Wei can cope with half of them, and I will cope with the other half. We shall be a match for them." Accordingly, he passed by Chung-mow, and when the men of that place wanted to attack him, Choo-sze Poo of Wei, who was a refugee there, said, "Though Wei is but small, its ruler is there. You will not conquer him. The army of Ts'e is arrogant through having reduced the city. Its commander also is of mean rank. If you meet it, you are sure to defeat it. Your best plan is to pursue Ts'e." In accordance with this advice, they attacked the army of Ts'e, and defeated it.

'The marquis of Ts'e gave to Wei [the three cities of] Choh, Wei, and Hang. He was going to reward Le Me, but that officer declined any reward, saying, "There was one who mounted the wall before me, with a white complexion, fine teeth, and wearing a fox's fur.' The marquis sent to see Tung-kwoh Shoo, and then said, to him, "It was you. I will give the reward to you." Shoo, however, said, "He [and I] were like guests [at the same feast];"—declining the reward, which was then given to Le Me.

When the army of Ts'e was in E-e, the marquis said to the inhabitants, "He who finds I'e Woo-ts'un shall be made chief of 5 houses and exempted from all services." In this way he recovered Woo-ts'un's budy, which was encoffined with 8 suits of clothes from the marquis. A chariot of rhinoceros' hide went before the coffin, and a high umbrella, and in this fashion it was sent home before the army. While the trackers knelt, the marquis wept by the coffin before the troops, and with his own hand pushed the bier on three turns of the wheels.'

X. 1 In the [duke's] tenth year, in spring, in the king's third month, we made peace with Ts'e.

2 In summer, the duke had a meeting with the marquis of Ts'e at Këah-kuh.

3 The duke came from Këah-kuh.

4 Chaou Yang of Tsin led a force, and laid siege to [the capital of] Wei.

5 An officer came from Ts'e and restored [to us] Yun, Hwan, and the lands of Kwei-yin.

6 Shuh-sun Chow-k'ëw and Chung-sun Ho-ke led a force, and laid siege to How.

7 In autumn, Shuh-sun Chow-k'ëw and Chung-sun Ho-ke led a force, and laid siege to How.

8 Yoh Ta-sin of Sung fled from that State to Ts'aou.

9 The Kung-tsze Te of Sung fled from that State to Chin.

In winter, the marquises of Ts'e and Wei, and Yëw Suh of Ch'ing, had a meeting in Gan-poo.

11 Shuh-sun Chow-k'ëw went to Ts'e.

Shin, a younger brother of the duke of Sung, with Chung T'o and Shih K'ow, fled from that State to Ch'in.

Par. 1. For 8 years now there had been hostilities between Loo and Ts'e, which were happily terminated by this peace. The influence of Confucius was now telt in the councils of Loo, and many of the critics ascribe the peace, with probability, to that. In the omission of before, Le Lëen sees an intimation that the peace was desired by the whole State; but when some other critics would press the to by Ts'e at the earnest instance of Loo, he denurs to such a view as inconsistent with the calm dignity of the sage.

Par. 2. For Kung-yang has . The situation of Këa-kuh is not positively determined, and it has been assigned to three different places. The Kang-he editors incline to place it in the dis. of Lae-woo ( ), dep. Tae-gan. The object of the meeting was, no doubt, to confirm the peace which had been agreed upon.

The Chuen says:—'In summer, the duke had a meeting with the marquis of Ts'e at Chubk'e, i. e., Këah-kuh, when K'ung K'ëw attended him as director [of the ceremonies]. Le Me had said to the marquis, "K'ung K'ëw is ac-painted with ceremonies, but has no courage. fyou employ some of the natives of Lae to ome with weapons and carry off the marquis Loo, you will get from him whatever you The marquis of Tate had arranged xordingly, but K'ung K'ëw withdrew with e duke, saying, "Let the soldiers smite those ntruders]. You and the marquis of Ts'e are et on terms of friendship, and for those capres from the distant barbarous east to throw e meeting into confusion with their weapons not the way to get the States to receive his mmands. Those distant people have nothing do with our great land; those wild tribes ust not be permitted to create disorder among r flowery States; captives in war should not eak in upon a covenant; weapons of war ould not come near a friendly meeting. fore the Spirits, such a thing is inauspicious; point of virtue, it is contrary to what is ght; as between man and man, it is a failure propriety:—the ruler [of Ts'e] must not act us." When the marquis heard this, he inantly ordered the Lae-ites away. 'When they were about to covenant together, so people of Ts'e added to the words of the evenant these sentences, "Be it to Loo accordig to [the curses of] this covenant, if, when he army of Ts'e crosses its own borders, it do ot follow us with 300 chariots of war." On his K'ung K'ëw made Tsze Woo-seuen reply with a bow, "And so be it also to Ts'e, if without restoring to us the lands of Wan-shang you expect us to obey your orders!"

The marquis of Ts'e wanted to give an entertainment to the duke, but K'ung K'ëw said to Lëang-k'ëw Keu, "Are you not acquainted with former transactions between Ts'e and Loo? The business is finished, and now to have an entertainment besides would only be troubling the officers. Our cups of ceremony, moreover, 00 not cross our gates, and our admirable instruments of music are not fit for the wild country. An entertainment at which things were not complete would be a throwing away of the [proper] ceremonies. If things were not chaff and be like employing chaff and one [instead of the good grain]. Such employment would be disgraceful to our rulers; and to throw away the proper ceremonies would be to ming a bad report [upon our meeting];—why bould you not consider the matter? An enterannent answers the purpose of displaying virue; if that be not displayed, it is better to have o entertainment."

'Accordingly the purpose of an entertainment u not carried into effect.'

The substance of the above narrative is given Y Kuh-lëang, with the embellishment of a mer whom Ts'e sent to dance before the tent the marquis of Loo; but the Krang-he editors re reject both the Chuen, as derogatory to mfucius, and licentious additions of romanits. They have the authority for doing so of 100 He, and other Sung scholars; but the obmons are mainly based on the inconsistency the narrative with what they think Ta'e was ely to do in the circumstances, and what they d sure Confucius would have done. Surely nething like what Tso-she tells us did take we at Këah-kuh. We may believe that he s given us what was the current tradition at the meeting soon after it was held: Keang

Ping-chang says, 'Tso-she was well acquainted with the history of Confucius in Loo;—he had heard and seen the facts. What other testimony can be needed to support his, as if he were speaking of things strange and beyond the sphere of his own knowledge?"

Par. 4. This siege was to be revenged on Wei for the taking of E-e in the autumn of last year. The Chuen says:—"Last year when the marquis of Wei had attacked Woo, the commandant of Han-tan, in Han-she (I. q. 1), he raised a wall to the north-west of that city, and guarded it, in consequence of which the inhabitants dispersed in the night. [In consequence of this], Woo now attacked the west gate of the capital of Wei, having 70 footmen with him, and killed a man right in the gate, saying, "Allow me to repay you for the affair of Hanshe." Sheh To said to him, "You are indeed a man of courage; but if I go, they will not dare to open the gate." Accordingly he also attacked the gate next morning, having with him 70 footmen, whom he arranged on the right and left, where they all stood like trees till noon, when they retired, the gate not having been opened.

'When the expedition returned, the people of Tsin discussed the cause of Wei's revolt, and it was said that it was occasioned by Slich To and Ching Ho. On this they laid hold on Sheh T'o, and asked Wei, [in consideration of their doing so], to come to a good understanding with them; and when Wei refused to do so, they proceeded to put Sheh To to death, while Ch'ing Ho fled to Yen.

The superior man will say that this was an illustration of the saying that they who cast propriety away shall have a different fate from other men. The ode (She, I. iv. ode VIII. 3) says,

"If a man observes not the rules of propriety, Why does he not quickly die?"

Sheh T'o did die quickly.'

Par. 5. Kung and Kuh have instead of 鄆, and Kuh has 之 between 陰 and 田. This is the sequel to par. 2, the result of the meeting at Këalı-kuh. Yun, Hwan, and Kweiyin constituted what were called the lands of Wan-shang. Yun has often occurred. Hwan, —see on II. iii, 6. We might translate a by 'the lands on the north of mount Kwei;' -which mount lies between the dis. of Sin-t'ae (新春), dep. T'ae-gan, and that of Szeshwuy (M), dep. Yen-chow. Ts'e, we were told under par. 1 of the 7th year, restored Yun to Loo; but when Yang Hoo fled to Ts'e, he had again delivered it to that State in the 8th year, as well as the other places mentioned.

Parr. 6, 7. How was the principal city of the Shuh-sun family, and was at this time held in revolt by one of its retainers. In par. 7, Kungyang has 霍 instead of 同; but his text must be wrong. Perhaps the two paragraphs follow, ing one another, identical save in one characters. made him think the mistake; but the thing is clear enough in Tso-she's narrative,

The Chuen says, "Before this, when Shuhsun Ching-taze wanted to appoint Woo-shuh his successor, Kung-joh Mëaou remonstrated strongly, and urged him not to do so. Ching-taze, however, made the appointment, and died [soon after]. Kung-nan then employed a ruffian to shoot Mëaou, but he did not succeed in killing him. Kung-nan was superintendent of [Shuhsun's] horses, and sent Kung-joh to be commandant of How.

When Woo-shuh was established in his position, he employed the superintendent of his horses in How, called How Fan, to kill Kungjoh. He was not able to do so; but one of his grooms said [to Shuh-sun], "I will pass by the court of audience, carrying a sword. Kung-joh will be sure to ask whose it is. I will tell him it is yours, and as he will [want to] look at it, I will pretend to be stupid, and hand it to him with the point turned towards him;—and in this way I can kill him." [Shuh-sun] told the man to do as he proposed; and when Kung-joh was saying, "Do you want to deal with me as the king of Woo was dealt with (See IX. xxix. 4)?" the other killed him. [On this], How Fan took possession of How, and held it in revolt. Wooshuh and E-taze (Ho-ke) laid siege to it, but could not reduce it.

'In autumn they laid siege to it again, having with them an army of Ts'e, but were again unable to take it. Shuh-sun said to Sze Chih, superintendent of the mechanics of How, "The place is not only an occasion of grief to our own family, but also a source of distress to the whole State; what is to be done?" Chrih replied, "My duty is in four words of the last stanza of the Yang-shwuy (She, I. x. ode III. 3. The words are, "I have heard your orders."), on which Shuh-sun bowed to him with his head to the ground. [Soon after], Chill said to How Fan, "It will not do for you to dwell here between Ts'e and Loo, and not be serving either of them. Why not ask to be allowed to do service to Ts'e, and so present yourself to the people with its authority? If you do not do so, they will revolt from you."

' 'How Fan took his advice, and [ere long] a messenger arrived from Ts'e, for whom Sze Ch'ih and some others spread the report through the city, that How Fan was going to exchange How for a city in Ts'e, and that Ts'e would remove to it the people of How. The people were indignant and frightened, on which Ch'ih said to How Fan, "The people talk differently from what they did. You had better make an exchange with Ts'e. That is better than dying here. It will be another How, and you will be at ease there; why must you stick to this city? The people of Ts'e wish to have this, and so be near to [the capital of] Lou; they will be sure to give you as much territory again. And why not place a large number of buff-coats near your gate, to be prepared for any unexpected movement?" "Very well," said How Fan, and accordingly he placed a number of buffcoats [at his gate]. He [also] asked leave of Ts'e to make an exchange with it of How, and [it was arranged that] a commissioner should come from that State to view the city. Just before his arrival, Chih sent men to run about everywhere, crying out, "The army of Ta'e is come." The people were in great alarm, got between the buff-coats and the gate, and held How Fan in siege. Chih proposed shooting at them, but Fan stopped him, saying, "Try to get me off." He then asked to be allowed to leave the place, which the people granted. Ch'ih preceded him to Suh, and Fan himself went last of all. Whenever he went out at a gate, the people shut it. When he had got to the gate in the suburbs, they stopped him saying, "You are going away with the buff-coats of the Shuh-sun family. If the offcers require them from us, we are afraid we shall have to die." Sze Ch'ih said (He must have returned from Suh), "Shuh-sun's buffcoats have their own mark. We do not dare to take them with us." How Fan said to him, "Do you stop, and number them with them." Ch'ih accordingly stayed, and delivered the buff-coats to the men of Loo. How Fan fed to Ts'e, and the people of that State gave the city over to Loc.

Par. 8. Kung-yang has ## for $\frac{1}{2}$. $60 the lat narr. appended to par. 1 of last year, where this par. is anticipated.

Parr. 9, 12. Here and afterwards, Kungyang has 11 for 11, as the name of the prince. Both he and Shin were brothers of the duke. After 12 in par. 12 Kung and Kuh introduce

The Chuen says:—'The Kung-tere Te of Sung was so much attached to Këu Poo-lëth, that he divided his property into 11 parts, and gave him 5 of them. He had 4 white horse, which the duke's favourite Hëang Tuy wanted to get; and the duke gave them to him, having coloured their manes and tails red. Te was enraged, and made his servants beat Tuy, and take the horses from him. Tuy was afraid, and going to run away, when the duke shut his gate, and wept over him, till his eyes were quite swollen.

'Te's own brother Shin, said to him, "You divided your property, and gave [half] to Lieb. That you should make an exception of Tay, and humiliate him, was an act of partiality. You must show respect to the ruler. If you just cross the borders, he will be sure to send and stop you." [On this] Te fied to Ch'ia, without the duke's stopping him; and when Shin interceded for him, the duke would not listen to him. Shin then said, "It was I who deceived my elder brother. If I leave the State taking the people with me, whom will you have to stop with you?" In winter he left and fied to Ch'in, along with Chung T'o and Shih K'ow.

cknowledgments of Loo for the surrender to How, and for other favours received from during the year. The Chuen says:—'Woowent on a complimentary visit to Ts'e, the marquis entertained him, and said to "Sir Shuh-sun, if How had been in anpart of your ruler's State, I should have taken no knowledge of it; but as it immediately adjoins my own State, I assisted your ruler in his trouble about it." Woo-shuh replied, "That was not what my ruler expected. His service of your lordship depends on his [command of his] territories, and the [stability of his] altars. How dared I trouble your lordship's officers with my domestics? And a bad subject is an object of indignation to all under heaven;—your lordship should not consider what you did as a special gift to my ruler."

Eleventh year.

- In the [duke's] eleventh year, in spring, Shin, younger brother of the duke of Sung, with Chung T'o, Shih K'ow, and the Kung-tsze Te, [returning] from Ch'in, entered Sëaou, and held it in revolt.
- 2 It was summer, the fourth month.
- 3 In autumn, Yoh Ta-sin entered Sëaou from Ts'aou.
- 4 In winter, we made peace with Ching, and Shuh Seuen proceeded thither to make a covenant.

ed as flying from Sung last year returning in a way which was, as Tso-she says, 'very essing to Sung, and all because of the duke's critism for Hëang Tuy.' In par. 1 a pronce in the return and revolt is given to the y-tsze Shin. Sëaou,—see V. xxx. 6. It then a small attached State of Sung, haveen raised to that distinction about the 12th year of Chwang. This State was extinguished by Ts'oo in the 12th year of Seuen, and Seaou became again a simple city of Sung.

Par. 4. Shuh Seuen was the successor to Shuh E, whose death is mentioned in X. xxix. 8, as Head of the Shuh family. Tso-she observes that in this peace and covenant Loo took its first public step in revolting from Tsin. It had made an incursion into Ching in the duke's 6th year at the requisition of Tsin.

Twelfth year.

- XII. 1 In the [duke's] twelfth year, in spring, Ting, e Sëeh, died.
  - 2 In summer, there was the burial of duke Sëang of
  - 3 Shuh-sun Chow-k'ëw led a force, and pulled dov walls of How.
  - 4 Kung-mang K'ow of Wei led a force, and in Ts'aou.
  - 5 Ke-sun Sze and Chung-sun Ho-ke led a force, and down the walls of Pe.

6 In autumn, there was a grand sacrifice for rain.

7 In winter, in the tenth month, on Kwei-hae, the duke had a meeting with the marquis of Ts'e, when they made a covenant in Hwang.

In the eleventh month, on Ping-yin, the first day of the moon, the sun was eclipsed.

9 The duke arrived from Hwang.

10 In the twelfth month, the duke laid siege to Ch'ing.

11 The duke arrived from besieging Ching.

Part. 1, 2. Ting had been earl of Seeh for 3 years, and was succeeded by his son Pe (£). Kaon K'ang observes that the death of 3 earls of Seeh is recorded in the Ch'un Ts'ew; but in no case is the day or month of their burial given,—through the indifference of the historiographers. Evidently they did not think it worth their while to be particular about so small a State. It is of no use to look for great meanings, as many critics do, in these omissions of dates.

Parr. 3, 5. is pronounced both to and heei, the second sound being taken probably, from , which has the same meaning. Maou 嘶所云墮者,謂毁其城,壞 其郛夷其阨塞,使失所險阻, 而無可愛也, the term thus indicating the entire dismantling of the cities, the overthrow of all their walls and outworks. wish that we had more information as to how this movement originated, and how far it was proposed to carry it. How, Pe, and Ching were the principal cities of the three clans, which had long got all the power of Loo into their hands. Each of the cities was fortified in the strongest manner, and could defy any attempts of the marquises against them. Latterly, however, the chiefs had found these engines of their influence turned against themselves. How Fan had held How in revolt, and defied Shuh-sun. First Nan Kwae and then Kungun Puh-nëw had held Pe; and Kung-lëen Ch'oo-foo was in Ch'ing, all but independent of the Mang-sun or the State. The three chiefs thus found their weapons turned against themelves, and were prepared to listen to the Thortations of Confucius, who was at this time ninister of Crime, and advocated the dismaning of their cities, as an important step wards restoring the authority of the ruler of e State, and establishing an impartial justice roughout its borders. The sage was seconded Taze-loo, or Chung Yëw, one of his most ergetic disciples, who was in the employment the Ke family. The Chuen says:—'Chung

Yew was [at this time] steward to Ke-she, and proposed dismantling the three capitals [of the clans]. On this Shuh-sun dismantled How, and Ke-sun was going to do the same with Pe. Kung-san Puh-nëw, however, and Shuh-sun Cheh, led the men of Pe to surprise the capital. The duke with the 3 chiefs entered the palace of Ke-she, and ascended the tower of Woo-tsze. There the men of Pe attacked them unsuccessfully, but they penetrated near to the duke's [On this], Chung-ne ordered Shin K'euseu and Yoh K'e to go down and attack them. The men of Pe were defeated and fled, pursued by the people, who defeated them [again] at Koo-mëeh. Their two leaders fled to Ts'e, and Pe was dismantled.'

Par. 4. The Chuen says:—'In summer, Kung-mang K'ow invaded Ts'aou, and reduced Këaou. In his retreat, Hwah Lo had the charge of defending the rear, but he did not leave the ranks of the main body, until they had crossed [the border of Ts'aou]. His charioteer said to him, "Does it not seem as if you were deficient in courage to be keeping in the ranks, when you should be in the rear?" Lo replied, "It is better to [seem to] be without courage than to make a useless display of defiance."

Par. 7. Kung-yang gives wrongly 音侯 instead of 齊侯. Hwang,—see II. xvii. 1. Too thinks this covenant was to confirm the revolt of Loo from Tsin.

Par. 8. This eclipse took place in the fore-noon of Sept. 15th, B.C. 497.

Parr. 10, 11. The Chuen says:—'It was intended to dismantle Ch'ing; but Kung-lëen Ch'oo-foo said to Mang-sun, "If you dismantle Ch'ing, the men of Ts'e will [soon] be at the north gate. Ch'ing, moreover, is the sure defence of the Mang family. If there be no Ch'ing, there will be no Mang-she. Do you pretend that you do not know anything about it, and I will not dismantle the place." In winter, in the 12th month, the duke laid siege to Ch'ing, but he could not take it.'

Thus the work of reformation was stopped. About this time, too, Confucius was obliged by the intrigues of Ts'e and the falling off from him of Ke-she, to abandon Loo.

Thirteenth year.

I. 1 In the [duke's] thirteenth year, in spring, the marquises of Ts'e and Wei halted at Ch'uy-këa.

2 In summer, we enclosed the park of Shay-yuen.

3 There was a grand review at P'e-p'oo.

4 Kung-mang K'ow of Wei led a force and invaded Ts'aou.

5 In autumn, Chaou Yang of Tsin entered into Tsin-yang, and held it in revolt.

6 In winter, Seun Yin and Sze Keih-shih of Tsin entered into Chaou-ko and held it in revolt.

7 Chaou Yang of Tsin returned to [the capital of] that State.

8 Sëeh murdered its ruler Pe.

Par. 1. Kuh-lëang has no (長). and Kungmg has 最 instead of 意. Ch'uy-këa, or as was also called Keih-she (果氏), was in the Ts'aou-chow. As to the force of 大, see IX. 5. Too says here, that the two princes the intending to send a force against Tsin, and ted here themselves, to succour it if necessary.

the Chuen say:—'The marquises halted at ty-kea, or Keih-she, and sent a force to inthe Tsin. When it was about to cross the Ho, great officers all objected to its doing so;

but Ping E-tsze said, "We can do so. A light-armed force can attack the country inside the Ho (In the pres. dep. of Wei-hwuy, Ho-nan). It will take several days to transmit the news to Këang, and troops from Këang cannot be on the Ho in less than 3 months, by which time we shall have crossed the river again." Accordingly they ravaged the country inside the Ho. The marquis of Ts'e called in the conveyances of all the great officers, and only Ping E-tsze was allowed to use his.

'The marquis wished to ride in the same carriage with the marquis of Wei; and [to bring this about], he asked him to a feast, and caused a large war chariot to be yoked, with buff-coats in it. Then he made word [suddenly] be brought that the army of Tsin was coming, and said to his guest, "Till your lordship's carriage is yoked, I beg to offer you mine instead." He then put on his armour, and they rode together, driving very fast. [By and by], some one told them that there was no army of Tsin; and they stopped.'

Shay-yuen was in the south of the Par. 2. pres. dis of Fei () (), dep. Tse-nan. The summer was not the season for such an undertaking. "We may be sure,' says Le Lëen, "that by this time the master had nothing to do with the government of Loo." Comp. VIII. xviii. 10; X. ix. ŏ.

, Par. 3. See X. xi. 5.

This attack was made, it is supposed, because Ts'aou would not join in the revolt against Tsin.

l'ar. 5. Tsin-yang was a city and district of Tsin,—the principal seat of the Chaou clan; in the pres. dis. of Tae-yuen, dep. Tae-yuen (太原), Shan-se.

The Chuen says:—'Chaou Yang of Tsin said to Woo, [the commandant] of Han-tan, "Make over to me the 500 families rendered to you by Wei, and I will set them in Tsin-yang." Woo agreed to do so; but, on his return home, he told the elders of his family about the matter, and they all objected, saying, "It is on account of these families that Han-tan enjoys the favour of Wei. If you place them in Tsin-yang, you will cut off the communication between us and Wei. You had better make an incursion into Ts'e, and then take counsel about the matter, [as if you sent them away for fear of Ts'e]." Woo accordingly adopted this plan, and sent the families to Tsin-yang. Chaou-mang was angry, called Woo to him, and imprisoned him in Tsin-yang, causing his followers to give up their swords before they entered [the city], which, however, Sheh Pin refused to do. He then sent word to the men of Han-tan that for some private reasons he had punished Woo, and would appoint any other [of his family] whom they wished in his place. Immediately after, he put Woo to death; but Chaou Tsein (Woo's son) and Sheh Pin held Han-tan in revolt against him. In summer, in the 6th month, Tseih Tsin, marshal of the 1st army, laid siege to Han-tan. Woo of Han-tan had been a nephew of Seun Yin, and Seun Yin's son had nuarried a daughter of Fan Keih-shih. Thus these chiefs of the Seun and Fan families were friendly together, and therefore they took no part in the siege of Han-tan, and intended to make a rising. Tung Gan-yu heard of their purpose, and told it to Chaou-mang, saying that he should be prepared for them beforehand. That minister replied, "There is an order of the State that he who commences an insurrection "Than that shall die. I will wait for them." the people should be injured, I," said Gan-yu, "should prefer to die alone. [Make your preparations, and explain your doing so by [throwing the blame on] me." Chaou-maing, however, refused to do so.

'In autumn, in the 7th month, the Fan and the Chung-hang attacked the palace of the Chaou, when Yang fled to Tsin-yang, where they came from the capital and besieged him.'

The above narrative seems hardly to bear out the statement of the text that 'Chaou-yang held Tsin-yang in revolt.' Maou says:-- 'Chaouyang fled to Tsin-yang to escape the danger with which he was threatened; and how is it that the text says he held it in revolt? Tsinyang was a city of Tsin; but Chaou-yang looked upon it as his own, and wished to remove people from elsewhere to fill it; this done, he further regarded it as an independent State, and resisted in it the army of Tsin, so that it no longer belonged to Tsin. This might be described as revolt, and from this time the Chaou family wanted to dismember Tsin.' If the Fan and the Scun were acting against Yang by the orders of the ruler he was certainly in opposition to the government, and a rebel; if they were acting on their own authority. or authority extorted from the marquis, a justification of his course might be pleaded. Only one thing is plain, that the rulers of Tsin, once all-powerful, were now reduced as low as the rulers of Loa

Par. 6. Chaou-ko was the old capital of Yia, and at this time belonged to Tsin. It was in the north of the pres dis. of K'e (漢); dep. Wei-hwuy, Ho-nan. The Chuen says:- 'Fan Kaou-e did not find favour with Fan Keih-shih, and wished to create an insurrection in the Fan family. Lëang Ying-foo was a favourite with Che Wan-tsze (Seun Leih), who wished to have him made a minister. Han Këen-tsze was on bad terms with Chung-hang Wan-tsze (Sem Yin), as was Wei Sëang-tsze with Fan Ch'aontsze (Fan Keih-shih). These five took counsel together how they might expel Seun Yin and Fan Keih-shih, and get Lëang Ying-soo subsituted for the former, and Fan Kaou-e for the latter. Seun Leih said to the marquis, "Your lordship gave a command to your great servants that the first who disturbed the peace should die. The words of it [were sunk] in the lie Three officers have now disturbed the peace, and only Yang has been driven out. Punishment is not equally distributed. I beg that all the three may be driven out."

'In winter, in the 11th month, Seun Leih, Han Puh-sin (Këen-tsze), and Wei Man-to (Seangtsze) carried the marquis with them, and altacked, without success, the Fan and the Chunghang. The chiefs of these two families prepared to attack the marquis, but Kaou K'eang of Ts'e (A refugee in Tsin. See the Chuen on X. x. 2) said to them, "I know he is a good physician [who can heal] an arm broken in 3 places; but it is wrong to attack your ruler. The people will not side with you. I am here because I attacked my ruler. The three families (Their opponents: —the Che represented by Seun Leih; the lim; and the Wei) are not on good terms among themselves, and may all be overcome. Reduce them, and with whom will the ruler find him. self? If you first attack him, you will make them harmonious." They would not listen to him, but attacked the marquis, who was aided by the people of the capital. The chiefs were defeated, pursued, and attacked in their turn, and on Ting; we, Seun Yin and Sze Keili-shih fled to Chaou-ka Kung-yang has a 及 in the text after 寅· Seun Yin and Sze (or Fan) Keih-shih might properly be described as revolters.

Par. 7. The Chuen says:—'[The chiefs of] the Han and Wei made intercession for Chamshe; and in the 12th month, on Sin-we, Chaou antered Këang, and made a covenant marquis's palace.'

are left to form our own judgment on this The Kang-he editors say that it is id by the sage to condemn the marquis of r failing to punish Chaou Yang. Many have sought to vindicate the pardon and tion of Yang on various grounds. The lity is that the marquis could not help , but was obliged to do as the great told him. The narratives about Yang refore us, however, very distinctly, the illies which now divided the power of -those of Chaou, Han, Wei, Che, Fan, ung-hang. We see also premonitions of of the former three over the latter. A is thrown before of the division of the State of Tsin into the three States of Han, and Wei.

8. The succession of Pe to Seeh was on the 1st and 2d parr. of last year. ne of the Chuen says anything of the stances of his death or murder, as the alls it. He was followed by his son E, [wuy (真女,夷).

The Chuen gives here the following narrative about Wei:—'Before this, Kung-shuh Wäntaze of Wei went to court, and begged that duke Ling would accept an entertainment from him. As he was retiring, he saw the historiographer Ts'ëw, and told him, who said, "You are sure to meet with misfortune. You are rich, and the ruler is covetous. Some offence will be charged against you." "Yes," replied Wän-tsze, "it was my fault that I did not tell you before. But the ruler has promised; what is to be done?" "There is no harm," said the historiographer. "Deport yourself as a subject, and you will escape. When a rich man can so deport himself, he will escape danger. It is thus with both high and low. But [your son] Shoo is proud, and is like to come to ruin. There are few who are rich without being proud. You are the only exception that I have seen. There has never been a case of a proud man, who did not come to ruin. Shoo is sure to fall into calamity." When Wan-tsze was dead, the marquis of Wei began to hate Kung-shuh Shoo,—because of his Shoo also wished to send away the riches. partizans of the marchioness (The famous Nan Taze. See Ana. VI. xxvi.), and she accused him of intending to produce an insurrection.']

Parr. 1, 2. We have here the sequel of the narrative at the end of last year. The Chuen says here:—'This spring, the marquis of Weidrove out Kung-shuh Shoo and his partizans, in consequence of which Chaou Yang fled to Sung, and Shoo came a fugitive to Loo.'

Kung and Kuh both have, in par. 2, 晉趙 Blor 篇趙陽, misled, probably, by the

The Chuen appends here a continuation of affairs in Tsin:—'Lëang Ying-foo hated Tung Gan-yu, and said to Che Wän-tsze (Seun Leih), "If you do not kill Gan-yu, but allow him to continue to direct the affairs of the Chaou family, Chaou-she is sure to get the State of Tsin; why not require Chaou-she to punish him, on the ground that he was the first to excite our [recent] troubles?" Wan-tage sent a representation to that effect to Chaou-she, saying, "Although the Fan and the Chung-hang did really rise in insurrection, yet it was Gan-yu who provoked them. He was chargeable with the same crime as they. It is a law of Tsin that they who commence to disturb the peace should die. Those two chiefs have suffered for their crime; and I venture to aubmit the case to you." Chaou-mang was troubled about the matter, but Gan-yu said, "If by my death the State of Tsin get repose, and the Chaou family be established, why should I live? What man must not die? I shall [only] die [too] late." Accordingly he strangled himself. Chaou-mang exposed his body in the market-place, and sent word to Che-she, saying, "You ordered me to put to death the criminal Gan-yu. He has suffered for his crime, and I presume to inform you of it." Che Pih made a covenant in consequence with Chaou-mang, and then the Chaou family was established, and sacrificed to Gan-yu in its ancestral temple.'] 月 instead of 二月;公子佗人 instead of 公孫佗人; and 粮 for 牂.

The Chuen says:—'Tsang, viscount of Tun,

The Chuen says:—'Tsang, viscount of Tun, wishing to serve Tsin, had rebelled against Ts'oo, and broken off its friendship with Chin. In the 2d month, Ts'oo extinguished Tun.'

Par. 4. Tso observes that Pih-kung Këeh now fled to Loo, on account of [the affair of] Kungshuh Shoo. Nan Tsze was the cause of all the disturbances of Wei. Kaou K'ang says, "Duke Ling of Wei gave ear implicitly to what was told him in the harem. It was thus he sent out as fugitives the hereditary servants of the State, and all who favoured them. The State in fact was thus placed by him at the disposal of his harem.'

Parr. 5, 6. Kung-yang has 四个 for 稿. Tsuy-le was in Woo;—45 le south of the pres. dis. city of Këa-hing (嘉 與) dep. Këahing, Cheh-këang. The Chuen says:—'Woo invaded Yueh, and was met by Kow-tsëen, viscount of Yueh. The two armies were drawn up at Tsuy-le, when Kow-tsëen, distressed by the order and steadiness of the troops of Woo, sent a body of men resolved to sell their lives, who made two daring attempts to break in upon them, but they did not move from their place. He [then] sent three lines of criminals, who held swords to their throats, and addressed their opponents, saying, "Your ruler and ours are here in the field of battle, and we are servants who have violated [the laws of his] flags and drums. We are here iaactive before your ruler's ranks, and do not dare to flee from the punishment [which is our due];--we dare to go home to death." And with this they all cut their throats. The army of Woo was looking at them with fixed eyes, when the viscount of Yueh took the opportunity, and made an attack which was the prelude to a great defeat. Ling Koo-fow struck Hoh-leu with a great lance, and cut off one of his great toes, and carried away one of his shoes. The viscount of Woo] then retreated and died at Hing, 7 le from Tsuy-le. Foo-ch'ae [his son] made a man stand in his court, and say to him, whenever he came out or went in, "Foo-ch'ae, have you forgotten that the king of Yueh killed your father?" to whom he would reply, " Here I am. I dare not forget it." Three years after this he repaid Yuch for the affair.'

Par. 7. Kung-yang has for . The place was in Wei;—in the pres. dis. of Seun (), dep. Wei-hwuy, Ho-nan. The object of the meeting was to relieve the siege of Chaouko, as the Chuen says:—'The men of Tsin were besieging Chaou-ko, when the duke had a meeting with the marquises of Ts'e and Wei, between P'e and Shang-lëang, to take counsel about relieving the chiefs of the Fan and Chunghang claus (See par. 6 of last year). Foo of Seih-ch'ing and Sëaou-wang T'aou-këah led a force of Teih to surprise [the capital of] Tsin, and fought in it, but were unsuccessful and retired. Sze Foo fled to Chow, and Sëaou-wang T'aou-këah entered Chaou-ko.'

Par. 9. T'aou,—see V. viii. 1. This meeting, like the one at K'ëen, was on account of the Fan family, and other revolters in Tsin. The K'ang-he editors say, 'At this time, Wei had its difficulties with Kung-shuh Shoo, and Sung its difficulties with the Kung-tsze Shin. [Duke] King of Ts'e could not settle their disorders for those States, but took counsel with their rulers how they could help the revolted subjects of Tsin. Wei and Sung, unable themselves to bring their own revolted subjects to order, could do nothing but follow Ts'e;—they were all of them wrong.'

Par. 10. 石 is the clan name, and 问 is the name; from which the critics conclude the envoy must have been simply of the rank of an officer (天王之士). 脈 is the name of the flesh used by the king in sacrifice (祭 肉);—especially of that offered at the altar of the land. A portion of this was put into the shell of a large bivalve, and sent round to the different princes of the surname Ke. The bivalve was called 🔯, and hence the fiesh thus sent got the name of H. There has been no mention of any complimentary visit from the court of Chow to Loo since the 10th year of duke Seuen. How it came to observe this special rule just at this time, it is not worth while to consider; but as Confucius had a short time before this left Loo, because the duke did not observe the rule of sending portions of the sacrificial flesh to his great officers, that circum-

The marchioness observed his countenance, burst into tears, and ran off, crying, "The prince is going to kill me." The marquis took her by the hand, and went up with her into a tower. 14 In winter, we walled Ts'eih.

Par. 1. The viscount of Choo had a meeting, e saw last year, with the duke, at P'e-p'oo, and ere we find him, at the beginning of this year, aying a formal visit at his court; and in summer he hurries to it again, as soon as he hears the duke's death. There must have been reat friendship, or some other cogent reason, to take him thus demean himself.

The Chuch here says:—'When duke Yin of hoo appeared at the court of Loo, Tsze-kung One of Confucius' most famous disciples) witessed [the ceremony between the two princes]. The viscount bore his symbol of jade [too] high, with his countenance turned upwards; the duke received it [too] low, with his countenance bent down. Tsze-kung said, "Looking on [and judging according to the rules of ceremony, the two rulers will [soon] die or go into exile. Those rules re [as] a stem from which grow life or death, preservation or ruin. We draw our conclusion from the manner in which parties move to the right or to the left, advance and recede, look down and look up; and we observe this at courtmeetings and sacrifices, and occasions of death and war. It is now in the first month that these princes meet at court together, and they both violate the proper rules;—their minds are gone. On a festal occasion like this, unobservant of such an essential matter, how is it possible for them to continue long? The high symbol and upturned look are indicative of pride; the low symbol and look bent down are indicauve of negligence. Pride is not far removed from disorder, and negligence is near to sickpess. ()ur ruler is the host, and will probably be the first to die.'

Parr. 2, 4. See VIII. vii. 1. Here we are not told in what part the mice attacked the ox, but the animal died. The sacrifice, notwithstanding, was performed, though the 5th month was beyond the equinox, and the ceremony was therefore improved the sacrification.

Par. 3. Comp. par. 3 of last year. Ts'oo had the same grounds of resentment against Hoo as against Tun. The Chuen says here:—'When Woo entered Ts'oo (IV. 15), the viscount of Hoo had plundered all the cities of Ts'oo which were near his State, and carried the people off. After Ts'oo was settled again, P'aou, the viscount of Hoo, still refused to do service to it, saying, "Preservation and ruin happen as appointed; why should I incur the numerous expenses connected with serving Ts'oo?" In the 2d month, Ts'oo extinguished Hoo.'

Par. 5. Too says that is the 'name of a place,' and for Ting to die here was not to die in his proper place. Thus of the eleven marquises of Loo whose deaths have now been chronicled, only three—Chwang, Seuen, and Ching—died, as all ought to have done, in the 'State chamber.' Some critics however, with whom I am inclined to agree, take on the privilege which Ting possessed in the counsels of Confucius, which might have raised Loo to more than its ancient eminence among the States of the kingdom. That he did not avail himself long of them was a proof, they say, both of his own weakness, and of the averted regards from Loo of Heaven.

The Chuen says:—'On the death of the duke, Chung-ne said, "It is unfortunate for Taze (Tsze-kung; see on par. 1) that his words have proved correct;—it will make him a still greater talker."'

Par. 6. The Chuen says that at this time 'Tah defeated an army of Sung at Laou-k'ëw.' The Kung-tszes, who fied at first from Sung to Ch'in (X. 9), subsequently took refuge in Ch'ing. This led to hostilities between the two States, which continued for many years (See XII. xii. 5). Kung-yang has From 25.

Par. 7. Kung has for part ; and the Chuen calls the place 2. Nothing is known of it, but that it was in Sung. "The marquises," says Tso, "halted here, to take counsel about succouring Sung; i.e., they consulted about succouring it, but did not do so.

Parr. 8, 11. Both the things related here were contrary to rule. We have not hitherto met with an instance of the prince of one State hurrying to be present at the preparatory obsequies of the prince of another. The student will mark the difference between the terms and . The funeral took place, according to rule, 5 months after the death; and there was time to go to it without 'hurrying.' Not so with the coffining and other preparatory rites, which commenced immediately after the decease.

Parr, 9, 18. Kuh-leang has for the supposed, of duke Gae, and a concubine of Ting. She has not, in the former of these paragraphs, the title of the former of these paragraphs, or wife, nor in the latter the title of the former of the latter. This is more likely than, the reason which Tso-she gives for the former of the latter of the latter, that her funeral rites were imperfectly attended to.

Par. 10. This is the last of the eclipses recorded in the classic, and took place in the forenoon of July 16th, B.C. 494.

Par. 12. See on VII. viii. 9, 10. Tso-she observes here, as there, that to defer the burial, in consequence of the rain, was proper. In the Yih (under the dlagram Fung—豐) we find 日中景 'after mid-day is the afternoon.'

Kuh-lëang has 稷 for 昃.

Par. 14. Ts'eih;—see IX. xxi. 2, where Ts'eih treacherously passes from Choo to Loo. The fortifying the place now appears to have been in contemplation of hostilities against Choo. Perhaps it was a knowledge of such a design against his State which made the viscount of Choo so assiduous in his attentions to duke Ting alive and dead.

In his first year, in spring, in the king's first month, the duke came to the [vacant] seat.

The viscount of Ts'oo, the marquises of Ch'in and Suy, and the baron of Heu, laid siege to [the capital of] Ts'ae.

Field-mice ate at the ox for the border sacrifice, so that it died; and another was divined for.

- 4 In summer, in the fourth month, on Sin-sze, we offered the border sacrifice.
- 5 In autumn, the marquises of Ts'e and Wei invaded Tsin.
- 6 In winter, Chung-sun Ho-ke led a force and invaded Choo.

Title of the Book.— 灵 众, 'Duke Gae,' Duke Gae was a son of Ting, by the lady Sze, whose death took place about two months after her husband's. His name was Tsēang (素). In his 14th year was found the lin, with the record of which event Confucius terminated his labours on the Ch'un Ts'ëw; but the rule of Gae lasted 27 years, from n.c. 493 to 467. The posthumous title denote: 'Respectful and benevolent, short-lived (表 仁爱折日哀).'

His first year synchronized with the 26th of king King; the 18th of Ting of Tsin; the 54th of King of Ts'e; the 41st of Ling of Wei; the 25th of Ch'nou of Ts'ae; 'the 7th of Shing (量) of Ch'ing; the 8th of Yang (量) of Ts'aou; the 8th of Min (量 of Ch'in; the 12th of He (巨) of K'e; the 23d of King of Sung; the 7th of Hwuy (重) of Ts'in; the 22d of Ch'aou of Ts'oo; and the 2d of Foo-ch'ae (夫 達) of Woo.

Par. 1. This par. must be taken as showing that all was regular about the succession of duke Gae.

Par. 2. We have met with Suy before, but not with 'the marquis of Suy,' as a peer of the kingdom. Too supposes that in consequence of the services of Suy to the viscount of Ts'oo, when he was driven from his capital by Woo (See the Chuen on XI. iv. 15), he had rewarded it, and called its ruler now to take the field as one of the other princes. We read, in XI. vi. 1, that Ch'ing extinguished Heu, and carried off the baron as a prisoner. Ts'oo must have constituted another State of Heu, thus boldly exercising a royal prerogative.

The Chuen says:—'This spring, the viscount of Ts'oo laid siege to [the capital of ] Ts'ae, to repay that State for the action at Pih-keu (XI. iv. 14). He raised a mound at the distance of a le [from the walls], 10 cubits thick, and twice as many in height, stationing soldiers [inside, till the work was completed], which was accomplished in 9 days, the men working day and night;—according to the previous [calculation] of Taze-se. The people of the city [came out and surrendered], the males in one body and the women in another. [The viscount then] ordered them to settle between the Këang and the Joo, and returned, upon which Ts'ae asked leave from Woo to remove within the limits of that State.'

[The Chuen turns here to the affairs of Woo and Yuel:—'Foo-ch'ae, king of Woo, defeated Yueh at Foo-tsëaou, in return for the battle of Tsuy-le (XI. xiv. 5), and then went on to enter [the capital of ] that State. The viscount of Yueh, with 5000 men armed with buff-coats and shields, maintained himself on [the hill of ] Kwei-k'e, while he sent his great officer Chung to obtain peace by means of the services of P'ei, the grandadministrator of Woo. The viscount of Woo vis about to grant his request, when Woo Yun mid, "Do not do so. I have heard that in planting what will be advantageous to us we should try to make it great, and in removing what will be injurious we should do it entirely. Anciently there was Kësou of Kwo, who killed [the prince of Chin-kwan, and then, going on to attack Chin-ain, destroyed Seang, the sovereign of Hëa. Sëang's queen Min was then pregnant, and made her escape through a bole. She went to her native State of Jing, where she gave birth to Shaou-k'ang. He became chief of the shepherds of Jing; and, afraid of the power of Kësou, he took precautions against him. Kësou employed Tsēaou to seek for him, on which he fied to Yu. and was chief cook to its ruler, that thus he might escape the dangers which threstened him. Sze of Yu gave him his two daughters (Yaous, of the same survame as Shun) in marriage, and the city of Lun, where he had territory to the extent of 10 le square, and troops to the number of 500. There he could make his virtue be felt, and commenced to by 🖼 plans, to collect again the people of Hea and revive its [abolished] offices. He employed Jo-E to watch Këaou, and Le Ch'oo to deinde He, so that [by and by] he extinguished Kwo and Ko, restored the line of Yu, and sacrificed to the sovereigns of Hea with their founder as the correlate of Heaven, recovering all that of old belonged to his family. Now Woo is not equal to Kwo, and [the ruler of] Yueh is greater than Shaou-k'ang. Should you perhaps [17] this peace] make him still greater, will it not be to the disadvantage [of Woo]? Kow-treen is able to attract men's affection, and lays himself out to bestow favours. In his bounty, he does not fail to reward the proper men; in his kindness, he does not neglect [the smallest] services. His territory is similar to ours, but Woo and Yueh have been enemies for generations. Now you have vanquished it, but instead of taking it to yourself, you are going to preserve it;—this is to oppose the will of Heaven, and to strengthen your enemy. Though you repent of this hereafter, the evil cannot be digested away. The decay of the Ke may be expected to go on from day to day. Lying contiguous to the rude tribes of the south and east, and giving encouragement to our enemies, if in this way you seek to make yourself the leader of the States, the thing can certainly not be done."

'Yun was not listened to, so he retired, and said to some one, "Give Yueh 10 years for the growth of its people and the collection of its resources, and [other] ten years for the instruction of its people, and in little more than those 20 years, [the capital of] Woo is likely to be made a pool. In the 3d month, Yueh and Woo made peace.

'Woo's entering of Yueh does not appear in the text, because Woo did not announce [to Loo] its success, nor did Yueh announce its defeat.']

Parr. 8, 4. Kuh-lëang has here fit after 4. See on parr. 2, 4 of last year, and the previous magraphs of a similar nature. Kuh-lëang lilates, on this par., at great length on the preamption of Loo, exhibited and condemned in bese passages; but his criticism goes on the apposition that the border sacrifice spoken of that to Heaven in the 1st month. But we ive seen reason to think that the texts only fer to the sacrifice for a blessing on the toils husbandry, properly falling in the 8d month Chow, but still allowable in the 4th month, to the time of the equinox. Whether this ar it was celebrated before or after that date, e text does not enable us to say.

The Chuen appends here 2 narratives:—

1st, about the struggle between Ts'e and Tsin.
n summer, in the 4th month, the marquises of s'e and Wei succoured Han-tan, and laid siege

Woo-luh.

2d, about Woo's commencing hostilities against hin. 'When Woo had entered [the capital [] Ts'oo (In Ting's 4th year), [the viscount] ent to summon duke Hwae of Ch'in [to join im], who assembled the people of the State o ask their opinion, and said, "Let those the wish to side with Ts'ee go to the right, ind those who wish to side with Woo go w the left." The people took the side of the State near to which their lands lay; and those who had no lands took the side they were inclined to. Fung Hwah, however, advanced right opposite to the duke, and said, "I have heard that States flourish through prosperity and perish through calamity. Now Woo has not yet enjoyed prosperity, nor has Ts'oo suffered calamity. Ts'oo is not to be rejected, and Woo is not to be followed. There is Tain, the lord of covenants. Suppose you decline the requisition of Woo on the ground of [your duty to] Tsin." The duke said, "The State [of Ts'00] is conquered, and its ruler is a fugitive. If this be not calamity, what would be so?" "Such things have happened to many States," was the reply. "Why may not Ts'oo recover steelf? Small States have done so, and how much nore may a great State do so! I have heard hat States flourish when they regard their peole as if apprehensive of their receiving hurt: hat brings prosperity. States again perish hen they treat their people as carth or grass: -that brings calamity. Although Ts'00 does show [much] kindness, it does not slag its ople, whereas Woo is daily ruined with fightg, and the bones of its people lie like weeds the ground. They experience no kindness m it. Heaven perhaps is teaching Ts'oo good sons; but what [future] time need we look to calamity to visit Woo?"

The duke followed this advice; and [now] en Foo-ch'se had subdued Yueh, he deterned to carry out the resentment of his father rainst Ch'in]; and in autumn, in the 8th nth, Woo made an incursion into Ch'in, reing and feeding the old animosity.']

Par. 5. We have here a continuance of the efforts of the other States, at the instigation of Ts'e, to break down the power of Tsin. The Chuen says:—'The marquises of Ts'e and Wei had a meeting in Kan-how, to help the chief of the Fan clan. An army of ours, one of Ts'e, K'ung Yu of Wei, and a body of the Sëen-yu, invaded Tsin, and took Keih-p'oo.'

The Chuen continues its narratives about Woo:—'When Woo was in Chin, the great officers of Ts'oo were all afraid, and said, "Hohleu was able to employ his people, and defeated us at Pih-keu, and now we have heard that his successor is still more [warlike] than he; what is to be done?" Tsze-se said to them, "You have only to be anxious, gentlemen, about a want of harmony among yourselves, and need not be troubled about Woo. Formerly Hoh. leu never partook of two dishes, did not sit on a double mat, dwelt in no lofty structures, had no red paint nor carving about his articles of furniture, built no towers about his palaces, used no ornaments about his boats and chariots, and in his choice of dress and in all his outlay avoided what was expensive. When any calamity or pestilence from Heaven visited the State, he went round himself among the orphans and widows, and ministered to their wants and distresses. When he was with his army, he did not venture to eat himself until all the soldiers had had their share of what was cooked; and in what he took himself his foot-guards and chariot-men all partook with him. Thus diligently did he care for his people, and share with them in their toils and pleasures; and the consequence was that they did not weary of hard service, and in death they knew that [their families] would not be uncared for. Our former great officer, Tsze-chang, was the reverse of all this and so it was that Holi-leu defeated us. But I have heard that Foo-ch'ae, wherever he halts, must have towers, raised pavilions, embankments, and lakes, and where he spends the night, must have ladies, high and low, to serve his purposes. If he take one day's journey, he must have whatever he desires done. His curiosities must follow him; he collects things precious and rare; he seeks after spectacles and music; he regards his people as enemies; and uses them every day in some new way. Such an one will first defeat himself;—how can he defeat us?']

Par. 6. We have the commencement of the hostilities against Choo, spoken of under the concluding par. of last year as in contemplation by Loo.

[The Chuen adds here:—' In winter, in the 11th month, Chaou Yang of Tsin attacked Chaou-ko.']

II. 1 In the [duke's] second year, in spring, in the king's second month, Ke-sun Sze, Shuh-sun Chow-k'ëw, and Chung-sun Ho-ke, led a force and invaded Choo. They took the lands east of the K'oh, and those west of the E.

2 On Kwei-sze, Shuh-sun Chow-k'ëw and Chung-sun Ho-ke made a covenant with the viscount of Choo at Kow-yih.

3 In summer, in the fourth month, on Ping-tsze, Yuen, marquis of Wei, died.

4 The viscount of T'ang came on a court visit to Loo.

5 Chaou Yang of Tsin led a force, and placed Kwae-wae, heir-son of Wei, in Ts'eih.

In autumn, in the eighth month, on Këah-seuh, Chaou Yang of Tsin led a force, and fought with a force under Han Tah of Ch'ing at T'ëeh, when the army of Ch'ing was shamefully defeated.

In winter, in the tenth month, there was the burial of duke Ling of Wei.

8 In the eleventh month, Ts'ae removed [its capital] to Chowlee.

9 Ts'ae put to death its great officer, the Kung-tsze Sze.

Parr. 1, 2. The K'oh river,—see on IX. xix. 4. The E,—see on the Shoo III. i. Pt. i. 29. In IX. xix. 4, it is said that Loo took the lands of Choo from the K'oh water. A further portion of its territory lying east from that stream must now have been secured.

The Chuen says:—'In spring, we invaded Choo, and were going to attack Këaou. The people of Choo, loving the territory thereabouts, bribed us with the lands about the K'oh and the E, and received a covenant.' The three great families of Loo would seem by this time to have recovered themselves, and duke Gae was a tool in their hands as much as Ch'aou had been. While their chiefs were united in the invasion of Choo, only two of them covenanted with the viscount. Perhaps Kuh-lëang is right in thinking the reason was that Shuh-sun and Chung-sun obtained the lands which were now ceded; and this may have been the reason that the system of depredation was continued next year. Kow-yih was in Choo, - in the pres. dis. of Tsow (2015), dep. Yen-chow.

Par. 8. The Chuen says, "Before this, [once] when the marquis of Wei was enjoying himself in the suburbs, and Tsze-nan was driving his carriage, he said to him, "I have [now] no son [declared as my successor]; I will appoint you." Tsze-nan gave no answer, Another day, the marquis spoke to him to the same effect, when he replied, "I am not sufficient to preside over the altars. Let your lordship think of some other arrangement. There is the marchioness [with you] in the hall, and there are the 3 classes to whom you bow below it:—[consult with them]. Your [mere] order to me would only lead to disgrace." In summer the marquis died, and the marchioness said, "Appoint his son Ying (Tsze-nan) to be his successor; this was his order." Ying replied, "My views differ from those of his other sons. He died, moreover, in my hands. If there had been such an order, I should have heard it. Besides, Cheh, the son of the exile (Kwae-wae; see XI. xiv. 11) is here." Accordingly Cheh was appointed marquis.'

Par. 4. With this end the notices of other princes coming to the court of Loo. Wang Kih-k'wan says:—'Duke Gae had newly succeeded to the State, and therefore duke King of Tiang came to pay him this court visit. It was the first paid by a marquis of Tang to Loo since the visit of duke Ching in the 6th year of Seang, though Ching attended the funeral of Seang, and King that of Ting. Of all the States which thus sited Loo, during the period of the Ch'un Ts'ëw, the princes of T'ing, K'e, Ts'aou, and Choo, did so most frequently. Those of K'e did so 7 times, the last visit being in the 18th year of Ching. Those of Trison did so 5 times, the last being in the 21st year of Seang. Those of Little Choo also paid 5 visits, the last being in the 17th year of Chaos. Those of Choo 7, the last being in the 15th year of Ting. Those of Tang 5, the first in the 11th year of Yin and the last in this year. The princes of Tang and Loo were equally marquises; and for the former to be thus constantly found at the gate of the latter showed extreme smallness and weakness.' This is all very well; but according to 'the rules of propriety,' the interchange of court visits between the prince should have been much more frequent. 'The rules of propriety' gave place to 'the way of the world.' Great States gave up those visus altogether, and small ones observed them by constraint not willingly.

Par. 5. Ts'eih,—see VI. i. 9. The Chues says;—'In the 6th month, on Yih-yew, Chaou Yang of Tsin placed the eldest [and heir-son of the late marquis of] Wei in Ts'eih. [The expedition] lost its way in the night, but Yang Hoo said, "Let us keep on the right of the Ho d proceed southwards, and we must come to e place." [Yang] made the prince wear ourning, and 8 men wear clothes and scarfs of ck-cloth, and pretend that they had gone on the capital to meet him; and in this guise ey notified their arrival at the gate, which the ince entered weeping. He then kept possesun of the city.'

We saw, XI. viv. 11, that Kwae-wae fled om Wei to Sung. His father was now dead, ad his own son had been appointed marquis. his seemed to be a good opportunity to Chaou ang to take revenge on Wei for its hostility o Tsin, and he would appear to have gone for the rince of Wei to Sung, or have called him from hat State; and by the stratagem mentioned in the Chuen, he placed him in possesion of an importmt city in Wei, from which he was able by and by to gain all his inheritance. The critics dwell on the terms and phrases, 颖, 世子, 納于戚instead of 納于衞, as full of pregnant meaning; but it seems to me that Confucius simply tells the story, and leaves his readers to form their own judgment on the conduct of the parties concerned in it.

Par. 6. Kung-yang has 軒 for 罕, and for 鑦 both 果 and 秩. T'ëeh was the name of a small hill, which lay south from Ts'eih;—in the present K'ae Chow, dep. Ta-ming.

The repetition of his in the 2d member of the sentence is peculiar. The Chuen says: -'In autumn, in the 8th month, the people of Tre were sending grain to the Fan-ites, under the convoy of Tsze-yaou (Han Talı) and Tsze-Pan (Sze Hwang) of Ching, who were met by See Keih-shih. Chaou Yang wanted to intercept the convoy, and met it near Ts'eih. Yang Hoo and to him, "Our chariots are few. Let us take the flags of our war-chariots, and display them in the van, in front of the chariots of Han and Sze. Those officers coming up from behind, and arranging in the same way [their order of battle], will be sure to be alarmed when they see our sppearance; and by then commencing the fight, we shall give them a great defeat." Yang adopted this counsel, and consulted the tortoiseshell about [the propriety of] fighting; but the shell was [only] scorched, [and gave no further indication]. Yoh Ting said, "The ode (She, III. i. ode III. 3) says,

'There he began with consulting his followers;

There he scorched the tortoise-shell.'

Our counsels are the same (As they were before, when we determined to re-instate the prince of Wei); we may take the intimation which we then received as our answer now.

'Keen-taze (Chaou Yang) then made the following solemn declaration. "Fan-she and Chung-hang-she have transgressed the clear will of Heaven, slaughtering our people, and wishing to get into their own hands the State of Tsin, and to extinguish its ruler. Our ruler felt himself safe in his reliance on Ching, but now Ching, contrary to all right, has abandoned our ruler, and is assisting his rebellious subjects. You, gentlemen, are acting in accordance with the clear will of Heaven, and in obedience to your ruler's commands. It is for you, in this engagement, to vindicate the supremacy of virtue and righteouness, and to take away reproach. and shame. Those who distinguish themselves in the victory shall receive—a great officer of the superior grade, a hëen, and one of the inferior, a keun; an officer, 10 myriads of mow; a common man (I. e., a farmer), a mechanic, or a merchant, the privilege of becoming an officer; servants, such as sweepers and grooms, exemption [from their menial toils]. Should I (Chefoo was a name of Yang) come out free of guilt, let our ruler consider my case. If I be chargeable with guilt, let me die by the cord. Let my body be put into a single coffin of tung wood, [only] 8 inches thick; let the coffin be conveyed in a plain carriage by undressed horses; let it not be put into a grave. Let me [thus] be punished as a minister of the lowest degree."

'On Këah-seuh, they prepared for the fight. Yëw Woo-sëuh drove Këen-tsze, and the prince of Wei was spearman on the right. Having driven to the top of T'ëch, when they looked at the army of Ch'ing, and saw how numerous it was, the prince was afraid, and threw himself down under the chariot. Tsze-lëang (Woo-seuh, the Wang Lëang of Mencius, III. Pt. II. i. 4) handed him the strap, and helped him up again, saying. "You are a woman." Këen-tsze went round the ranks, saying, 'Peih Wan (The ancestor of the Wei clan in Tein. See the Chuen, at the end of IV. i.) was [originally but] a common man; but he made captures in 7 battles. till he possessed 100 teams, and he died at last [in the proper place] under his window. Do you all do your best. Your death need not come from this enemy."

'Fan Yu was driving Chaou Lo, and Sung Yung was spearman on the right. Lo's courage all departed, so that the others tied him to his seat; and when an officer inquired the reason, the charioteer said, "It was because he was seized with an ague-fit, and fell down." The prince of Wei prayed, saying, 'I, Kwae-wae, your distant descendant, venture to announce to you king Wan, my great ancestor, to you K'angshuh, my distinguished ancestor, and to you duke Scang, my accomplished ancestor:—Shing of Ching is siding with the rebellious, whom Woo of Tsin, in the midst of difficulties, is not able to deal with and bring to order. He has now sent Yang to punish them, and I, not daring to indulge in sloth, am here with my spear in my hand. I presume to announce this to you, and pray that my sinews may not be injured, my bones not broken, and my face not wounded, but that I may succeed in this great engagement, and you my ancestors may not be disgraced. I do not presume to ask for the great appointment; I do not grudge the precious stones at my girdle.".

'A man of Ch'ing struck Këen-teze with a spear in the shoulder, so that he fell down in the chariot, and his flag, Fung-k'e, was taken. The prince, however, came to his succour with his spear, and the army of Ching was worsted; but it captured Chaou Lo, the commandant of Wan. The prince again attacked it, and it was entirely defeated, and a thousand carriages, containing the grain of Ts'e, were taken. Chaoumang, delighted, said, "This will do;" but Foo Sow said, "Although we have defeated Ching, the Che clan are still in force, and our troubles are not over."

Before this, the Kung-sun Mang had collected the rents of the lands given by the people of Chow to Fan-she, when he was taken by some of the Chaou clan, and presented [to Chaou Këen]. The officers asked leave to put him to death, but Chaou-mang said, "It was for his lord. He has no crime." So he stopped the officers, and gave Mang [back the rents of] the lands. After this battle of T'ëeh, Mang, with 500 footmen, attacked the army of Ch'ing at night, and took the flag, Fung-k'e, from beside the tent of Tsze-yaou, which he then presented [to Këen-tsze] saying, "This is in requital of your kindness."

'In the pursuit of the army of Ching, Yaou, Pan, and the Kung-sun Lin, guarded the rear, and killed with their arrows many in the front ranks of the pursuers, so that Chaou-mang said, "The State [of Ching] should not be called small."

'When all was over, Këen-tsze said, "When I fell upon the quiver, I brought up blood, but still the sound of the drum did not diminish. My merit is at the top of this day's work." The prince [of Wei] said, "I saved you in the chariot, and made the enemies who were pressing about it retire. I stand at the top of the spearmen." Yëw Lëang said, "My two breast-leathers were nearly broken, but I managed to prevent [the catastrophe]. 1 am at the top of the charioteers." They yoked the chariot, and drove it over a [small] piece of wood, when the leathers both broke.'

Par. 7. It was thus the 7th month after his death before the interment of duke Ling took place. The movements of Kwae-wae had, probably, occasioned the delay.

Part. 8, 9. Chow-lae,—see VIII. vii. 7 and X. xiii. 12. In the latter passage it is said that 'Woo extinguished Chow-lae.' It would now therefore be a city of Woo. We saw on L 2, that Ta'ae had requested that it might be allowed to remove within the limits of Woo. It would appear to have changed its purpose and wished to remain where Ts'oo had placed it, but Woo was not to be baulked, and accomplished the removal in the way which the Chuen narrates—'Seeh Yung of Woo went to Ts'ae with the offerings of a complimentary visit, and at the same time accompanied by a small force. When his soldiers were all entered, and the people all knew it, the marquis of Ts'se communicated with his great officers and put to death the Kung-ton Sze, throwing the blame [of their having hesitated to remove] on him. He then wept at the tombs [of his ancestors], and carried their contents with him on his removal to Chow-lae.

Chow-lae was the 3d capital of Table. When king Woo invested his brother Too with Table the capital was ______, in the dis. still so called, dep. Joo-ning. Too rebelled, and was put to death, but king Ching restored Table to his son, and by and by the capital was removed to $\frac{1}{2}\frac{1}{2

則大以也.秋.六 3 拾 助 烟 三、弘 桑道 即 遻 位、南 則 也 故 してはいるとこと 周 在 與 聞 則 氏 以 使 趙 於 君

In the [duke's] third year, in spring, Kwoh Hëa of Ts'e and Shih Man-koo of Wei led a force, and laid siege to Ts'eih.

In summer, in the fourth month, on Këah-woo, there was an earthquake.

In the fifth month, on Sin-maou, the temples of [dukes] Hwan and He were burned.

Ke-sun Sze and Shuh-sun Chow-k'ëw led a force, and walled K'e-yang.

Yoh K'wan of Sung led a force, and invaded Ts'aou.

In autumn, in the seventh month, on Ping-tsze, Ke-sun Sze died.

7 The people of Ts'ae banished their great officer Kung-sun Lëeh to Woo.

In winter, in the tenth month, on Kwei-maou, the earl of Ts'in died.

Shuh-sun Chow-k'ëw and Chung-sun Ho-ke led a force, and laid siege to [the capital of] Choo.

Par. 1. The Chuen says:—' In spring, Ts'e and Wei laid siege to Ts'eih, and sought help from Chung-shan (The people of Seen-yu). Ts'e had its grudge against Ts'eih, because Kwae-wae, who now held that place, had been a principal instrument of the defeat of the troops of Ch'ing, and of the capture of the grain which Ts'e was trying to send to Chaou-ko. Wei, however, was principally concerned for the reduction of Ts'eih, because, while his father had a footing in the State, the new marquis Cheh could not consider his position secure. Down to the pres. day, critics take different sides on the question of the right to the State of Wei, whether it belonged to Kwae-wae, against the wish of his father, or to Cheh, Kwae-wae's son in opposition to him. See a partial decision of Confucius on the point, Ans. VII. xiv.

Par. 2. See VI. ix. 11; et al.

Par. 3. It is is not easy to account for the temples of Hwan and He being still continued. The ancestral temples of the States were restricted to 5 smaller temples, or shrine-houses; and the tablets of Hwan and He ought long ere this to have been removed to the special building appropriated to displaced tablets, and their places occupied by those of more recent mar-Between Hwan and Gae there had been 9 rulers in Loo, and between He and him 6. Some critics think Loo maintained 7 shrinehouses, as the royal House did; but even this would not account for the temple of Hwan. It is easy to see why the great families should have preserved the temple of Hwan, or rather built another specially for him, as it was to him that they all traced their lineage. However it was, the existence of these temples was irregular; and now they were destroyed by fire, and according to Tso-she and the Këa Yu (家語), even Confucius saw in the event the judgment of Heaven.

The Chuen says:—'In the 5th month, on Sin-maou, a fire broke out in the [small palace of] Sze-toh. It then passed over the duke's palace, and burnt the temples of Hwan and He.

'The people who tried to put out the fire all cried out, "Look to the treasury." When Nankung King-shuh arrived, he ordered the officer in charge of the Chow [documents] to carry out the books which were read to the marquis, and to wait with them in the palace, saying to them, "See that you have all in your charge. If you are not there, you shall die." When Tsze-fuh Ming-pih came, he ordered an officer belonging to the Board of the chief minister to bring out the books of ceremony and to wait [further] orders, reminding him that if he did not obey the order, he was liable to the regular punishment. [He also ordered] the superintendent of the horses to have them arranged in teams, and the superintendent of the carriages to have the wheels all greased; the officers of the various departments to be all there; a careful guard to be maintained over the treasury and repositories; the subordinate officers gravely to contribute their service; curtains and tents to be soaked, and placed wherever the smoke was issuing; the palace and contiguous houses to be [also] covered with them; beginning at the grand temple, outside and inside, in due order, help to be given where it was needed; and all disobedience to suffer the regular penalties without forgiveness.

When Kung-foo Ming-pih arrived, he ordered the superintendent of the horses to have the carriages all yoked; and when Ke Hwan-tsee arrived, he drove the duke to the outside of the towers at the front gate, where the boards with the statutes on them were hung up. He gave orders to those who were trying to put out the fire, that, as soon as any of them were injured, they should stop, and let the things take their chance. He ordered [also] the boards with the statutes to be laid up, saying, "The old statutes must not be lost." When Foo-foo Hwae arrived, he said, "For the officers to try to deal with the fire, without making preparations [against its progress], is like trying to gather up water that has been spilt." On this they removed all the straw outside the fire, and cleared a way all round the palace.

'Confucius was then in Ch'in, and when behend of the fire, he said, "It destroyed, I apprehend, the temples of Hwan and He."

Par. 4. K'e-yang (Kung has for k) was 15 ls to the north of the pres. dep. city of E-chow. It had been the capital city of the old State of Yu (k), which was taken in Choo in the 18th year of Ch'aou. Choo was now obliged to yield it to Loo, and as it was near to Pe, it was probably appropriated by Ke-she. The fortifying it would be to provide against attempts to regain it by Choo, which might be expected to be assisted by Tsin.

Par. 5. Yoh Ta-sin had fled from Sung to Ts'aou (XI. x. 8), and this may have been the ground for the present attack; which was followed by others still more serious.

[The Chuen appends here:—'There had been intermarriages for generations between the families of Löw [in Chow] and Fan [in Tsin]; and Chang Hwang had been in the service of duke Wan of Löw. In consequence of this, Chow took the side of the Fan [in the struggles in Tsin]. Chaou Yang made this the subject of remonstrance, and in the 6th month, on Kweimaou, the people of Chow put Chang Hwang to death.']

Par. 6. The Chuen says:—'In autumn, Mesun was ill, and gave orders to Ching-chang saying, "You must not die. If Nan Joo-use's child prove a boy, then inform the duke, and If it prove a girl, appoint him my successor. then you may appoint Fei." He died, and K'ang-tsze (Fei) took his place; but after the burial, [once] when K'ang-tsze was in the court, Nan-she gave birth to a boy, which Ching-chang carried to the court, where he said, " My master left a charge with me, his groom, that if Nanshe gave birth to a boy, I should inform his lordship and the great officers of it, and appoint him his successor. Now she has given birth to a boy, and I venture to give the information." On this, he fled to Wei. Kang-tere asked leave to retire from his position, and the duke sent Kung Lew to see the child, but some one had put it to death. He caused the murderer to be punished, and then called Ching-chang [from Wei], but he would not return.'

Par. 7. This Kung-sun Leeh would be a partizan of Kung-tsze Sze, mentioned in the last par. of last year.

Par. 8. Loo seems to have been bent on the entire subjugation of Choo.

'In winter, in the 10th month, Chaou of Tain laid siege to Chaou-ko, and lay in on the south of it. Seun Yin attacked the suburba, and made the troops [which were ig to his aid] enter the city by the north | Fan clan.'] gate, while he himself burst through the enemy and got away. On Kwei-chow he fled to Hautan. In the 11th month, Chaou Yang put to death Sze Kaou-e, such was his hatred of the Fan clan.']

Fourth year.

- IV. 1 In the [duke's] fourth year, in spring, in the king's second month, on Kang-seuh, a ruffian killed Shin, marquis of Ts'ae.
  - 2 Kung-sun Shin of Ts'ae fled from that State to Woo.

3 There was the burial of duke Hwuy of Ts'in.

- 4 An officer of Sung seized the viscount of Little Choo.
- In summer, Ts'ae put to death its great officers, Kung-sun Sang and Kung-sun Hoh.
- 6 An officer of Tsin seized Ch'ih, viscount of the Man Jung, and sent him to Ts'oo.
- 7 We walled our outer suburbs on the west.
- 8 In the sixth month, on Sin-ch'ow, the altar of Poh was burned.
- 9 In autumn, in the eighth month, Këeh; viscount of Tang, died.
- In winter, in the twelfth month, there was the burial of duke Ch'aou of Ts'ae.
- 11 There was the burial of duke K'ing of T'ang.

Parr. 1, 2, 5. In par. 1. Kung-yang has 三月 for 二月. Kung and Kuh-lëang have 弑 for 殺, which is probably the more correct reading.

In VII. xvii. 2, we are told that 'Shin (年), marquis of Ts'ae,' died, so that here is one of his descendants called by the same name; which is 'contrary to rule.' Twan Yuh-tsae says that the 'Historical Records' give 日 instead of 日; but there is no 日 in the edition of that Work in my possession.

The Chuen says:—'This spring, the marquis of Ts'ae was about to go to Woo, and all the great officers tried to prevent him from going, fearing there would be another removal of the capital. Kung-sun P'ëen pursued, and shot him, so that he entered into a house [on the way] and died. [P'ëen] then took his station in the door of it, with two arrows on his string, and no one would venture to go forward to it. Wan Che-k'eae, however, came up afterwards, and said, "Let us advance like a wall; at the most, he can kill but two men.' He then advanced with his bow in his hand. P'ëen discharged an arrow at him, which hit him in the wrist, but immediately after K'ëae killed him. In consequence of this event, Këae expelled Kung-sun Shin, and put to death the two Kung-sun, Sang and Yu (I. q. Hoh in par. 5).'

On , see on IX. x. 8.

Par. 3. The Chuen does not say anything on this event. Le Lëen discerns in it an indication of the ambition of the duke of Sung, who, now that there was no acknowedged leader among the princes, had fallen to imitate the doings of his predecessor Sëang. The idea of many critical, that the duke is condemned here by being called A, is inadmissible; but how that term ought to be translated, by 'officer,' 'body of men,' or 'the people,' could only be determined by our knowing the circumstances in which the seigner took place.

Par. 6. The Man Jung;—see X. xvi. 2. Here, as there, Kung-yang has for the The sci of Tsin in this matter is held to have been dirgraceful to it. The right of asylum for refuges seems to have been accorded by the States to one another; and one which had played such a part as Tsin ought to have maintained it with peculiar jealousy.

The Chuen says:—'In summer, a body of en from Ts·00, having reduced the E-h00, ben to turn its attention to the regions farther rth. Pan, the marshal of the Left, Show-yu mmandant of Shin, and Choo-leang commandt of Sheh, collected [the people of] Ts'ae, ho remained in that quarter], and placed em in Hoo-hëen, and did the same for the ople outside the barrier wall in Tsäng-kwan. They then said that Woo was going to come the Këang to enter Ying, and that they must irry away as they had been commanded. On is, on the very day after, they took by surise Leang and Hoh, [cities of the Man Jung]. 'Shen Fow-yu laid siege to [the chief town [] the Man, the people of which dispersed, hile Chih, the viscount, fled to Yin-te in Tsin. he marshal raised the people of Fung and Seih, long with [certain tribes of] the Teih and lung, and proceeded towards Shang-loh. The master of the Left encamped near [the hill of ] I'oo-ho, and the master of the Right near Is'ang-yay. [The marshal then] sent a mestage to Sze Mëeh, the great officer [of Tsin] appointed over [the district of ] Yin-te, saying, 'Tsin and Ts'oo have a covenant, engaging them to share in their likings and dislikings. If you will not neglect to observe it, that is the desire of my ruler. If you determine otherwise, I vill communicate with you by Shaou-seih to hear your commands." Sze Mëeh requested instructions from Chaou-mang, who said, "Tsin is not yet in the enjoyment of tranquillity; we dare not make a rupture with Ts'oo. You must quickly give up the refugee to it."

'On this, Sze Mëeh then called together the Jung of Këw-chow, and proposed that they should set aside some lands for the viscount of the Man, and settle him there in a city. He also proposed to consult the tortoise-shell about the city; and while the viscount was waiting at San-hoo. The marshal [also pretended that he] would assign him a city and set up his ancestral temple, in order that he might delude the remnant of his people; and then he carried them all back as captives with him to Ts'oo.'

Par. 7. This would be in apprehension of an attack on the west from Tsin.

Par. 8. For Kung-yang has Th. the altar to the Spirit of the land of Poh we are to understand an altar of Yin. That dynasty had its capital in Poh, and on its extinction king Woo ordered the different States to rear altars. called 'altars of Poh,' to serve as a warning to their princes to guard against the calamity of losing their States. These are understood to have been placed outside the gate leading to the ancestral temple, so that the princes should not fail to take notice of them. They were covered. however, and enclosed, and sacrifices were not offered at them. Their preservation in this way simply served the purpose of admonition, but it exposed them to the calamity recorded in the text.

Par. 9. Keeh had been viscount of Ting 28 years, and was succeeded by his son Yu-woo (虞 册), duke Yin (隱).

Parr. 10, 11. The burial of the marquis of Tstae had been delayed;—probably by the troubles in the State. [The Chuen continues here the narrative of events in Tsin:—'In autumn, in the 7th month, Ch'in K'eih and Hëen She of Ts'e, and Ning Kwei of Wei, proceeded to the relief of Fan-she; and on Kang-woo they laid siege to Woo-luh. In the 9th month, Chaou Yang laid siege to Han-tan, which surrendered in winter, in the 11th month, when Seun Yin fled to the Seen-yu, and Chaou Tseih to Lin. In the 12th month, Hëen She met the latter in that place, and threw down its walls. [At the same time] Kwoh Hëa invaded Tsin, and took Hing, Jin, Lwan, Haou, Yih-che, for the result, Meeh seized him and his five great | Yin-jin, Yu, and Hoo-kow, was joined by the efficers, and delivered them to the army of Ts'oo | Seen-yu, and placed Seun Yin in Pih-jin.']

V. 1 In the [duke's] fifth year, in spring, we walled P'e.

2 In summer, the marquis of Ts'e invaded Sung.

3 Chaou Yang of Tsin, at the head of a force, invaded Wei.

In autumn, in the ninth month, on Kwei-yëw, Ch'oo-k'ëw, marquis of Ts'e, died.

5 In winter, Shuh Seuen went to Ts'e.

6 In the intercalary month, there was the burial of duke King of Ts'e.

Par. 1. It is not known where P'e exactly was. It would be in the west of Loo, and now be walled, as a preparation against an attack from Tsin. Kung has the and the instead of MH.

Par. 2. We saw last year how Sung was now trying to vindicate its claim to a foremost place among the States. We may suppose that this excited the jealousy of Ts'e, and led to the attack here mentioned.

Par. 8. The Chuen says:—'This spring, Tsin laid siege to Pih-jin (See the Chuen at the end of last year), on which Seun Yin and Sze Keihshih fled to Ts'e. Before this, Wang Sang, an officer of Fan-she, hated another called Chang Lëw-soh; but he spoke of him to Ch'aou-tsze (Sze Keih-shih), and got him appointed commandant of Pih-jin. Ch'aou-tsze said, "Is not he your enemy?" Sang replied, "Private enmittes should not interfere with public [duty]. In your likings not to overlook faults, and in your hatreds not to disallow what is good, is the course of righteousness. I dare not act contrary to it." When Fan-she left [Pih-jin], Chang Lëw-soh said to his son, "Do you follow your lord, and do your utmost for him. I will remain here and die. Wang Sang has laid that upon me. I must not fail in it." He died accordingly in Pih-jin. In summer, Chaou Yang invaded Wei, because of [the assistance it had afforded to] Fan-she, and laid siege to Chungmow.'

Par. 4. For F Kung-yang has . Ch'oo-k'ëw had been marquis of Ts'e for 50 years; but for his character see the Ana. XVI. xii. He had enjoyed the counsels of his distinguished minister Gan-tsze, and of Confucius; but though he was a scourge to Tsin, he could not arrest the decay of his own House. Immediately after his death, his son was murdered, and the State thrown into confusion; and in less than ten years the House of Keang was superseded by that of Ch'in.

The Chuen says:—'Yen Ke [wife of the marquis of Ts'e], had a son, who died before he was grown up. Of his sons [by his concubines] his favourite was Too, whose mother was Yuh

The great officers were all afraid lest o should be appointed the duke's successor, spoke to him on the subject, saying, "Your ship is old; and how is it that it has not a declared which of your sons is to succeed?" The duke, however, said, "If you are at present from anxieties [about the State], have [the risk] of illness [to think about]. to get what pleasure you can in the meane. Why should you be concerned about ing no ruler?"

When the duke was ill, he made Kwoh uy-tsze and Kaou Ch'aou-tsze appoint T'oo, l place all his other sons in Lae. In autumn died; and in winter, in the 10th month, his a, Këa, K'eu, and K'ëen, fled to Wei, while to and Yang-sang came to Loo. The people Lae sang about the young princes, "Duke King is dead!

Ye stood not by his grave.
To Ts'e's armies
No counsel e'er you gave.
The crowd of you!
What country will you save?"'

Par. 5. This visit would be one of condoce, and to attend the funeral of the marquis. Par. 6. We may assume that this intercalary inth was a double 12th, which would give burial in the 5th month after the death; ording to rule. Two schemes of the calendar the Ch'un Ts'ëw place the intercalary month this year, the one after the 10th month, and the other after the 11th; but I do not see any ground for admitting either of them. The fact of the burial is against them both. At present the intercalary months are left out of calculation in all matters connected with the duties to the dead; but it may not have been so in those times. Kuh-lëang thought it was, and therefore finds in the par. a condemnation of the irregularity. Kung-yang took the other view. Each has crowds of followers; and the Kang-he editors give the views of both, unable to decide between them.

[The Chuen turns here to an affair in Ching:—'Sze Tsin of Ching was rich and extravagant. Though [only] a great officer of the lowest grade, he had always the chariot and robes of a minister displayed in his courtyard, so that the people of Ching disliked him, and put him to death. Tsze-sze (The son of Tsze-chiaou) said, "The ode (She, III. ii. ode V. 4) says,

'They will not be idle in their offices, So that the people will have rest in them,'

They are few that can continue long who do not observe the conditions of their place. In the Temple-odes of Shang (She, IV. iii. ode V. 2) it is said,

'He erred not in rewarding and punishing, And dared not to be idle; And so he made his happiness grandly secure."

ed Chin, again reviving the old animosity

(See the Chuen after I. 8). The viscount of Ts'00 said, "My father had a covenant with Ch'in; I must by ali means now go to its help." Accordingly he proceeded to the help of Ch'in, and encamped with his army at Shing-foo.'

Par. 4. The Chuen says:—'Ch'in K'eih of Ts'e pretended to do service to [the ministers] Kaou and Kwoh; and whenever they went to court, he would go in the same carriage with one of them, and, as they went along, speak about all the great officers, saying, "They are all very arrogant and will cast from them your orders. They all say, 'Kaou and Kwoh have got [the favour] of the [new] ruler, and are sure to be pressing upon us. Why should we not remove them out of the way?' They are sure to be plotting against you. You should take nieasures against them beforehand, and if you take such measures, the best plan will be to destroy them entirely. Delay is the worst of all methods." When they got to the court, he would say, "They are so many tigers and wolves. When they see me by your side, they will kill me any day. Allow me to go where they are standing." He would then say on the other hand to the great officers, "Those two ministers are [meditating] evil. They trust in having the ruler [in their hands], and wish to plot against you. They say, 'The many troubles of the State arise from the [number of] those who have high rank and favour. Let us do away with all of them, and then the ruler will be settled in his position.' They have decided on their plan. Why not take the initiative with them? If you wait till they move, regrets will be of no use." The great officers were persuaded by him; and in summer, in the 6th month, on Mow-shin, Ch'in K'eih and Paou Muh, with all the great officers, burst into the duke's palace with [a body of] men-at-arms. Ch'aou-taze (Kaou Chang) heard of their movement, and got into a carriage with Hwuy-tsze (Kwoh Hēa), to go to the duke. They were defeated in a fight at Chwang, and pursued by the people of the capital. Kwoh Hēa fied to Keu, and [soon after], along with Kaou Chang, he came a fugitive to Loo.'

Par. 5. Cha,—see IX. x. 1. The Chuen says nothing on the reasons of this proceeding. Maou observes that some say it was in obedience to a requisition from Woo;—which is likely, as the viscount or king of Woo was now pushing forward to the leading place among the States.

Par. 6. Continuing the narrative under par. 8, the Chuen says:—'In autumn, in the 7th month, the viscount of Ts'00 was in Shing-foo, intending to succour Chin. He consulted the tortoise-shell about fighting, and got an unfavourable response. He consulted about retreating, and got the same. He then said, "Well then I will die. It is better to die than to incur a second defeat of the army of Ts'oo. It is also better to die, than to throw away our covenant with Chin, and evade the enemy. It is [only] dying in either case, and I will die at the hands of the enemy." He named the Kung-tsze Shin (Taze-se) to be king, but he declined. Next he named the Kung-tsze Keeh (Tsze-k'e), but he also declined. Finally he named the Kung-taze K'e (Tsze-leu), who declined the dignity five times, but then accepted it.

"When they were about to fight, the king fell ill; but on Käng-shin he attacked Ta-ming. He [then] died in Shing-foo, after which Tsze-leu retreated, saying, "Our ruler and king passed over his son in favour of his subjects. I did not dare to forget [my duty to] the ruler, and to obey his command was proper. But to appoint his son in his place is likewise natural and proper. Both things are proper, and neither of them must be neglected." He then took counsel with Tsze-se and Tsze-k'e, kept [the king's death] concealed from the army, shut up all communication abroad, sent for Chang, [the king's son] by a daughter of Yueh, appointed him king, and afterwards returned [with the army to the capital].

'This year, there had been a cloud, like a multitude of red birds, flying round the sun, which continued for 3 days. The viscount of Ta'oo sent to ask the grand-historiographer of Chow about it, who said that it portended evil to the king's person, and that if he offered a deprecatory sacrifice to it, the evil might be removed so as to fall on the chief minister or one of the marshals. The king, however, said, "Of what use would it be to take a disease the contains the heart and less it may the threatening the heart and lay it upon the limbs. If I had not committed great errors, would Heaven shorten my life? I must receive the penalty of my transgressions; why should I try to move it over to another?" So he did not offer the sacrifice. Before this, king Ch'aou had been ill, and an answer was obtained from the tortoise-shell that his illness was occasioned by the [Spirit of the] Ho. Notwithstanding, he did not sacrifice to it; and when his great officers begged him to sacrifice to it at the border [altar], he said, "According to the sacrifices commanded by the 8 dynasties, a State cannot sacrifice to any but the hills and streams within its borders. The Këang, the Han, the Ts'eu, and the Chang are the rivers to which Ts'00 ought to sacrifice. Calamity or prosperity is not to be accounted for by error in this respect. Although I am deficient in virtue, I have not offended against the Ho." Accordingly he would not apply the world not seen to be accordingly he would not apply the world not seen to be accordingly to the seen to be accounted for the seen to be accou ingly he would not sacrifice to it.' Confucius said, "King Ch'aou of Ts'oo knew the great path of duty. It was right that he should not lose his State! In one of the Books of Hea (Shoo, III. iii. 7) it is said,

'There was the prince of Taou and Tang, Who observed the rules of Heaven, And possessed this country of K'e. Now we have fallen from his ways, And thrown into confusion his rules and laws:—
The consequence is extinction and ruin.'

It is said in another place (Shoo, II. ii. 10), 'Where sincerity proceeds from, therein is the result.' When a man observes of himself the regular [statutes of Heaven], [his worth] is to be acknowledged."'

[There is here a short notice, relating to Ts'e:
—'In the 8th month, Ping E-tsze came a fugitive to Loo.']

Parr. 7, 8. For Kung-yang has A. The Chuen says:— Ch'in He-tsze (K'eih) had sent to call the Kung-tsze Yang-sang (See the flight of Yang-sang, and other princes of Ts'e to Loo in the narrative under par. 4 of last year) to Ts'e. Yang-sang yoked his chariot, and went to see [his brother] Tseu-yu (The Kung-tsze Ts'00) in the south suburbs, when he said, "I presented some horses to Ke-sun, but they were not fit to enter his best team. I therefore wish to present these, and beg you to ride with me, and try them." When they had gone out at the Lae gate, he told the other all about the call he had received. [Meanwhile, his servant] K'an Che knew it, and was waiting for him outside. "But. said the prince to him, "how the thing will turn out cannot yet be known. Do you go back, and dwell with [my son] Jin." He then cautioned him, and went his way. He arrived at [the capital and went his way. He arrived at [the capital of ] Ta'e at night, but the people were aware of it.

'He-taze made [bis concubine], the mother of Isze-sze, keep him [for some time], but [by and by] he got him in [to the palace] along with shose who were taking the food in. In winter, n the 8th month, on Ting-maou, he raised him to the marquisate and was about to impose a covenant [on the great officers]. Paou-taze had gone [to the palace] drunk, but one of his offiers, who had charge of his chariots, Paou Teen, mid, "By whose orders is this?" "I received the order from Paou-taze," replied Ch'in-taze, and [turning to that minister], he said falsely to him that it was by his order. "Have you forgotten," said Paou-tsze, "how when our [late] ruler was playing ox [to T'oo], the child [fell down and] broke his teeth? And now you are rebelling against him." Duke Taou (Yangsing) bowed to him with his head to the ground, and said, "You are one who does what is right. If you approve of me, not a single great officer shall go into exile. If you do not approve of me, let not a single son of the late ruler go into exile. Where right is let us advance; where it is not, let us recede. I dare not but follow you, and you only, in everything. Let the displacing or the new appointment be made without disorder; this is what I desire." Paou-tsze said, "Which of you is not a son of our [late] ruler?" and with this he took the covenant.

'[After this, duke Taou] sent Hoo Ke [a concubine of duke King] with the child Gan (Too) to Lae; sent away Yuh Sze (Too's mother); put to death Wang Këah; put Këang Yueh under restraint; and imprisoned Wang Paou at the hill of K'eu-tow. He then sent Choo Maou to say to Ch'in-taze, "But for you,

I should not have attained to this position. But a ruler is not an article of furniture. cannot be two rulers. Two articles of furniture are a safeguard against want, but two rulers give rise to many difficulties. I venture to represent this to you." He-tsze [at first] gave no reply, but then he wept and said, "Must our rulers all have no trust in their officers? Because the State of Ts'e was in distress [through famine], and that distress gave rise to other anxieties, and no counsel could be taken with a ruler who was so young, I therefore sought for one who was grown up, hoping that he would exercise forbearance with his officers. If he cannot do so, with what offence is that child chargeable?" Maou returned with this answer, which made the duke repent [that he had sent the message]. Maou, however, said to him, "Your lordship can ask Chin-tsze about great matters, but small matters you can determine yourself." The duke then sent him to remove the child to T'ae; but before they arrived at that place, Maou put him to death in a tent in the country, and buried him at Shoo-maou-tun.'

Kung-yang gives a different account of the way in which Ch-in-tsze brought about the elevation of Yang-sang to the marquisate, and relates a story about his being suddenly presented from a sack to the great officers, whom Ch-in-tsze had called together to a sacrificial feast. This account, being more dramatic, is followed, as we might expect, in the 'History of the Various States,' Ch. lxxxi.

I. 1 In the [duke's] seventh year, in spring, Hwang Yuen of Sung made an incursion, with a force, into Ch'ing.

2 Wei Man-to of Tsin made an incursion, with a force, into Wei.

3 In summer, the duke had a meeting with Woo in Tsang.

- In autumn, the duke invaded Choo. In the eighth month, on Ke-yëw, he entered [the capital of] that State, and brought Yih, viscount of Choo, back with him to Loo.
- 5 A body of men from Sung laid siege to [the capital of] Ts'aou.
- 6 In winter, Sze Hwang of Ch'ing led a force to relieve Ts'aou.

Par. 1. Tso-she says this attack of Ching because of its revolt from Tsin; but the ang-he editors retrench so much of the Chuen, inking the attack was not to be so accounted Comparing par. 6, we may conclude that it because of a confederation between Ching Id Ts'aou, on the destruction of which latter ate Sung was bent.

Par. 2. In the 5th year Tsin invaded Wei, it that State still held out against it; hence is incursion is incursion.

Par. 8. For Kuh-liang has ;—see IX. 8. Both here and in par. 5 of last year, we ust understand that the meeting was with the scount of Woo. The Chuen says, 'In summer, len the duke had a meeting with Woo in ang, [messengers] came from Woo, demanding us a hundred sets of animals. Tsze-fuh ng-pih replied that the ancient kings had never dearule enjoining such contributions; but they d, "Sung gave us a hundred, and Loo must be behind Sung. Moreover, Loo gave more n ten to a great officer of Tsin (See on X. xxi. is it not proper that the king of Woo should eive 100?" King-pih rejoined, "Fan Yang Usin was greedy, and threw aside all rules of Priety. He frightened our poor State with great one, and therefore we gave him 11 sets. our ruler will require from the States what injoined by those rules, there is a definite nber laid down. If he will also throw them de, the demand is excessive. The kings of Chow, according to the statutes, require only 12 of this great-class offering, considering that to be the great number [indicated by the division] of the heavens. When [your ruler] sets aside the rules of Chow, and says that he must have 100 sets of animals, it is simply the decision of his officers." The men of Woo would not listen to this remonstrance, and King-pih said, "Woo will go to ruin, casting away [the rule of] heaven and going against [the example of] its own ancestral House. If we do not give [these animals], it will vent its enmity on us." Accordingly they gave them.

'P'ei, the grand-administrator [of Woo], called Ke K'ang-tsze to him, and K'ang-tsze sent Taze-kung to excuse his not going. "The ruler of your State," said P'ei, "takes a long journey, and his great officer will not cross his door; what sort of propriety is this?" Tsze-kung replied, "Why should this be viewed from the point of propriety? We are afraid of your great State. It is laying its commands upon the States without regard to the rules of propriety, and how can we measure to what that course will go? Our ruler has obeyed your commands; but how can his old minister leave [the care of] the State? T'ae-pih (The first civilizer of Woo. See on Ana. VIII. i.), in his square-made robe and black cap, cultivated the ceremonies of Chow. Chung-yung succeeded to him, and cut off his hair and tattooed his body. Was that ornamenting of the naked body according to the rules of propriety? but there was a cause for it."

'When [the duke] returned from Tsang, it was considered that Woo could do nothing [great].'

Par. 4. Here is the consummation of Loo's hostility to Choo. The Chuen says:—' Ke K'angtsze wished to attack Choo, and gave an entertainment to the great officers, to take counsel about it. Tsze-fuh King-pih said, "It is by good faith that a small State serves a great one, and benevolence is seen in a great State's protecting a small one. If we violate [our covenant with] a great State, it will be a want of good faith; and if we attack a small State, it will be a want of benevolence. The people are protected by the walls of the cities, and the walls of the cities are preserved by virtue, but if we lose those virtues, our walls will totter;—how will it be possible to preserve them?" Mang-sun said, "What do you say, gentlemen, to these things? How can we go against [the words of ] a man of such wisdom?" [The great officers] replied, "When Yu assembled the States on mount T'oo, there were 10,000 States whose princes bore their symbols of jade and offerings of silk. Of those there are not many tens which now remain;—through the great States not cherishing the small, and the small States not serving the great. If we know this expedition must be perilous to us, why should we not say so?" [Mang-sun rejoined], "The virtue of Loo is the same as that of Choo; and is it proper that we should fall upon it with our [superior] numbers?" They were [all] displeased, and left the feast.

'In autumn, we invaded Choo; and when we had got as far as its Fan gate, [the viscount] was still listening to the sound of his bells. His great officers remonstrated with him, but he would not hearken to them. Ching-taze of Maon begged leave to carry information of their circumstances to Woo, but he would not grant it, saying, "The noise of the watchmen's rattles in Loo is heard in Choo, whereas Woo is 2,000 le off, and cannot come [to our relief] in less than 3 months. Of what avail can it be to us? and have we not sufficient resources in our State?" On this Ching-taze revolted with Maou, and our army then entered [the capital of] Choo, and occupied the viscount's palace. The troops all plundered during the day, and then the people took refuge on [mount] Yih. The troops [also] plundered during the night, and then returned, bringing Yih the viscount with them. He was presented before the altar of Poh, and imprisoned in Foohëa, in consequence of which there is fin that neighbourhood] a [mount] Yih.

'E-hung (Ch'ing-tsze) of Maou went himself to ask assistance from Woo, carrying with him as offerings two ox-hides and a bundle of silks. "Loo," said he, "considering the weakness of Tsin and the distance of Woo, is confident in its own numbers, violates its covenant with your lordship, treats with contempt your officers, and so tyrannizes over our small State. Choo does not presume [to send to you] out of regard for itself, but it is afraid lest your lordship's majesty should not be maintained. The not maintaining of that is the subject of our small State's anxiety. If [Loo] may in the summer covenant with you in Tsäng-yen, and in the autumn violate its engagements; if it accomplish what it seeks, and no resistance [be offered to it]:—how can the States of the four quarters be expected to serve your lordship? Moreover, the levies of Loo amount to 800 chariots,—the same as your own, while those of Choo are [only] 600, [as if it were] the private possession of your lordship. To give your private possession to a State which is your equal is a matter worth your lordship's consideration." The viscount of Woo was prevailed on by these representations.'

The student will observe in this paragraph how the bringing a prisoner to Loo is described by K, while in may other paragraphs the carrying a prisoner to another State is described by K.

Parr. 5, 6. Com. par. 1. The Chuen says:—
'A body of men from Sung laid siege to [the capital of ] Ts'aou. Hwan Tsze-sze of Ching said, "If the people of Sung get Ts'aou into their possession, it will be a bad thing for Ching; we must on all accounts go and help Ts'aou." Accordingly, in winter, an army of Ching, to relieve Ts'aou, made an incursion into Sung.

'Before this, a man of Ts'aou dreamt that a number of gentlemen were standing in the temple [adjoining the] altar of the land, and consulting about the ruin of the State, and that [among them was] Shuh of Ts'aou, Chin-toh (The first earl of Ts'aou; a brother of king Woo), who begged them to wait till Kung-sun K'ëang appeared;—and to this they agreed. In the morning, the man sought through the city for a person of this name, but there was no such individual. He warned his son, however, saying, "When I am dead, if you hear of the government's being in the hands of a Kung-sun K'ëang, you must then leave the State."

'When Yang became earl of Ts'aou, he was fond of hunting and bird-shooting. In the borders of the State there was a man [called] Kung-sun K'ëang, who was [also] fond of birdshooting, and having caught a white goose, presented it [to the earl], talking also with him all about hunting and bird-shooting. The earl was pleased with him, and went on to ask him about affairs of government. His answers afforded him great pleasure; and the man became a favourite, was made minister of Works, and the conduct of the government committed to him; on which the son of the dreamer took his departure. K'ëang spoke to the earl all about his becoming leader of the States, and the earl followed his advice, revolting from Tsin, and breaking the peace with Sung. The people of Sung invaded the State, and Tsin gave it no help; so they built 5 cities in the borders of the capital,-Shoo-k'ëw, Yilı-k'ëw, Ta-shing, Chung, and Yu'

- In the [duke's] eighth year, in spring, in the king's first VIII. 1 month, the duke of Sung entered [the capital of] Ts'aou, and carried Yang, earl of Ts'aou, back with him to Sung.
  - Woo invaded us.
  - In summer, a body of men from Ts'e took Hwan and 3 Chen.
  - We sent back Yih, viscount of Choo, to his State.
  - It was autumn, the seventh month.
  - In winter, in the twelfth month, Kwo, earl of K'e, died.
  - The people of Ts'e returned Hwan and Chen.

Par. 1. The Chuen says:- 'This spring, the ] duke of Sung attacked [the capital of ] Ts'sou, and was withdrawing, while Tsze-fei, superintendent of the market-place, was bringing up the rear. Him the people of Ts'aou reviled so much that he halted. The [rest of the] army was waiting for him, and when the duke heard of the circumstance, he was angry, and ordered the troops to return to the attack. He then extinguished Ts'son, laid hold of the earl and K'cang the minister of Works, carried them back with him to Sung, and put them to death.'

The Chuen thus says expressly that Sung extinguished Ts'aou, with which the notice in the text would agree well enough, though it does not necessarily follow from what the text says that the House of Ts'aou was now extinguished. And in the time of Mencius we seem VI. Pt. II. ii. Perhaps, as some suppose, Sung now constituted it an "attached State" of its own, under the presidency of some other family.

Par. 2. This is a sequel to the narrative under par. 4 of last year. The Chuen says:— Woo, being about to invade Loo in the interest of Choo, asked Shuh-sun Cheh (A refugee from Loo. See on XI. xii. 5, where it is said that Cheh, and Kung-san Puh-new fled to Ts'e. They afterwards went to Woo) [about the enterprise]. Cheh replied, "Loo has the name [of being a great State], but not the reality. If you invade it, you are sure to get your will." When he retired [from his interview with the viscount], he told this to Kung-san Puh-nëw; who said, "You [spoke] improperly. When a superior man leaves hit improperly. When a superior man leaves hit own State, he does not go to one that is as to find the State of Ts aou still existing ;- see | enmity with it. If he have not taken office in ng then asked Tsze-seeh (Kung-shan in the same way, and he replied, "Al10 [seems to] have none to labour for its there are those who will be prepared to I he other States will come to its relief, annot yet get your will with it. I sin, Ts'oo will help it, and you will have 4 o contend with. Loo is as it were the 'e and Tsin. If the lips are destroyed, get cold,—as your lordship knows. Buld they do but come to its help?"

3d month, Woo invaded us, Tsze-seeh guide to it and purposely leading [its the most difficult path, past Woo-shing. e this, some men of that city had been e opportunity to hunt on the borders of had caught rudely a man of Tsang whom nd steeping rushes, blaming him for heir water dirty. When the army [of rarrived [in the neighbourhood], the had been caught showed it the way to ecity, so that it reduced it. Wang Fan (a om Woo) was the commandant of Wooriend of Tan-t'ae Taze-yu's (The Tan-1-ming of Ana. VI. xii.) father, and the the State were afraid of him. [thinking have delivered the city to Woo].

: (Mang-sun Ho-ke) said to King-pih, is to be done?" and was answered, he army of Woo arrives, we must at t with it. Why be troubled about that? moreover, at our own call;—what more u seek for? The army of Woo [next] Tung-yang, from which advancing it Woo-woo. Its stage next day was to Kung-pin Kang and Kung-keah e fought with it at E, when Shuh-tsze Choo-ts'oo were taken. When they ented to the king, he said, "These were ie chariot, and must have been employed men of ability. I cannot yet expect to a State." Next day the army advanced tsung, and halted at Sze-shang. There wanted to attack the encampment at d privately collected 700 footmen whom I by making them take 3 jumps in the lore his tent, till their number was o 300, among whom was Yew Joh (One cius' disciples). When they had arrivthe Tseih gate, some one said to Keey are not enow to harm Woo, and we many officers by the attempt. It had t be made." The minister accordingly them; but when the viscount of Woo the project, he removed his position one night.

[now] offered to make peace, and a was about to be made. King-pih said, he army of Ts'oo besieged [the capital (In the 5th year of duke Seuen), the changed their children and ate them, e the bones for fuel; and still they would not submit to a covenant at the foot of their walls. For us, who have sustained no [great] loss, to do so, is to cast our State away. Woo is all for dispatch and is far from home. Its army cannot remain long, and will soon be returning. Let us wait a little." This advice was not taken, and King-pih carried on his back the tablets [of the covenant] to the Lae gate. [Loo] then asked that Tsze-fuh Ho (King-pih) might not be required to go to Woo as its hostage, and, this being agreed to, that the king's son, Koo-ts'aou, might be [left in Loo] on the other side. [The proposal of hostsges] was then abandoned. The people of Woo made the covenant, and withdrew.'

Par. 4. Hvan,—see II. iii. 6, 7, et al. For here and below, Kung-yang has he are it to the north-east of the pres. dis. city of Ning-yang, dep. Yen-chow. The Chuen says:—'When duke Taou (Yang-sang) came [a fugitive to Loo] (In Gae's 5th year), Ke K'sng-tsze gave him his younger sister in marriage; and when he succeeded to the State, he sent for her; but [by that time] Ke Fang-how had had an intrigue with her. The lady told the truth, and [K'ang-tsze] did not dare to send her [by the messenger], which enraged the marquis of Ts'e; and in summer, in the 5th month, Paou Muh led a force, and invaded us, taking Hwan and Chen.'

[The Chuen appends here some other matters about Tse:—'Some one slandered Hoo Ke (See the Chuen on VI. 7, 8), saying that she belonged to the party of the child Gan; and in the 6th month, the marquis of Tse put her to death.']

Par. 5. Loo here restores the viscount of Choo through fear of Woo and Ts'e;—not to the advantage, as we shall see, of that prince. The Chuen says:—'The marquis of Ts'e sent a message to Woo, begging [the assistance of] an army, as he was intending to invade us. On this we restored the viscount of Choo, who, however, now conducted himself in an improper manner [to Woo]. The viscount of that State, therefore, sent the grand-administrator, Taze-yu, to punish him. He was imprisoned in a room in a high tower, which was fenced round with thorns; and Tsze-yu then made all the great officers support the viscount's eldest son Kih in the administration of the State.'

Par. 6. [There are two brief narratives introduced here, both more or less relating to Ts'e.

lst. In autumn, we made peace with Ts'e, and Tsäng Pin-joo went to Ts'e to make the covenant, while Leu K'ëw-ming came to Loo for the same purpose on the part of Ts'e. At the same time he received Ke Ke (Ke K'ang-tsze's sister), and carried her back with him. She became a favourite with the marquis.'

2d. 'Paou Muh went on to say to each of the marquis's brothers, "Shall I make you possessor of a thousand chariots?" They complained of him, and the duke said to him, "Some one has slandered you. Do you go for a time and reside in [the city of] Loo, till I examine into the matter. If the thing be true, you shall forfeit one half your property, and can go to another State; and if it be not true, I will restore you to your place." As he was going out at the gate, the duke made him take only a third of his usual retinue. When he had got half way, this was reduced to two chariots. When he got to Loo, he was obliged to enter it in confinement, and shortly after the duke put him to death.']

Par. 7. Tso-she says that the return places to Loo was a consequence of the with which the daughter of K'ang-ta regarded by the marquis of Ts'e.

5 It was winter, the tenth month.

也、吉、則 日、干 可、龜

l. The interment of duke He thus took the 3d month after his death. There we been some reason for the haste.

Chuen gives here a narrative prepara-Woo's attack of Ts'e next year:—'This the marquis of Ts'e sent Kung-mang to decline the services of the army [of he had requested the aid] from Woo. count of Woo said, "Last year I receivcommands, and now you reverse them. t know which to follow. I will advance ceive my orders [direct] from your Yung-k'ëw was in Sung,—in the is of K'e (*), dep. K'ae-fung. says:-- 'Heu Hëa, a favourite of Woong (Han Tah), asked for a city; and eing none to give him, he asked leave to e from another State. This was granted, laid siege in consequence to Yung-k'ew . [There], Hwang Yuen of Sung bethe army of Ching, every day moving i his lines, till the intrenchments of the nies touched. That of Ching wept [in ess]. Tsze-yaou (Han-tah), who attemptslieve it, received a great defeat; and in month, on Këah-seuh, Sung took it at Hwang Yuen directed that the ability [among the prisoners] should put to death, and took Këah Chang and Lo back with him.'

which certainly does not seem to carry to stamp of verisimilitude. He thinks torical facts may simply have been that ah now made an expedition into Sung diation for that related in VII. 1, and d a severe defeat at Yung-k'ëw. The the text would seem to imply the caphis army. See Tso's canon about the g of IX in such a case on II. xi. 2;— IX IX. Such a defeat ared in the 'explanation of Tso's canons,' taking a flock of birds in a net;'—as if we to be read fow, in the 3d tone.

8. Tso says the reason of this invasion cause Ch'in had gone over to Woo. Ts'oo rtainly done its utmost to relieve Ch'in, hat State was attacked by Woo in the 6th year; but as the death of king had rendered a retreat necessary, Woo mained master of the field, and Ch'in doubt, been obliged to submit to its To punish it for this would seem to be eatment.

Par. 4. Not content with the capture of its army, Sung now carries the war into Ching.

The Chuen introduces here two notices. The 1st is brief, but important, in connexion with the labours of subsequent dynasties to effect a communication by water between the Këang and the northern regions. It would require a dissertation to discuss it fully. 'This autumn, Woo walled Han (The present Yangchow), and thence formed by a channel a communication between the Këang and the Hwae.'

'Yang Hoo consulted the reeds on the principles of the Yih of Chow about the subject, and found the diagram T'ae ( ; ), which then said he "luck is with Sung. We must not engage [in conflict] with it. K'e, the viscount of Wei (The first duke of Sung), was the eldest son of Te-yih; there have been intermarriages between Sung and Ch'ing. The 'happiness' (In the legend of the changed line) denotes dignity. If the eldest son of Te-yih by the marriage of his sister has good fortune and dignity, how can we have good fortune [in an expedition against Sung]? [The purpose of helping Ch'ing] was accordingly abandoned.'

[There is a brief notice here, connected with Woo's determination to attack Ts'e:—'In winter, the viscount of Woo sent a message, requiring our army to be in readiness to invade Ts'e.']

E, earl of Seeh, died.

- In autumn, there was the burial of duke Hwuy of Seeh. 10
- 11 In winter, the Kung-tsze Këeh of Ts'oo led a force and invaded Ch'in, when Woo went to the relief of Ch'in.

Par. 1. The Chuen says:—'This spring, duke Yin of Choo came a fugitive, to Loo. Being the son of a daughter of [the House of] Ts'e, he went on to fice to that State.' Yill must have escaped from the tower in which he was confined by order of Woo (See on VIII. 4). His taking refuge in Loo showed, says K'aou K'ang, how the son of Yih. See VIII. 4), and T'an, and ed the south border of Ts'e. Their army scamped at Seih, when the people of Ts'e red duke Taou, and sent word to it [of his , on which the viscount of Woo wept for 8 utside the gate of the camp. [At the same Seu Shing was conducting a fleet along ast, intending with it to enter Ts'e, but it rfeated by the men of Ts'e, and on this the of Woo withdrew.' There seems no good i to question the account of the death of arquis of Ts'e given by Tso-she. Too supthat the report from Ts'e stated that he rom illness; and the text therefore follows flicial announcement. This also may have he case;—comp. IX. vii. 10, and the Chuen Woo Ching, however, and others deny ecount in the Chuen, thinking it very ly that a great State like Ts'e would nly murder its prince to avert the danger invasion with which it was well able to

They forget that that invasion was just ing that the Chin family would lay hold further their designs against the House of Things not be twice referred to the tortoise-shell; you get a fortunate answer, the divination not be repeated." On this they set forth, e took Le and Yuen, threw down the walls suburbs of K'aou-t'ang, made an incursion as Lae, and returned. This account of huen is prefaced by This account of huen had not have the huen had not had no we have instead of . Upon this many of the critics say that Yang did thus really make an open attack on Ts'e, invading it, but in the text the invasion is reduced to an incursion; and in this misrepresentation of the fact they find the sage's condemnation of Tsin for taking advantage of the death of the marquis of Ts'e to invade his State! This is surely a strange method of exalting the character of Confucius.

Par. 8. K'ow in the 14th year of duke Ting (XI. xiv. 12) fled to Ch'ing, a partizan of Kwaewae, and from Ch'ing he had gone on to Ts'e. Perhaps he had deserted the party of Kwae-wae, and was now restored by Ts'e to Wei. We find him, in the 15th year, when Kwae-wae regains the State, flying again to Ts'e.

Parr 9, 10. For E Kung-yang has E. [The Chuen appends a brief note here to the effect, that this autumn the viscount of Woo sent another message to Loo to have its army ready for the field]

Par. 11. The Chuen says:—'In winter Tsze-k'e of Ts'00 invaded Ch'in (See on par. 8 of last year). Ke-tsze of Yen and Chow-lae (Supposed to be Ke-chah, the youngest son of Show-mung of Woo who died in the 12th year of Seang. See the Chuen after IX. xiv. 1, et al. Chah could not now be less than 90 years old) went to relieve Ch'in, and said to Tsze-k'e, "Our two rulers do not endeavour to display virtue, but are striving by force for the supremacy of the States. Of what offence have the people been guilty? Allow me to retire; it will be to the credit of your name, as endeavouring to show a virtuous kindness and seeking the tranquillity of the people." On this [both parties] withdrew [from Chrin].'

XI. 1 In the [duke's] eleventh year, in spring, Kwoh Shoo of Ts'e led a force, and invaded us.

2 In summer, Yuen P'o of Ch'in fled from that State to Ch'ing.

3 In the fifth month, the duke joined Woo in invading Ts'e.

4 On Këah-seuh, Kwoh Shoo of Ts'e, at the head of a force, fought with Woo at E-ling, when the army of Ts'e was disgracefully defeated and Kwoh Shoo taken.

5 In autumn, in the seventh month, on Sin-yëw, Yu-woo viscount of T'ang, died.

6 In winter, in the eleventh month, there was the burial of duke Yin of Tang.

7 She-shuh Ts'e of Wei fled from that State to Sung.

Par. 1. The Chuen says:—'This spring, in consequence of the campaign of Seih (See on par. 8 of last year), Kwoh Shoo and Kaou Woop'e of Ts'e led a force to invade us. When they had got as far as Tsing, Ke-sun said to his steward, Jen K'ëw (A disciple of Confucius; see Ana. VI. x., et al.), "The army of Ts'e's being at Tsing must be with a design on Loo; what is to be done?" K'ëw replied, "Let one of you three chiefs remain in charge [of the capital], and the other two follow the duke to meet the enemy on the borders." "We cannot do so," Ke-sun replied. "Abide the enemy then inside the borders," advised K'ëw. Ke-sun reported this proposal to the other two chiefs, but they objected to it, on which K'ëw said, "If this cannot be done, then let not our ruler go forth, but let one of you three lead the army, and fight a battle with the city at their backs. Let those who do not join him not be accounted men of The [great] Houses of Loo are more than the number of the chariots of Ts'e. One House is much more than able to meet one chariot. Why should you be troubled about the matter? The two other chiefs may well not wish to fight, but the government of Loo is in the hands of the Ke family. It is now in your person, and if the people of Ts'e invade the State and you are not able to fight a battle with them, it will be a disgrace to you, and a great proof that Loo cannot take its rank among the States."

'Ke-sun told K'ëw to follow him to court, and to wait near the canal of the Chang family. Wooshuh (Shuh-sun Chow-k'ëw) called him thence, and asked him about fighting. He replied, "It is for men of rank to exercise their solicitude about what is distant; what can a small man [like me] know about it?" E-tsze (Mang-sun Ho-ke) insisted upon a reply, but he answered him, "A small man speaks according to his estimate of his ability, and contributes according to the measure of his strength.' Woo-shuh observed, "This is saying that we do not approve ourselves great men;" and with this he withdrew, and reviewed his chariots. Sech, the younger Mang, led the army of the right, with Yen Yu as his charioteer, and Ping Seeh as spearman on the right. Jen K'ëw led the army of the Lest, with Kwan Chow-foo as his charioteer, and Fan Chie (Ana. II. v., et al.) as spearman on the right. Re-sun said, "Seu (Fan Che) is too young," but Yëw-tsze (Yen K'èw) replied, "He can act according to his orders." Ke-she's men-at-arms amounted to 7,000, and Yen Ya selected 800 men of Woo-shing to attend himself on foot. The old and the young were left to defend the palace, and [the army of the Left] took post outside the Yu gate, where it was followed in 5 days by the army of the Right.

'Kung-shuh Woo-jin (a son of duke Ch'sou), when he saw the defenders [of the city], wept and said, "The duties are numerous, and the exactions are heavy. Our superiors are unable to form plans, and our officers are unable to dished wis it possible [in such circumstances] to regulate the people? I have said it, and must

I not do my utmost myself?"

'The armies fought with the army of Tse is the suburbs, the latter coming from Tseih-k'esh. The army [of the Left] would not cross a dich. Fan Ch'e said, "It is not that the men are unable to cross it; but they have not confidence in you. Please [gave notice that] in 3 quarters [of an hour] they must cross it." Yen K'ey did so, and they all followed him, and penetrated the army of Ts'e.

The army of the Right, however, took to the ht, and was pursued by the men of Ts'e. in Kwan and Ch'in Chwang crossed the Sze the pursuit]. Mang Che-tsih was the last enter [the city], and when it was thought the was defending the rear, he took an arwand whipt up his horses, saying, "They uld not advance (See Ana. VI. xiii.)." The in which Lin Puh-new was proposed to fly, the said, "For whom are we not a match?" hen," said the others, "shall we stay?" He wered, "That would not be an act of much rth." They then moved slowly away, and died.

The army [of the Left] captured 80 of the menarms, and the men of Ts'e could not keep their der. A spy brought word at night that their my was retreating, and Jen Yëw thrice asked we to pursue it, but Ke-sun would not permit in. The younger Mang said to some one, "I as not equal to Yen Yu, but I was better than ing Seeh. Taze-yu was full of spirit and mestness. I did not want to fight, but I could e silent. Seeh said, 'Give the reins to the one, [and flee].'"

'Kung-wei (Duke Ch'aou's son), and his faourite youth Wang E, both died, and were oth put into coffina.' Confucius said [of the outh], "As he could hold spear and shield in he defence of our altars, he may be buried without abatement of ceremonies because of his outh."

'Jen Yew used the spear against the army of he, and so was able to penetrate it. Confucius id, "That was righteous [courage]."'

According to the above narrative this must are been a very scrambling fight. Yet a battle here was, and we may be surprised that the ext does not say so. The advantage also was pon the whole with Loo, but neither, for some ason, did the sage think it proper to atate is. Twenty-one invasions of Loo are recorded the Classic, but only here and in par. 2 of the hyear is it simply said that 'So-and-so invadual.' In the other passages the border of Loo which the invasion was made is specified, he reason of the peculiar phraseology may be sat in both cases the enemy approached the spital itself, and attacked the very heart of the late.

Par. 2. For 轅 Kung-yang has 袁. The huen says:—'Before this, Yuen P'o, being inister of Instruction, levied a tax on the lands the State, to supply the [expenses of] marryg one of the duke's daughters; and there eing more than was necessary, he used the caldue to make some large articles for himself; n consequence of which the people drove him at of the State. Being thirsty on the way, one f his clan. Yuen Heuen, set before him rice, weet spirits, parched grain, and slices of dried piced meat." Delighted, he asked him how he ad such a supply, and Houen replied that he ad provided them when the articles were completed. "Why did you not remonstrate with ne?" said P'o. "I was afraid that, [if I did], I hould have to go first," was the reply.

Par. 8. The Chuen says:—'In consequence of the battle of the suburbs, the duke joined the riscount of Woo in invading Ts'e. In the 5th worth, they reduced Poli; and on Jin-shin, arrived at Ying. The army of the centre followed the king; Seu-mun Ch'aou (I. c., Chaou of the Seu gate) commanded the 1st army; and the king's son, Koo-te'aou, the 3d; while [on the part of Loo], Chen Joo commanded the army of the Right. On the side of Ts'e, Kwoh Shoo commanded the army of the centre; Kaou Woo-p'ei, the 1st army; and Tsung Low, the 3d.

'Ch'in He-tsze said to his younger brother Shoo, "You die, and I shall [then] get my will." Tsung Tsze-yang (Low) and Lew-k'ew Ming stimulated each other [to fight to the death]. Sang Yen-seu drove Kwoh-tsze (Kwoh Shoo), and the Kung-sun Hëa said to them, "You must both [be prepared to] die." When they were about to engage, Kung-sun Hëa ordered his men to sing the funeral song, and Chin Taze-hang ordered his to be provided with the gems for the mouth (Used in burying). Kung-sun Hwuy ordered each of his men to carry a string 8 cubits long, because the men of Woo wore their hair short. Tung Kwoh-shoo said, "In 8 battles a man is sure to die. This will be my third." He then sent his lute to Heen To with a message that he would not see him again. Ch'in Shoo said, "In this engagement I will hear the drum only (The signal for advance); I will not hear the gong (The signal for retreat)."

'On Këah-seuh, the battle was fought at Eling. Chen Joo defeated Kaou-tsze. Kwohtsze defeated Seu-mun Ch'aou; but the king then went to Ch'aou's help, and the army of Ts'e received a great defeat. Kwoh Shoo, Kungsun Hea, Lëw-k'ëw Ming, Ch'in Shoo, and Tung-kwoh Shoo, were all taken, along with 800 chariots of war, and 8000 men-at-arms; and these were all presented to the duke.

'Just as they were about to engage, the viscount of Woo called Woo-shuh to him, and asked him what duty he had to do. He replied, "Whatever the marshal orders." The viscount then gave him a buff-coat, a sword, and a long spear, saying, "Discharge your duty to your ruler. Be reverent, and do not neglect his commands." Shuh-sun was not able to reply; but Ts'ze of Wei (Tsze-kung) advanced to him, and said, "Chow-k'ew, take up the buff-coat, follow the viscount, and make your acknowledgments to him."

'The duke made the grand-historiographer Koo send back the head of Kwoh-tsze [to Ts'e]. It was placed in a new casket, iaid upon some folds of dark silk, with strings upon it. On the casket was written, "If Heaven had not known that he was not sincere, how should he have been sent to our inferior State?"'

[The Chuen appends here a narrative to show the danger that was threatening Woo amidst its apparent success:—'When Woo was about to attack Ts'e, the viscount of Yueh came with a large retinue to its court, and the king and all the officers about the court received gifts and bribes. The people of Woo were all delighted, but Tsze-seu was afraid, and said to himself that this was feeding Woo [for the shambles]. He then remonstrated, saying, "While Yuch exists, we have a disease in our vitals. Its land and ours are of the same character, and it has designs against us. By its mildness and submission it is trying to further those designs. Our best plan is first to take measures against it. You may get your will with Ts'e, but that is like getting a stony field, which can be of no use. If [the capital of] Yueh be not reduced to a lake, Woo will perish. There never was such a thing as employing a doctor to cure a disease, and telling him to leave some of it. In the Announcement of Pwan-kang it is said (Shoo, IV. vii. Pt. ii. 16), 'If there be those who are precipitously or carelessly disobedient to my orders, I will cut off their noses or exterminate them, and leave none of their children. I will not let them perpetuate their seed in this city." It was in this way that Shang rose to prosperity. You are now pursuing a different method; but will you not find it difficult to gain the greatness thereby for which you seek?"

"The viscount would not listen to him, and sent him on a mission to Ts'c. There he entrusted his son to the care of the Head of the Paou family, and changed his surname to Wang-sun. When the king heard of this, on his return from his expedition [against Ts'e], he caused the sword Chuh-leu to be given him to kill himself with. When he was about to die, he said, "Plant këa trees by my grave. The këa furnishes wood [for coffins]. Woo is likely [soon] to perish. In 3 years it will begin to be weak. When anything has reached its fulness, it is sure to go on to be overthrown. This is the was of Heaven."']

Par. 5. [The Chuen introduces a brief notice here:—'This autumn, Ke-sun gave orders to put all the defences of the State in good repair, saying, "When a small State vanquishes a great one, it is a calamity. Ts'e will be here any day."']

Par. 7. The Chuen says:—'In winter T'aeshuh Tsih (She-shuh Ts'e) of Wei fled from that State to Sung. Before this, Tsih had married a daughter of Tsze-chaou of Sung, but one of her cousins [who had followed her to the harem] But when Tsze-chaou left was his favourite. the State (probably in Gae's 2d year), K'ung Wan-tsze made Tsih put away his wife, and marry a daughter of his own. Tsih, however, made one of his attendants induce the cousin of Tsih's former wife to come to him, and placed her in Le, where he built a palace for her, so that he had, as it were, two wives. Wan-taze was angry, and wanted to attack him, but Confucius stopped him from doing this. However, he took his wife away. Tsih having an intrigue with some lady in Wae-chow, the people of that place took away from him his carriage by force, and presented it [to the marquis]. Disgraced by these two things he left the State. In Wei, they appointed [his brother] E in his place, and made him take K'ung K'eih (Wan-taze's daughter) as his wife.

'Tsili became [in Sung] an officer of Hëang Tuy, and presented him with a beautiful pearl, on which the [city of] Shing-ts'oo was given to him. The duke of Sung asked for the pearl, and Tuy, refusing to give it to him, was held to be an offender; and when he was obliged to leave the State, the people of Shing-ts'oo attacked T'ae-shuh Tsih. [After this], however, duke Chwang recalled him to Wei, and assigned him a residence in Ch'aou, where he died. He was coffined at Yun, and buried at Shaou-te.

'At an earlier period, when Yin, son of duke Taou of Tsin, became a refugee in Wei, he made his daughter drive his chariot when he went to hunt. Tae-shuh E-taze detained them to drink with him, and asked the lady in marriage. The fruit of their union was Taou-tage (Tsih). When he succeeded to his father (As minister), Hea Mow (Probably a son of Yin) was made a great officer; and when he fied from the State, the people of Wei deprived Mow of his city.

'When K'ung Wän-tsze was intending to attack T'ae-shuh, he consulted Chung-ne, who said to him, "I have learned all about sacrificial vessels, but I have not heard about buff-coats and weapons (Comp. Ana. XV.i.);" and on retiring, he ordered his carriage to be yoked, and prepared for his departure from the State, saying, "The bird chooses its tree; the tree does not choose the bird." Wän-tsze hurriedly endeavoured to detain him, saying, "How should I dare to be considering my private concerns? I was consulting you with reference to the troubles of the State." He was about to stay, when messengers from Loo arrived with offerings to invite him there, and he returned [to his native State].'

There is here appended a note about a project of Ke-sun's for a re-arrangement of the taxation of Loo: -- 'Ke-sun wanted to lay a tax upon the lands, and sent Jen Yew to ask Chung-ne about the subject, who replied that he did not know about it. This was his answer thrice given to inquiries pressed upon him. At last [Ke-sun sent] to say, "You are an old officer of the State. I am now waiting for your opinion to act;—how is it that you will not give expression to it?" Chung-ne gave no reply, but be said privately to Jen Yew, "The conduct of a superior man is governed by the rules of propriety. In his benefactions, he prefers to be liberal; in affairs [of government], he seeks to observe the right Mean; in his taxation, he tris According to this, the contributo be light. tion required by the k'ew ordinance (See of VIII. i. 4) is sufficient. If [Ke-sun] be not governed by the rules of propriety, but by a covetous daring and insatiableness, though be enact this taxation of the lands, it will still not be enough. If you and Ke-sun wish to set according to the laws, there are the statutes of the duke of Chow still existing. If you wish to act in an irregular manner, why do you coasult me?" XII. 1 In the [duke's] twelfth year, in spring, he imposed a tax upon the lands.

2 In summer, in the fifth month, on Këah-shin, Mang Tsze died.

3 The duke had a meeting with Woo in Toh-kaou.

4 In autumn, the duke had a meeting with the marquis of Wei and Hwang Yuen of Sung in Yun.

5 Hëang Ch'aou of Sung led a force, and invaded Ch'ing.

6 In winter, in the twelfth month, there were locusts.

Par. 1. It were to be wished that Tso-she had given us the particulars of this enactment; and the paragraph has been and is a locus vexutus to the critics. Kuh-lëang seems to think it was the exaction of a second tithe of the produce of the lands; but we have seen that that was required by duke Seuen in his 15th year (See on VII. xv. 8); and from the Ana. XII. ix., we learn that at this time the regular revenue of the government consisted of two tenths of the produce, of which Gae complained as being insufficient. Too thinks the new law was an alteration of the K'ew and buff-coat ordinance of duke Ching (See on VIII. i. 4), and he is probably correct; but whether it required 2 horses and 6 oxen instead of 1 horse and 3 oxen, as he thinks, we cannot tell. Indeed our information about Ch'ing's ordinance is far from being certain and exact. The distinction however, between and should here be pressed, the former denoting the general contribution of the produce of the land, and the latter the contribution for military purposes. The land was now burdened in some way with some contribution to the military levies of the State. The student may consult the E. Pt. II. ii. Art. 18, where there is another version of the narrative at the end of last year; but it does not throw light on the nature of the ordinance in the text.

Par. 2. This Mang Tsze had been the wife of duke Ch'aou; and should be mentioned as Mang Ke, and not Mang Tsze as if she had belonged to the House of Sung. From the Ana. VII. xxx., it appears that Ch'aou had himself called her 'Mang Tsze,' to conceal the offence which he had committed against the rules of propriety in marrying a lady of the same surname as himself. The historiographers and Confucius conceal the offence in the same way in the text. There is no record of her burial, because then it would have been necessary to give the surname, and the lie would have been more conspicuous than it is here; or it may be, as Tso-she seems to intimate, that Ke K'ang-tsze carried out his father's hostility to duke Ch'sou, and prevented the regular ceremonies from being observed at Miss Ke's burial.

The Chuen says:—'In the 5th month, Ming Taze, wife of duke Ch'aou, died. He had married a daughter of Woo, and therefore her [proper] surname is not given. Notice of her death was not sent to the various States, and therefore she is not called his "wife." The ceremony of weeping on returning from her burial was not observed, and therefore the burial of her as the duches is not recorded. Confucius was present at the ceremony of condolence, and [then] went to Ke-she's. Ke-she did not wear a mourning cap, on which Confucius put off his head-band, and so they bowed to each other.'

Par. 8. T'oh-kaou was a city of Woo,—60 k northwest from the pres. dis. city of Ch'son (E), dep. Leu-chow (E), Gan-hway. The Chuen says:—'At this meeting, the viscount of Woo sent his grand-administrator Pei to request that the covenant (Between Woo and Loo;—see on VIII. 2) might be renewed. The duke did not wish this, and sent Tsze-kung to reply, saying, "A covenant is for the confirmation of faith. Therefore its conditions are first determined according to the mind of the parties; gems and offerings of silk are presented with it [to the Spirits]; it is summarily expressed in words, and an appeal is made to the Spirits to bind it. Our ruler considers that, if a covenant be once made, it cannot be changed. If it can be changed, of what advantage would a covenant every day be? You now say that the covenant must be made hot again, but if it can be made hot, it may also be made cold." Accordingly the covenant was not renewed."

Par. 4. Yun was in Woo,—in the east of the pres. dis. of Joo-kaon, T'ung Chow () , Këang-soo.

The Chuen says:—'Woo summoned Wei to attend a meeting; but before this the people of Wei had put to death Tseu Yaou, a messenger of Woo, and they were now afraid. Consulting about the matter with Tsze-yu, a messenger of their own, he said, "Woo is now pursuing an unprincipled course, and is sure to disgrace our ruler. The best plan will be for him not to go." Tsze-muh, however, said, "Woo indeed is now pursuing an unprincipled course, but a State which does so is sure to vent its hatred on others. Although Woo have no principle, it is still able to distress Wei. Let [our ruler] go. When a tall tree falls, it strikes all within its range; when there is a mad dog in the city, he bites every body [whom he meets]; how much more will a great State, [like Woo, do violent things ]!"

'In autumn, the marquis of Wei had a meeting with Woo in Yun. The duke made a covenant [privately] with the marquis of Wei and Hwang Yuen; and in the end, they declined a covenant with Woo. The men of Woo having enclosed the encampment of the marquis of Wei, Tszefuh King-pih said to Taze-kung, "The princes have met and their business is completed. The presiding prince has discharged his ceremonies, and the lord of the ground has contributed his animals;—they have performed their complaisances to one another. But now Woo is not behaving with ceremony to Wei, and has enclosed the encampment of its ruler, putting him in difficulties. Why should you not go and see the grand-administrator about it?" [Taze-kung] accordingly asked for a packet of embroidered silks, and went to see the grandadministrator P'ei, making the conversation turn to the affair of Wel. Pei said, "My ruler wished to do service to the ruler of Wei, but the latter came to the meeting late. My ruler is afraid, and therefore intends to detain him." Tsze-kung said, "The ruler of Wei must have taken counsel about coming to the meeting with all his [officers]. Some of them would wish him to come, and others would object; and in this way his arrival was late. Those who wished him to come would be your partizans, and those who wished him not to come would be your enemies. If you seize the ruler of Wei, you will be overthrowing your partizans and exalting your enemies; and [thus] those who would overthrow you will get their will. Moreover, if, having assembled the States, you seize the ruler of Wei, what prince is there but will be frightened? Let me suggest that Woo will find it difficult to get the presidency of the States by overthrowing its partizans, exalting its enemies, and frightening the princes." The grand-administrator was pleased, marquis of Wei was in consequence let go. When he returned to Wei, he imitated the speech of the rude people of the east (I. e, of Woo). Tsze-che (The Kung-sun Me-mow, or Wän-tsze; (公孫獨牟,文子), who was still quite young, said, "The ruler will not escape [an evil fate]. He is likely to die among those eastern people. Though they seized him, he is pleased with their speech;—he must be firmly bent on following them."

Par. 5. The Chuen says:—'Between Sung and Ch'ing there was a tract of neutral ground [containing 6 hamlets], called Me-tsoh, Kingk'ëw, Yuh-ch'ang, Yen, Ko, and Yang, concerning which Tsze-ch'an and the people of Sung had made an agreement, that neither of them should have it. When the families descended from [dukes] Ping and Yuen of Sung fled from Seaou to Ching (In the 15th year of Ting), the people of Ching walled for them Yen, Ko, and Yang. [Now], in the 9th month, Hëang Ch'aou of Sung attacked Ching, took Yang, where he killed the grandson of duke Yuen, and then laid siege to Yen. In the 12th month, Han Tah of Ching proceeded to relieve Yen, and on Pingshin, he had the army of Sung surrounded in a State of siege.'

Maou is very doubtful of the accuracy of this narrative.

Par. 6. See II. vi. 8. The Chuen says:

—'Ke-sun asked Chung-ne about this phenomenon, who replied, "I have heard that when the Ho star no more appears, those insects are not to be found. But now the Ho star still appears descending to the west. The officers of the calendar must have made a mistake."'

Starting from this saying of Confucius, Too Yu makes it out that there had been an omission to insert an intercalary month this year, which would carry the 12th month back to the 9 month of Hea, when the Ho star ceased to appear; but there really could be no intercalation this year. Both the sage and Too themselves fell into The K'ang-he editors say, 'Tso-she error. gives here the words of Confucius, and Too-she considers that an intercalation was omitted. But at this time, within the space of two years, Log thrice sent notice to the other States of locusts, so that the plague of them must have been very great. In consequence of this many scholars have called in question Too's opinion, and we have preserved both their views and his."

- III. 1 In the [duke's] thirteenth year, Han Tah of Ch'ing, at the head of a force, captured the army of Sung at Yen.
  - 2 In summer, Ching, baron of Heu, died.
  - 3 The duke had a meeting with the marquis of Tsin and the viscount of Woo at Hwang-ch'e.
  - 4 The Kung-tsze Shin of Ts'oo led a force and invaded Ch'in.
  - 5 Yu-yueh entered [the capital of] Woo.
  - 6 In autumn, the duke arrived from the meeting at Hwang-ch'e.
  - Wei Man-to of Tsin, at the head of a force, made an incursion into Wei.
  - 8 There was the burial of duke Yuen of Heu.
  - 9 In the ninth month, there were locusts.
  - 10 In winter, in the eleventh month, a comet was seen in the east.
  - 11 A ruffian killed Hëa Gow-foo of Ch'in.
  - 12 In the twelfth month, there were locusts.

Par. 1. The Chuen continues here the nartive under par. 5 of last year, from which it prears that Han Tah had 'led his force' in the revious autumn. It may be therefore that le had led,' and not simply 'led' a force. 'This spring, Hëang Tuy of Sung endeavourto relieve the army [which was held in siege before Yen], but Tsze-ying (Han Tah) of Ching issued a proclamation, offering a reward to him who should take Hwan Tuy; and Tuy upon this withdrew and returned to Sung. [Han Tah] then captured the army of Sung at Yen, and took [its two leaders] Ching Hwan and Kuh Yen. [It was agreed] that the six hamlets should be neutral ground.' It would appear that Hëang Chiaou must have left the force, after laying siege to Yen the preceding autumn. If he had been now with it, his capture would have been specially mentioned.

Parr. 2, 8. See on XI. vi. 1. This baron Ching or duke Yuen must have been re-instated by Ts'oo. Kung-yang has A for 15.

Par. 3. We might translate 于黄龙, by 'near the pool of Hwang.' The place was in Wei,—in the southwest of the pres. dis. of Fung-k'ew (對丘), dep. K'ne-fung. Chuen says:—'In summer, the duke had a meeting with duke Ping of Shen, duke Ting of Tsin, and Foo-chine of Woo, at Hwang-chie.' There was thus a royal commissioner present at the meeting, and this may be the reason why we have Foo-ch'ae mentioned as 'the viscount of Woo.' Tob says, 'Foo-ch'se wished to take the leadeship of the States of the kingdom, and honour the son of Heaven: he therefore laid aside his usurped title [of king], and called himself "viscount" in sending his notices and orders to the various States; and it was thus that the historiographers received and wrote the title.' See further on the narrative appended to par. 5.

Par. 4. Under the last par. of the 10th year, it seemed to be agreed upon by Ts'oo and Woo that Ch'in should be left alone. Ts'oo, however, now takes advantage of Woo's being engaged in the north to attack Ch'in.

Par. 5. Here Yueh repays, and more than repays, Woo for its defeat at Foo-tseaou;—see the narrative after the 2d par. of the 1st year. The Chuen says:—'In the 6th month, on Ping-tsze, the viscount of Yueh invaded Woo by two ways. Ch'ow Woo-yu and Gow Yang, coming [on land from the south, arrived at the suburbs of the capital first, and were observed by Yew, the heir-son of Woo, the king's son Te, the Wangsun Me-yung, and Show Yu-yaou from [a height near] the Hung. Me-yung, seeing the flag of [the men of ] Koo-mëeh, said, "There's my father's flag. I must not see those enemies [who slew him], and not slay them." The heirson said, "If we fight and do not gain the victory, we shall cause the ruin of the State. Please let us wait." Me-yung. however, would not do so, and collected his followers, amounting to 5,000 men. The king's son Te assisted him; and on Yih-yew they fought a battle, when Me-yung captured Ch'ow Woo-yu, and Te captured Gow Yang. The viscount of Yueh, however, arrived soon after. Te then remained in the city to defend it, but another battle was fought on Ping-seuh, when the viscount inflicted a great defeat on the army of Woo, and captured the heir-son Yew, the Wang-sun Meyung, and Show Yu-yaou. On Ting-hae, he entered the capital. The people of Woo sent information of their defeat to the king, who so disliked the intelligence, that he himself cut the threats of 7 men about his tent (To prevent their spreading the news).

The Chuen now gives the sequel of par. 3.—
'In autumn, in the 7th month, on Sin-ch'ow, a covenant was made, when Woo and Tsin disputed about the precedence. They said on the side of Woo, "In relation to the House of Chow, we are the eldest branch (As being descended from T'ae-pih, see Ana. VIII. i.)." On the side of Tsin they said. "We have the presidency of all the Kes." Chaou Yang called the marshal Yin to him, and said, "The day is declining, and this great matter is not yet settled; it is the fault of us two. Set up the drums, and put the ranks in order. We will die in the struggle, and the right and the wrong (lit; the old and the young) shall be clearly known." The marshal begged Yang to let him go in the meantime and see the viscount. When he returned, he said, "Those who eat flesh should have no black [under their eyes]. But now the king of Woo has such blackness. Has his capital been conquered? Or has his eldest son died? Moreover, the nature of those eastern tribes is light; they cannot hold out long. Let us walt a little for their decision." Accordingly [Woo] gave precedence to Tsin.

'The people of Woo wanted to go with the duke and present him to the marquis of Tsin, but Tsze-fuh King-pih replied to their messenger, "When the king assembles the States, the leading prince conducts the other princes and pastors to present them to him. When a leading prince assembles the States then the [pastor-] marquis leads the viscounts and barons and presents them to him. From the king down, the symbols of jade and offerings of silk at the court and complimentary visits to other States are different. Hence the contributions of our poor States to Woo are larger [now] than to Tsin, embracing everything, because we consider [the lord of Wov] to be the leading prince. The States are now assembled, and your ruler wishes to present ours to the ruler of Tsin, whose position as the ruling prince will thus be settled. Our State must change its contributions. The levies with which Loo follows Woo are 800 chariots. If our ruler be reduced to the rank of a viscount or baron, then he will follow Woo with half the levies of Choo, and do service to Tsin with [an amount equal to] the whole levies of Chou Moreover, your officers called the States to this meeting by the authority of the leading prince; if you end it by taking the position of a marquisate, what advantage have you?" The people of Woo on this desisted from their purpose; but afterwards they repented that they had done so, and were going to imprison king-pinwho said, "I have appointed my successor in Loo. I will follow you with two chariots and six men. Let it be sooner or later according # you command." They were then returning with him as a prisoner, but when they got to Hoo-yew, he said to the grand-administrator, "Loo has a sacrifice on the first Sin-day of the 10th month to God and the ancient kings, which is finished on the last Sin-day, and at which I have duties to perform, hereditary in my family. There has been no change in them since the time of [duke] Seang. If I am not present, the priests and temple-keeper will say to the Spirits that Woo is the cause of M absence. Suppose, moreover, that Loo has behaved disrespectfully, what loss does it sustain in your holding seven individuals who are a small-rank in it?" The grand-administrator represented to the king that their prisoners were no loss to Loo, and only gave themselves a [bad] name, so that they had better send them back; and they accordingly sent King-pih back.'

descended from Tae-pih, see Ana. VIII. i.)." Shin Shuh-e (Of Woo) begged some food On the side of Tsin they said, "We have the from Kung-sun Yew-shan (Of Loo), saying, cones for my girdle I have, all complete, ut no girdle to which I can tie them; and a vessel of spirits clear and sweet, at with this hair-clad man I but eye them."

than replied, "I have no [good] millet, but some coarse. If you get up mount Show, y out, Kang, Kwei! then I will do what you

e king wanted to attack Sung, and to put des to death, and take its women prisoners. rand-administrator, P'ei, said, "You may ish [Sung], but you cannot occupy it." dingly they returned to Woo.'

Chuen says that at this meeting and ant the precedence was given to Tsin, and text would seem to say,一公會晉侯 是子. Kung-yang, however, says that presided over the meeting (主會), and chapter about Woo, in the Hill, or atives of the States (Bk. VII. art. 7),' it ressly said that 'the duke of Woo took the lence at the covenant (吳公先歃, 美亞之),' to which Tsin was obliged to at by a demonstration of an intention to ed to hostilities on the part of Woo, Tsin ig over its humiliation by getting the visto give up for the time his assumed title

: K'ang-he editors say on the subject, er scholars have taken different sides on uestion, some agreeing with Tso-she, and with the Narratives of Woo. If we conthe case of the covenant of Sung, how, Tsin was still in the possession of its th, it yet conceded the precedence to Ta'oo, ears reasonable to say that Ting of Tsin not now take precedence of Woo. But when we consider how, while Woo was at seeting, news was brought to the king of the r the State was in from Yueh, and how in larm he cut the throats of 7 men who ht the news, it also appears reasonable to sat, with such a reason for apprehension, uld not dare to contest the precedence any . There is a connexion in the narrative Ch'un Ts'ëw, and it appears to be matter t. The view of Chaou K'wang, that Woo sin met on equal terms, just as when host | either really nameless, or purposely left so.

and guest now drink to each other, so that the historians of Tsin represented that Tsin had the precedence, while those of Woo assigned it to Woo, each side supporting its own ruler, seems also to be reasonable; and we therefore give it a place.' I do not think that there are sufficient grounds for a positive decision in the matter. The meeting was, no doubt, called by Woo, as assuming to take the lead in the States; but the intelligence of the invasion by Yueh may have emboldened Tsin to claim the precedence at the covenant, and obliged Woo to yield it.

As to the question about the title, 'viscount of Woo,' in the text, no doubt that was the title used on this occasion by the chief of that State, as he had got the royal sanction for calling the princes together. Still, we find the 'viscount of Woo' in previous paragraphs;—see XI. iv. 14, et al.

Par. 7. Kung-yang leaves out the pin the name. 'Tsin,' says Heu Han, 'could now do nothing more than "make incursions." Its prestige was gone. The three great families in it were eager only for their own advantage, and careless of the common weal or glory of the State.

Parr. 9, 12. See on the last par. of last year. Wang Taou proposes to transfer to the 12th par. of this year the Chuen which appears there. 'There was,' he says, 'an intercalary month this year, so that the 12th month of Chow was the 9th month of Hea, and the He star had not disappeared from the heavens. Bring that narrative to its proper place, and all doubts are resolved. Confucius might correctly say that the Ho star was still in the west, for there it was. The officers of the calendar might make a mistake; but he did not do so.'

Par. 10. 星学,—see VI. xiv. 5; X. xvii. 5. In those two passages we have the constellation or space of the heavens where the comet appeared specified. There being no such specification here, but only that it was in the eastern quarter, is taken as a proof that it was visible in the morn-Many scholars tell us that its appearance in the east portended the approaching downfall of Woo, the great eastern Power.

Par. 11. Kung-yang has din for . None of the Chuen give any particulars of this event. It is the 4th instance which we have in the text of a death perpetrated by the hands of ruffiana,

In the [duke's] fourteenth year, in spring, [some] hunters in the west captured a lin.

The Chara cays:—'This spring, they were hunting westwards in Ta-yay, and Ts-on-chang, one of Shuh-our's waggeners, captured a lin. Thinking the thing was insuspicious, begave [the creature] to the forester. Chang-ne went to see it and said, "It is a lin;" on which they took it, [and carried it away to the capital].'

The Chuen enables us to determine the Min the text as meaning the west of Lon. Taysy was the name of a marsh,—in the pres. dis. of Ken-yay (Min Min), dep. To'mon-chow. Min is the name of the winter hunt, used here appropriately, because the greater portion of the spring of Chow was really in the natural winter, or that of Hön. The winter hunt was such a regular thing, that we can suppose it to be mentioned here only because of the unusual discussioned here only because of the incineral

The finding of this lin has so important a place in the accounts of the composition of the Chrun Tarêw, that it may be well to give here the account of it, which we find in the 'Parally Sayings, or as we may term the work, 'The spocryphal Analects; the more especially as it agrees a good deal with what we find in Knng-yang, -- 'A waggoner of Shuh-sun's, Taxe-twoo-chang, was gathering firewood in Ta-yay, when he found a lin. Having broken its fore left leg, he carried it home with him in a carriage. Shuh-sun thinking it inauspicious, threw it away outside the suburbs, and sent a messenger to tell Confucius of it, saying, "What is it? It is an antelope and horned." Confucius went to see it, and said, "It is a ha. Why has it come? Why has it come?" He took the back of his sleeve and wiped his face, while his tears wet the lapel of his coat. When Shuh-sun heard what it was, he sent and had it brought [to the city]. Tsze-kung asked the master why he wept, and Confucius said, "The lia comes [only] when there is an intelligent king. Now it has appeared when it is not the time for it to do so, and it has been injured. This is why I was so much affected."' See the 家語, at the end of the 16th chapter. #### 孔子日·麟之至。為明王也 出非其時·面見害吾是以 傷意)

What was the lin? The earliest meation d it is in the She, I, i, ade XI, where the sons of king Wan are compared to its feet, its forebead, and its horn; but neither there, nor anywhen else in the classics, is there a description of it, by which we might be able to identify it. The Urh-ya describes it as having the body of an antelope, the tail of an ox, and one horn. The Shwoh-wan, the earliest dictionary, published A.B. 100, says, 'The k'e-lin ( ; k'e is the name of the male, and his that of the female) is a benevolent animal, having a horse's body, an ox's tail, and a horn of flesh." As early as the beginning of the Christian era, the lin had thus become the name of a fabulous animal. Later accounts, as we might expect, improve on the Urh-ya and Shwoh-wan. See Medhurst on the character Williams says, 'Lin,-the female of the unicura. The idea of the Chinese unicorn may have been derived from a one-homed Tibetan equine animal.'

All this does not help us to a satisfactory answer to the question of what the lin was. We may be sure there never was such an animal as the lexicographers and scholars of China describe and delight to dwell upon. If Confacins saw any animal at all, we can only suppose it was some sort of antelope, uncommon in Los. For my part, I doubt whether this paragraph be from him at all.

The importance attaching to it arises from the circumstance that with it the Ch'un Triw, so far as it is the work of Confucius, is all but universally believed to terminate. The editions by Kung-yang and Kuh-lëang, indeed, end with this; but Tso-she continued his labours on to the 4th year of duke Taou, who followed Gae; and up to the day Ke-ch'ow of the 4th month of Gae's 16th year, the regular form of all the preceding annals is preserved, the disciples having digested, it is said, the records of Loo, as their master had done, down to the day of his death, and Tso-she continuing his labours on them, and on subsequent years in his own fashion. Having determined to translate all of Tso-she's collections in this work, I proceed to The difference between the disciples' supplement and the previous text will be marked by the small type of the original and the translation.

A few remarks are still necessary on the connexion which has been and is maintained between the appearance of the lin, and the composition of the text. Confucius, say Too and a host of followers, was so impressed by seeing the lin, that he immediately formed the purpose to compile the Ch'un Ts'ëw. Ho Hëw, the glossarist of Kung-yang, followed also by many others, says that he had finished the work to the end of Gae's 13th year, and abandoned his stylus, when he saw the lin. Both sides have nothing but their own conjectures to go upon. The K'ang-he editors intimate their dissent from the former view, and quote with not dare to pronounce any decision whether it was the completion of the book which moved the in to come, or whether it was the appearance of the lin which moved Confucius to compose the book. It may, indeed, be presumed, that the appearance of the creature at a time not proper for it, and its then being killed, was altogether an inauspicious thing; and if the sage then laid his stylus aside, we may be asapprobation the opinion of Choo He:- 'I do sured he meant thereby to intimate something!'

- XIV. 2 Yih of Little Choo came a fugitive to Loo, transferring to it [the city of] Kow-yih.
  - 8 In summer, in the fourth month, Ch'in Hang seized his ruler, and placed him in Shoo-chow.
  - 4 On Käng-seuh, Shuh Seuen died.
  - In the fifth month, on Kang-shin, the first day of the moon, the sun was eclipsed.
  - 6 Tsung Shoo of Ch'in fled from that State to Ts'oo.
  - 7 Hëang Tuy of Sung entered Ts'aou, and held it in revolt.
  - 8 King, viscount of Keu, died.
  - 9 In the sixth month, Hëang Tuy of Sung fled from Ts'aou to Wei; and Hëang Ch'aou of Sung came a fugitive to Loo.
  - 10 The people of Ts'e murdered their ruler Jin in Shoo-chow.
  - 11 In autumn, Chaou Yang of Tsin led a force, and invaded Wei.
  - 12 In the eighth month, on Sin-ch'ow, Chung sun Ho-ke died.
  - 13 In winter, Tsung Shoo of Ch'in entered Ch'in again from Ts'oo, and the people of Ch'in put him to death.
  - 14 Yuen Mae of Chin fled from that State to Ts'oo.
  - 15 There was a comet.
  - 16 There was famine.

Par. 2. Kow-yih,—see on XII. 1. Too gives it there as belonging to Choo, while here we have Yih of Little Choo betraying or surrendering it to Loo. We can easily suppose that, during the troubles through which Choo had passed since the 2d year of Gae, Little Choo had managed to appropriate this place.

The Chuen says:—'When Yih came a refugee, offering to surrender Kow-yih, he said, "Send Tsze-loo to make an agreement with me; I will have no covenant." It was proposed to Tsze-loo that he should go, but he refused. Ke K'ang-tsze then sent Jen Yew to say to him, "Why should you think the thing a disgrace to you, since he will put confidence in your words, while he will not do so in a covenant with our State of 1000 chariots?" Tsze-loo replied, "If Loo have hostilities with Little Choo, I will die before its capital, without presuming to ask any questions about the cause of the quarrel. But Yih is acting a traitor's part, and to give effect to his words would be to treat him as if he were righteous. I cannot do it."

Par. 8. A ppears in the 'Historical Records' as A. It was a city of Ts'e, in the south-east of the pres. dis. of Tang, dep. Yen-chow.

The Chuen says:—'When duke Keen of Ts'e was in Loo (He was, then, simply Jin, the son of Yang-sang; see on XI. 9, et al.), K'an Che became a favourite with him; and when he succeeded to the State, he employed Che as his chief minister. Ch'in Ch'ing-tsze (Ch'in Hang) was afraid of him, and was constantly turning his head round to look at him in the court. Yang, [chief of] the charioteers, said to the duke, "Ch'in and K'an cannot continue together.

You must choose between them." The dake, however, did not listen to him.

'When Taze-go (K'an Che) was going his rounds at night, he met Ch'in Yih (The Taze-hing of the battle of I-ling, XI. 2) who had killed a man, seized him, and carried him into [the court]. At the time the Ch'in-clan was all harmonious, so that [the chief] made Yih say that he was ill, and sent rice water to wash his head with, and at the same time spirits and mest. With the latter he feasted his keeper, made him drunk, killed him, and effected his escape; and upon this Taze-go imposed a covenant with the Ch'in in the house of one of their priscipal elders.

'Before this, Ch'in P'aou had wished to get a office under Tsze-go, and had employed one of the Kung-suns to speak for him. A death taking place in his family, the thing was stopped for a time, but afterwards the Kung-sun said to Tsze-go, "There is Chin Piaou, tall but humpbacked, with a look to the sky. If he serve you, you are sure to be pleased with him. He wishes to be an officer with you, but I have been afraid of the man, and delayed informing you of his wish." "What harm can he do?" said Tsze-go; "he will be at my disposal." Accordingly he employed him as one of his offcers. Before long, he talked with P'aou about [the affairs of] the government, and being pleased with him, made him a favourite. [Une day] he asked him what he thought of his driving out Chin-she and his adherents, and getting him appointed in his place. P'aou replied, "My connexion with Chin-she is remote, and they who are opposed to you are only a few individuals; why should you drive them all out?" He then informed Ch'in-she [of what Trze-go was intending], when Tsze-hang (Ch'in Yih) said, "He has got the ruler. If you do not take the initiative, he will bring calamity on you." Tsze-hang then took up his quarters [privately] in the duke's palace.

'In summer, in the 5th month, on Jin-shin, Ching-taze and his brothers went in 4 chariots to the duke's. Tsze-go was in his tent (His office), and came out to meet them, but they entered the palace, and shut the door [against him]. [One of] the attendants attempted to withstand them, but he was killed by Tsze-hang. The duke and his wife were drinking in the Tan tower, but Ching-taze removed him to the [state-] chamber. duke laid hold of a spear, intending to strike him with it, but Tsze-yu, the grand-historiographer said, "There is nothing intended injurious to you. He means to remove all harm from you." Ching-tsze then quitted the palace, and took up his quarters in the treasury. Hearing there that the duke was still enraged, he proposed leaving the State, saying, "Where shall I not find a ruler?" but Tsze-hang drew his sword, and said, "Delay is the thief of business. Who is there that is not to be regarded as belonging to the Ch'in clan? By the ancestors of the Chin I will kill you, [if you go]." On this Ching-tsze stopped.

'Tsze-go returned home, and collected his followers, with whom he attacked the great gate and a small gate of the palace. Unsuccessful in both attempts, he left the city and was pursued by Chin-she, when he lost his way in a parrow pass, and went to Fung-k'ew, the people of which seized him, and informed [Chin-she of the capture] and he was then put to death at the Kwoh barrier-gate. Chring-taze was about to put to death Tsze-fang of Ta-luh, but Ch'in In interceded for him, and his life was spared. He then, as if by the duke's orders, took a carrage which was on the road, and drove off; but when he had got to Urh the people all knew the truth, on which he turned to the east, and lest the city by the Yung gate. Chin Piaou offered him a carriage, but he would not receive It, saying, "Yin interceded for my life, and Paou would now give me a carriage;—as if I had a private understanding with them. Having served Taze-go, if I should have a private understanding with his enemy, how should I be able to see the officers of Loo and Wei?" Tungwoh Këa (Tsze-fang) then fled to Wei.

'On Kang-shin, Ch'in Hang confined the duke in Shoo-chow, when the duke said, "If I had followed early the advice of Yang, I should not have come to this."'

Parr. 7, 9. Sung had extinguished the State of Ts'aou in the spring of Gae's 8th year, so that its capital was now only a city of Sung. Heang Tuy, it has been observed before, was the same as the Hwan Tuy of the Ana. VII. xxii., a younger brother of Heang Ch'aou, whose name has occurred recently several times. The Heangs of Sung were all Hwans, as being descended from duke Hwan, whose death is mentioned in V. ix. 1. One of his sons was called Heang-foo Heih ( ), and from him came the Heang clan, one of his grandsons, Heang Seuh, playing, as we saw, a very considerable part in public affairs in the time of duke Scang.

The Chuen here says:—'The favour which was shown to Hwan Tuy of Sung proved injurious to the duke, who purposed to take Tuy off, and with that object made the duchess [-dowager] frequently invite him. Before he could execute his purpose, however, Tuy took the initiative by plotting against the duke, and asked that [his city of ] Gan might be exchanged for Poh. This the duke refused, on the ground that he had an ancestral temple at Poh, but he added to Gan seven [other adjacent] towns, on which Tuy invited the duke to an entertainment there. The time was to be at mid-day, and Tuy brought to the place all the men-at-arms of his family. The duke got knowledge of this, and informed Hwang Yay of it, saying, "I have cherished Tuy, and now he is going to do evil. Let me ask your immediate help." The marshal Tsze-chung (Yny) replied, "An insubordinate subject is hated by spiritual Beings; how much more must he be so by men! How should I presume not to obey your command? But it is necessary that we should get the aid of the master of the Left (Ch'aou, Tuy's elder brother). Let me call him here by an order from you." Now, whenever the master of the Left was going to take a meal, he had a bell struck; and [just then] they heard the sound of it. "He is going to his meal," said the duke. After the meal, they heard the music strike up [again], and the duke said, "Now you can go." Yay then drove to the master, and said, "The tracers have come with word that there are [some] large deer at the Fung marsh, and the duke said to me, "Although Tuy has not come yet, what would you say to getting the master of the Left, and hunting them with him?" He shrank, however, from sending you word, and I resolved to try and get you to go myself. The duke is in haste, and I came for you in my carriage." The master got into the carriage with him; and when they arrived [at the palace], the duke told him the whole affair, on which he prostrated himself, and was unable to rise up. "Speak to him," said the marshal; and the duke swore by Heaven above, and by [the Spirits of] the dukes, his predecessors, that he would not injure him. The master then replied, "The insubordination of Tuy is a calamity to Sung. I will not presume not to be entirely obedient to your orders." The marshal then asked from him his symbol of office, and proceeded with it to order his followers to attack Hwan-she. The elders of the clan and old officers objected, but the new officers said that they would obey the orders of their ruler. Accordingly they attacked the mansion. Tsze-k'e darhed off in a chariot to inform Tuy, who wished to enter the city. Tsze-keu, however, stopped him, saying, "You have been unable to serve the ruler, and would now attack the capital;—the people will not be with you, and you would only invite your death." He then entered Tstaou, and held it in revolt.

'In the 6th month, Ch'aou, master of the Left, was sent to attack Ts'aou; and [being unsuccessful], he wished to get some of the great officers as hostages [for his safety] before he would [re-] enter [the capital]. Not being able to do this, he also entered Ts'aou, and seized some people there to hold as hostages. Tuy said to him "You should not do that. We have not been able to serve our ruler; and if we also trespass against the people, what shall we do?" On this he let them go, and then the people revolted from them, on which Tuy fled to Wei, and Ch'aou to us in Loo. The duke of Sung sent to stop the latter, saying, "I made an engagement with you. I will not extinguish the sacrifices of the Hëang family." Ch'aou however, declined to return, and said, "My offence is great, and would justify you in extinguishing the family of Hwan. If from regard to my fathers, you suffer the family to be perpetuated, it will be an act of your kindness; but as for me, I cannot enter Sung." Sze-ma Nëw (A brother of Tuy and Ch'aou, and a disciple of Confucius ; see Ana. XII. iii., iv., v.) surrendered his city and badge of authority, and went to Ts'e. As Tuy was quitting the territory of Wei, the chief of the Kung-wan family attacked him, and asked from him the hwang-gem of the sovereigns of Hës. Tuy gave him a different gem, and fled to Ts'e, where Ch'in Ch'ing-tsze appointed him a minister of inferior rank, on which New gave back the city [which he had received in Ts'e], and went to Woo. The people of Woo hating him, he came back from that State, and received invitations from Chaou Këen-tsze and Ch'in Ch'ing-tsze; but he died outside the gate of the suburbs of the capital of Loo, and was buried by K'ang-she at K'ëw-yu.'

Par. 10. Continuing the narrative under par. 8. the Chuen here says:—'On Këah-woo, Chin Pang of Ts'e mur lered his ruler Jin in Shooclow. K'ung K'ëw fasted 8 days, and then begged [the duke] that he would invade Ts'e. Thrice he made the request, and the duke said, "Loo has long been kept in a state of weakness by Ts'e, If we should invade Ts'e, as you [propose], what could we do?" K'ung K'ëw replied, "There are one half of the people of Ts'e who do not agree with Ch'in Hang in his murder of his ruler. If with all the force of Loo we attack one half of that of Ts'e, we shall conquer it." The duke asked him to lay the matter before Ke-sun, but Confucius declined to do that, retired, and said to some one, l

"Having followed in the rear of the great officers, I did not dare not to speak of such a matter."

See in the Ana., XIV. xxii., an account of the conduct of Confucius on this occasion, somewhat different from that which the Chuen gives here.

The House of T'een (H) is represented by many historians as from this year the ruling House of Ts'e. The Chuen on III xxii & mentions how the Kung-teze Hwan (元) d Ch'in, styled King-chung, (故神) took refuge in Ts'e, and the Historical Records say that he adopted the clan-name of T'ēen (田 民); though in Tso-she his descendants always appear as Ch'ins ( ). A brother of duke Keen sominally succeeded to him as marquis of Ts'e, and the House of Këang was represented till B.C. 890, when Ho, (天11), a great-grandson of Ch'in or T'ëen Hang put an end to the farce, and was acknowledged by king Gan, in B.C. 885, as ruler of Ts'e.

The Chuen says:— Before this, [Ho-ke's] son Mang Seeh was going to keep his horses in Ching, but the Kung-sun Sah, commandant of Ching, refused to admit him, saying, 'Mang-sun does nothing but distress Ch'ing. We will not keep his horses for him." The young man in a rage surprised the place; but his followers not being able to enter it, he returned. An officer was sent from Ching [to explain the circumstances, but the young cher had him scourged. In autumn, in the 8th month, on Sin-ch'ow, when Mang E-taze died, officers of Ching hurried to be present at the death-rites, but they were not admitted; and they wept in the street, with sackcloth on their heads and the upper part of their bodies bare, wanting to be allowed to take part in the services, which was not accorded to them. They were afraid in consequence to return to Ching.'

Parr. 2—6. [Tso-she introduces here two narratives:—

1st.' In summer, Tsze-se and Tsze-k'e of Ts'oo invaded Woo, as far as the bend of the Tung. The marquis of Ch'in sent condolences on the occasion to Woo by the Kung-sun Ching-tsze, who died on the way at Leang. [The assistantcommissioner] proposed to proceed with his body to the court of Woo, but the viscount sent the grand-administrator Pei to present to him the customary offerings and messages on the toils of his journey, and to decline [his further progress], saying, "Considering the unseasonable rise of the waters, it is to be feared they will toss about and overwhelm the body of the commissioner, and thereby increase the sorrow of my ruler. He therefore ventures to decline the further progress of your excellency." The Woo-director, Kae (Being the assistant-commissioner), replied, "My ruler having heard of the unreasonable conduct of Ts'oo in repeating its invasions of Woo, and destroying your people, appointed me assistant in this mission, to condole with the officers of your ruler. Unfortunately, the [chief-] commissioner encountered the anger of Heaven. so that our great business fell [for a time] to the ground, and he took his leave of the world at Leang. Some days have been lost in collecting what was necessary for his remains, but a day hence I should have advanced to another station. But now your ruler's orders have met me, telling me not to approach with the body to his gate;—my ruler's commission must thus be thrown away among the grass. I have heard, however, that it is a rule of propriety to serve when dead as we serve when living. Hence there is the rule, that if [a commissioner] dies when engaged on a court or a complimentary visit, the husiness should be discharged with his corpse, and also there is the rule about the course to be pursued when the death occurs of him to whom the visit is being made. If now I do not accomplish the mission with the body. I shall return as if the death [of your ruler] had taken place;—which surely would be improper. The use of the rule serves to prevent people's indifference, though they may still sometimes transgress it; but now your Excellency says, 'He is dead, and you may neglect it:'—this is to put the rule away. How can your ruler thus become lord of the States? The ancients had the saying, 'Inflict no stain on a deceased officer.' I, the assistant-commissioner, propose to carry my chief's body to discharge his commission. If the commission of our ruler can only reach your ruler's place, although [the body] should fall into the deep gulf, it will be the doing of Heaven, and through no fault of your ruler or of the ferry-men." Upon this the people of Woo received K'ae, [44 he proposed].'

2d.' In autumn, Ch'in Kwan of Ts'e passed by [the capital of] Wei on his way to Ts'oo, when Chung Yëw (Tsze-loo) went to see him, and said, 'Heaven perhaps is using Ch'in-she as its axe. He has cut down the ducal House of Ts'e, but we cannot know whether some other man may not possess it. Nor can we know whether he shall not in the end enjoy it himself. Would it not be well to treat Loo well, and wait for the time [to come]? Why should you show hatred to it?" Tsze-yuh (Ch'in Kwan) said, "Yes. I have received your orders. Do you send some one to lay the thing before my brother (Ch'in Hang, or Ch'ing-tsze)."?]

Par. 7. The Chuen says:—'In winter, we made peace with Ts'e, and Tsze-fuh King-pih went to that State, with Tsze-kung as assistant-commissioner. The latter went to see the Kungsun Ch'ing (Who had been commandant of Ch'ing), and said to him, "All men who are in the service of others [should be faithful], but they [often] show a talse heart; how much more may the people of Ts'e, though they are [for the present] doing service to you, be expected to play double! You are a descendant of the duke of Chow, and enjoyed great advantages [in Loo], but still your thoughts have been on unrighteousness. Why have you adopted such a course as is likely to ruin the State of your ancestors, when you could not get an advantage [which you desired]?" Ch'ing replied, "Good! Alas that I did not earlier hear your instructions!"

'Ch'in Ch'ing-tsze assigned their lodging to the guests, and said to them, "My ruler has sent me to say to you that he wishes to do service to your ruler as he has done to the ruler of Wei." King-pih made a sign to Tsze-kung to advance and reply, which he did, saying, "This is the desire of our ruler. Formerly, when the people of Tsin invaded Wei (In the 8th year of Ting), Ts'e on account of Wei attacked [the city] Kwan-she of Tsin, and lost 500 chariots. Notwithstanding, it made a grant of territory to Wei, and assigned it in writing 12,500 families on the west of the Tse, and the south of Choh, Me, and Hang. When the people of Woo attacked our poor State (In Gae's 8th year), Ta'e took advantage of our distress to take Hwan and Shen; in consequence of which our ruler became cold to it. If indeed you will deal with him as you have dealt with the ruler of Wei, this is what we desire." Ching-tsze was pinched by this address, and restored Ching, on which Kung-sun Suh (1. q. Kung-sun Ch'ing) entered Ying with his military stores.'

[Tso-she here relates a revolution in Wei, and the death of Tsze-loo:—'K'ung Yu of Wei (See XI. iv. 12) married an elder sister of Kwae-wae (See II. 5, et al.), the eldest son of the marquis, by whom he had a son, Kwei. His attendant, Hwan Leang-foo, was tall and handsome, and after the death of Wan-tsze (Yu) had an intrigue with his mistress. When her brother was in Ts'eih (II. 5), she sent this Lëang-foo to him, and the prince then said to him, "If you can bring it about that I enter the capital and get the State, you shall have the cap and the carriage of a great officer, and 3 capital offences shall be forgiven you." They covenanted together, and the attendant made request for the other to Pih-ke (The lady).

'In the intercalary month, Lëang-foo and the prince entered the capital, and stopped in an outer orchard of the K'ung family. At night, disguised as women, they were driven by a cunuch to the house. The steward Lwan Ning asked who they were, and admitted them on being told that they were ladies related to the family. They then went to the apartments of Pih-ke; and, when they had eaten, that lady went before, carrying a spear, and followed by the prince and 5 men-at-arms, and [two men carrying] a pig. They found K'ung Kwei in the privy, and there forced him to make a covenant with the prince, after which they violently carried him up into a tower. Lwan Ning was making ready to drink; but before the meat was fully roasted, he heard of the revolution which was being made, and sent information of it to Ke-tsze (Tsze-loo). [At the same time], Shaou Hwoh had the horses put to a carriage, sent the cup round, partook of roast meat, and then carried off Cheh, the marquis of Wei, with him to Loo for refuge. Ke-tsze was going to enter the city, when he met Tsze-kaou (Also a disciple of Confucius; see Ana., XI. xxiv.) about to leave it, who said to him, "The gate is shut." "But I wish to try to go there," replied Ke-tsze. "It was not your doing," said Tsze-kaou; "you need not share in the chief's misfortunes." "I have eaten his pay," rejoined the other, "and I will not try to escape from his difficulties." Tsze-kaou then quitted the city, and Tsze-loo entered it. When he got to the gate of the K'ung family, Kung-sun K'an was keeping it, and told him that he could not enter. Ke-tsze said, "You are a grandson of a former duke. You seek what gain you can get, and shrink from encountering the difficulties of the State. I am not such an one. Having got the benefit of the pay of the State, I will try to save it in its difficulties." Just then a messenger came out at the gate, and Tsze-loo "Of what good," said he, "is it for entered. the prince to deal thus with K'ung Kwei? Though you put him to death, there will be some one to continue [his duty to the State]." He also said, "The prince has no courage. we burn half the tower, he is sure to let K'ung Shuh go." When the prince heard this, he was afraid, and sent down Shih K'eih and Yu Yen to resist Tsze-loo, whom they struck with their spears, cutting also the strings of his cap-"The superior man," said he, "does not let his cap fall to the ground when he dies;" and with this he tied the strings again and died.

'When Confucius heard of the disorder in Wei, he said, "Ch'ae will come [here safe]; but Yëw will die." (Comp. Ana., XI. xii.)" K'ung Kwei then raised duke Chwang (Kwaewae) to the marquisate. He did what harm he could to the old ministers, and wanted to remove them all. He began by saying to Mwan Ch'ing, the minister of Instruction, "I have had long experience of distress abroad. Do you now make a trial of it." Ch'ing retired, and communicated this to Pe, superintendent of the market, and wished with him to attack the duke. But the scheme did not take effect.']

- XVI. In the [duke's] sixteenth year, in spring, in the king's first month, on Ke-maou, K'wae-wae, heir-son of Wei, entered the capital from Ts'eih, and Cheh, marquis of Wei, came to Loo a fugitive.
  - In the second month, Tsze-seuen Ching of Wei fled from that State to Sung.
  - In summer, in the fourth month, on Ke-ch'ow, K'ung K'ëw died.

Parr. 1, 2. The Chuen says:—'In the 16th year, in spring, Mwan Ch'ing (The Tsze-seuen Ching of the text) and Pe, superintendent of the market-place (See the narrative at the end of last year), fled from Wei to Sung. The marquis of Wei sent Yen Woo-tsze to announce [his restoration] at [the court of] Chow, saying, "K'wae-wae, having offended against the marquis his father and the marchioness his mother, was obliged to flee for refuge to Tsin. That State from regard to [his connexion with] the royal House, and mindful of him as thereby connected with itself, placed him near the Ho. By the secret influence of Heaven upon his mind, he has [now] obtained the inheritance of his State, and has sent his humble servant Heih, to inform the king's ministers thereof." The king caused duke P'ing of Shen to return this reply, "Heih has come with his admirable message, and laid it before me, the One man. Let him go, and say to my uncle, 'I rejoice in your success, and restore to you and your descendants your emoluments and rank. Be reverent! Heaven is now blessing you; but if you are not reverent, it will not bestow its blessing; and repentance then will be of no avail.""

Par. 8. With this par. ends the continuation of Confucius' Work by his disciples. Henceforth there is no more text of the Ch'un Ts'ëw, real or supplementary. 'The sage having been born,' says Too Yu, 'in the 22d year of duke Sëang (But see the note at the end of IX. xxi.), was now 73 years old. In the 4th month of this year, the 18th day was Yih-ch'ow (  $\mathbb{Z}$   $\mathbb{H}$ ). There was no Ke-ch'ow in it. Ke-ch'ow was the 12th day of the 5th month; so that there is an error in the text either of the mouth or of the day.' Too is wrong here. Ke-ch'ow was the 11th day of the 4th month of this year.

The Chuen says:—'The duke pronounced his eulogy, saying, "Compassionate Heaven vouchsafes me no comfort, and has not left me the aged man, to support me, the One man, on my seat. Dispirited I am, and full of distress. Woe is me! Alas! O Ne-foo! There is none [now] to be a rule to me!" Tsze-kung said, "The ruler is not likely to die in Loo. The master said, 'Error in a point of ceremony shows darkness of mind; error in the use of a name is a fault.' Failure of the mind is darkness; a fault is failure in one's position. The duke could not use the master when alive; in eulogizing him when dead, he has transgressed the rules of ceremony. In calling himself 'the One man,' he has assumed a name which does not belong to him. In both things the ruler has erred."'

Though the supplementary text of the Ch'un Ts'ëw stops with the above paragraph, Tso-she continues his narratives for several years, and we shall continue to follow the stream of Chinese history as far as we have his guidance.

1. 'In the 6th month of this year, the marquis of Wei entertained K'ung Kwei to drink with him at Ping-yang, when he bestowed large gifts upon him, while all the great officers also received presents. He escorted him away when he had well drunk, and at midnight sent him [an order to go] away from the State. [Kwei] took [his mother] Pih-ke in the carriage with him from Ping-yang, and took his way. When he had got to the west gate, he sent an attendant carriage back to Se-poo to bring away the stone Spirit-tablets of his tem-Tsze-pili Ke-tsze, who had formerly been an officer in the K'ung household, but had lately been promoted to the service of the marquis, begged leave to pursue him; and, meeting with the carriage and the tablets, he killed the individual in charge of it, and mounted the car-Heu Kung-wei had come back to see about the tablets, and now met with Ke-tsze. "In a struggle," said he to himself, "with so bad a man, I am sure to conquer. I will make him shoot first." [Ke-tsze] discharged 3 arrows, which all went wide of the mark. Heu Wei then shot the other dead, and one of his attendants found the spirit-tablets in a bag. K'ung

Kwei then fled to Sung.'

'When Këen, the eldest son of the viscount of Ts'00, was slandered (See the 2d narrative at the beginning of X. xix., that after par. 3; and the 2d at the beginning of X. xx.) he fled from Shing-foo to Sung. Afterwards, he went from Sung to Ching to avoid the disorders caused by members of the Hwa family. The people of Ching were very fond of him; but he went on to Tsin. There he took counsel with some officers of Tsin who wished to surprise [the capital of ] Ching, and [to aid them] asked that he might be recalled to that State, which was done; and he was treated as he had been at first. [By and by], the people of Tsin sent a spy to him (He was styled Tsze-muh), to ask him to fix the time for their enterprize. He had been harsh and tyrannical in the city assigned to himself, so that the people accused him; and in the course of an investigation, this spy was detected, and Taze-muh was put to death. His son, called Shing, was [now] in Woo, from which Taze-se wished to recall him to Taxo. The duke of Sheh said, "I have heard that Shing is deceitful and insubordinate;—will not such a step turn out ill?" Tsze-se, however, said, "I have heard that Shing is a man of good faith and bold; to recal him will only be advantageous. We can place him on the borders, and employ him as a bulwark to the State." He of Sheh observed, "I call it good faith when a man cultivates the friendship of the virtuous, and I call it boldness when a man follows a course of righteousness. I have heard that Shing wishes always to make his words good, and seeks to get around him bravoes who are not afraid of death. It is to be feared he has private aims of his own. To make good one's words is not good faith, and to be speculating about death is not boldness. You will repent of this measure."

'Tsze-se did not follow this counsel, but called Shing [back to Ts'00], and stationed him near the borders of Woo, where he became duke of Pih. [Ere long], he asked leave to invade Ching; but Tsze-se said, "The ordinances of Ts'oo are not yet fully arranged. But for this, [the thing should be done]. I will not forget the matter. By and by he made the same request, and leave was given to him; but before he had raised his forces, the people of Tsin invaded Ching, and Ts'oo relieved it, and made a covenant with it. Shing was angry, and said, "Here is a man of Ch'ing. My enemy is not far off;" and he then proceeded to sharpen his sword. P'ing, the son of Tsze-k'e, seeing him so engaged, said to him, "King's grandson, what are you doing that for?" Shing replied, "I have the reputation of being straightforward. If I do not tell you, how can I be called so? It is to kill your father." Ping reported this to Tszese, who said, "Shing is like an egg which I have hatched. I have brought him up under my wings. According to the order of the State of Ts'oo, when I die, no other but he will be chief minister or marshal." When Shing heard this, he said, "The chief minister is mad. he die a natural death, it will be my condemnation." Still Tsze-se did not repent of what he had done. Shing said to Shih K'eih, "If we meet the king and the two high ministers with 500 men in all, the thing may be done." K'eih replied, "The men cannot be got;" and he added, "At the south of the market place there is one Heung E-leaou. If you can get him, he will be equal to 500 men." They then went together to the place, and saw the man. The duke of Pih talked, and was pleased, with him; but when he told him his object, E-lëaou refused [to engage in it]. Shing then threatened him with his sword, but he made no movement. "The offer of gain," said Shing, "could not flatter him; threatening could not terrify him. He is not one who will seek to get favour by letting out my words;" and with this he left him.

'A body of men from Woo having attacked Shin, the duke of Pih defeated them, and begged leave to present [in the court] the spoils of the battle. This was granted him, and he took the opportunity to make an insurrection. In autumn, in the 7th month, he killed Tsze-se and Tszek'e in the court, and made king Hwuy a prisoner. Tsze-se covered his face with his sleeve, as he was dying; but Tsze-k'e said, "Heretofore I have used my strength in the service of our ruler; I must now end in the same way." With this he tore up a large log of a camphor wood tree, killed a man with it, and died. Shih K'eih advised Shing to burn the treasury and murder the king, for if he did not do so, his enterprize would not succeed. The duke, however, said, "No. To murder the king would be inauspicious. And if I burned the treasury, I should have no stores. Wherewith should I maintain myself?" K'eih replied, "Holding the State of Ts'oo, and ruling its people, and at the same time reverently serving the Spirits, you will not be without good auspices and sufficient stores. You need not be anxious lest the people should not follow you."

'[At this time], the duke of Sheh was in Ts'se, and all the people outside the barrier wall advised him to advance upon the capital. He replied, however, "I have heard that when a man puts his fortune to the risk by hazardous ways, he is insatiable in his desires, and falls from his place [like a vessel] made too heavy on one side." When he heard that Shing had put to death Kwan Sëw [who was sprung] from Ts'e, then he advanced.

'The duke of Pih wished to make Tsze-leu king, but that prince refused, on which the duke carried him off by force of arms. Tszeleu said, " If you, a king's grandson, will secure the peace of the State of Ts'oo, and will correct and regulate the royal House, and afterwards extend your shelter over it, this is what I desire. Shall I presume not to obey and follow you? If animated by a desire for your own exclusive advantage, you proceed to overthrow the royal House, and do not regard the State of Ts'00, though I die, I cannot follow you." The duke on this put him to death, and proceeded with the king to the High treasury, the gate of which was kept by Shih K'eih. Kung-yang, an equerry, however, dug through the wall, and carried the king on his back to the place of [his mother], the queen Ch'aou. At the same time, the duke of Sheh drew near. When he arrived at the north gate, some one met him and said, "Why are you without your helmet? The people are looking for you as for an indulgent parent. If the arrows of the rebels wound you, it will destroy the hope of the people;—how is it that you are not helmeted?" The duke on this assumed his helmet and advanced. Shortly he met another man, who said to him, "Why are you wearing your helmet? The people are looking for you as they look for a good year. Daily are they expecting your arrival. If they [once] see your face, they will feel at rest. When they [thus] know that they will not die, their souls will all be on fire; and they will, as it were, point you out as a mark throughout the whole city. Is it not too bad in you to cover your face, and destroy the hope of the people?" At this speech, the duke took off his helmet and advanced without it.

'[As he went on], he met Koo, the director of Remonstrances, who was leading his followers to join the duke of Pih. Tsze-kaou (The duke of Sheh was so styled) said to him, "If it had not been for the two ministers [who have been put to death], Ts'oo would have ceased to be a State. Is it to be preserved by abandoning the virtuous and following the rebellious? The director on this followed the duke of Sheh, who sent him, with the people of the city, to attack the duke of Pih. That leader fled to a hill, and strangled himself; and his followers concealed his body. Shih K'eih was taken alive, and questioned about the duke's death. "I know," replied he, "the place where he died, but he told me not to tell it." "If you do not tell it," he was told, "we will boil you." He said, "If our enterprize had succeeded, I should have been minister. That I should be boiled on its failure is the natural consequence. What harm can it do me?" Accordingly he was Shing's brother Yen fled to K'waehwang. Shin Choo-leang (The duke of Sheh) took the offices of both the murdered ministers; but when the State was composed, he made Ning (Son of Taze-se) chief minister, and K'wan (Son of Tsze-k'e) minister of War; and remained himself to old age in Sheh.'

This Taze-knou or Shin Choo-leang is the duke of Sheh of the Analects, VII. xviii.; XIII.

8. A favourite of the marquis of Wei, who interpreted dreams, having asked for some spirits from Tae-shuh He-tsze, and being refused them, he joined with the diviner, and said to the marquis, "Your lordship has a great minister in the south-west corner who, we are afraid, will injure you, if you do not send him away." On this [the marquis] drove out T'aeshuh E (He-taze), who fled to Tain.

4. The marquis of Wei said to Hwan Leangfoo, "I have now succeeded to my father, but I am not in possession of his [valuable] articles (Which duke Cheh had carried away with him); -what is to be done? Leang-foe took the place of the torch-bearer, and said, "Tsih and the exiled marquis are both your sons. Call the latter back, and then choose the abler of the two [to succeed you]. If he be not the abler, the articles [which he carried away] can thus be got. An attendant told this to Taik, who made five men follow him with a pig, seized the marquis, and forced him to make a covenant with him, requesting him also to put Lëang-foo to death. "I covenanted with him," said the marquis, "to forgive him three capital offences." "But," urged Tsih, "I ask that you will put him to death, for the the next offence after those three." To this the marquis agreed.

XVII. 1. 'In the [duke's] 17th year, the marquis of Wei made a tent adorned with paintings of tigers in his own peculiar garden; and when it was finished, he sought for men of the best reputation, to feast with them in it at its opening. The heir-son [Tsih] begged him to get Lëang-foo to be present. That officer came in the carriage of a minister of the 2d degree, with 2 horses; and in a purple robe, with a jacket of fox-fur over it. On his arrival, he threw open the fox-fur, but did not take off his sword. The heir-son ordered him to be dragged away, set forth to him his 3 offences, and put him to death.'

2. 'In the 8d month, the viscount of Yueh invaded Woo, and was met by the viscount of Woo at the marsh of Leih. Their forces were drawn up over against each other on either side of the water. The viscount of Yueh formed two bodies in files of five on his left and right, and made them during the night, with a noise of drums, advance now on the right and now on the left. The army of Woo divided to meet them, on which the viscount of Yueh stole through the water, right against the centre of that of Woo, which was thrown into great confusion, and defeated.'

- 'Chaou Yang of Tsin sent a message to the marquis of Wei, saying, "When your lordship was in Tain, 1 (太文) was a name of Yang) was your host. I beg you or your eldest son now to come [to Tsin], that I may escape being incriminated. If you do not do so, my ruler will say that your not coming is my doing." The marquis of Wei declined to go to Tsin on the ground of the difficulties in which he was, and his eldest son made representations injurious to him. In summer, in the 6th month, Chaou Yang laid siege to the capital of Wei, to the relief of which came Kwoh Kwan and Ch'in Kwan of Ts'e. An officer of Tsin, who had come with a challenge to battle, having been made prisoner, Tsze-yuh (Ch'in Kwan) caused him to be clothed in his proper dress, and then went to see him. "Kwoh-tsze," said he to the prisoner, "has the govt. of Ts'e in his hands, and he ordered me not to avoid the army of Tsin. How should I presume to disobey his command? and why should your leader take the trouble to send a challenge?" Këen-taze said, "I consulted the tortoise-shell about attacking Wei, and not about fighting with Ts'e;" and on this he withdrew.'
- 'During the troubles of Ts'oo caused by the duke of Pih, the people of Ch'in, relying on their accumulated stores, made an incursion into it. When the State was tranquillized, it was resolved to carry off the wheat crop of Chin, and the viscount consulted the grand-tutor Tszekuh, and Choo-lëang duke of Sheh, about a Tsze-kuh said, leader for the expedition. "Ch'ae-keu, commander of the Right, and Laou, historiographer of the Left, both attended the chief minister and the marshal in a former attack of Ch'in; they may be employed now." Tsze-kaou said, "When the leaders are of low rank, the people despise them. I am afraid the orders of those officers will not be obeyed." Tsze-kuh replied, "Kwan Ting-foo was a captive of Joh; but our king Woo employed him as the general of the army, and thence came the conquest of Chow and Lësou, the subjugation of Suy and Tang, and a great opening up of all the Man tribes. P'ang Chung-shwang was a captive of Shin; but our king Wan employed him as his chief minister, and he made Shin and Seih districts of our State. The bringing Ch'in and Ts'ae to our court, and the enlargement of our boundaries to the Joo, were his achieve-What has lowness of rank to do in this matter?" Tsze-kaou rejoined, "The decree of Heaven does not waver. The [late] chief minister had ground of indignation with Chin. If Heaven be [now] minded to destroy it the work will be assigned to the chief minister's son. Why should the ruler not pass over those officers? I am afraid that the commander of the Right and the historiographer of the Left have the lowness of rank of the two captives [you have mentioned], without their excellent virtue." The king consulted the tortoise-shell, which indicated that the choice of the commandant of Woo-shing would be fortunate (He was the son of Tsze-se, the late chief-minister). He was sent therefore with a force to carry off the wheat crop of Ch'in. The people of that State withstood him, and were defeated, on which he laid siege to its capital city. In autumn, in the 7th month, on Ke-maou, he,—the Kung-sun Chaou of Ts'oo,—at the head of his force, extinguished Ch'in (See the Chuen on X. ix. 3).

- 'The king and the duke of Sheh consulted the tortoise-shell about Tsze-lëang, whether he should be appointed chief minister. Choo, commandant of Shin, said, "The indication is that the appointment will be fortunate, but that he will go beyond your expectations." "A son of our [former] king and prime-minister, if he go beyond our expectations, what will he proceed to?" said the duke. Shortly after, they consulted the shell about Tsze-kwoh, and appointed him chief-minister.
- 5. 'The marquis of Wei dreamt in the north palace, that he saw a man mounting the tower of Keun-woo. His hair was dishevelled; and with his face to the north, he cried out, saying,
  - "I mount here in the old site of Keun-woo; The gourds are only commencing their growth.

I am Hwan Lëang-foo;

I appeal to Heaven in assertion of my innocence."

The marquis himself consulted the reeds about the dream, and Seu Me-shay interpreted the result to the effect that there was no harm in it, on which a city was given to him, which he left, making his escape to Sung. The marquis again consulted the tortoise-shell, the interpretation of the indications of which was,

"He is like a fish with a red tail,
Tossed cross-wise, and driven to the side.
Far from the great State,
He will be extinguished and fice.
His gate and all his openings shut,
He will get over behind."

'In winter, in the 10th month, Tsin again invaded Wei, and entered its outer suburbs. When the army was about to enter the capital, Këen-tsze said, "Let us stop. Shuh-hëang said that he who took advantage of its disorder to extinguish a State would have no posterity." The people of Wei then drove out duke Chwang, and made peace with Tsin, which raised Pansze, a grandson of duke Sëang, to be marquis, and then withdrew its army. In the 11th month, the [expelled] marquis again entered the capital from Keuen, and Pan-sze fled.

Before this, duke [Chwang] had been [on one occasion] taking a view from the city-wall, and observed [the place called] Jung-chow. Having inquired about it, and been told [its name], he said "Our surname is Ke. What have any Jung to do here?" and he proceeded to plunder the place.

'He had employed the workmen for a long time, and wished to expel Shih Poo; but before he could do so, an insurrection broke out, and on Sin-sze, Shih Poo, supported by the workmen, attacked him. He shut his gate, and begged for terms, which were refused him; and in getting over the wall on the north, he fell and broke his thigh, when the men of Jung-chow attacked him. His sons Tsih and Tsing got over it after him, and were killed by them. He then entered the house of Ke of Jung-chow.

'Before this, he had seen, from the wall of the city, the wife of this Ke, how beautiful her hair was, and had caused it to be cut off, to make a wig for [his wife] Leu-këang. When he now entered Ke's house, he showed him a peik, saying, "If you save my life, I will give you this peil." Ke said, "If I kill you, where will the peik go to?" On which he killed him, and took the pend. The people of Wei recalled Kungsun Pan-sze and made him marquis.

'In the 12th month, a body of men from Ts'e invaded Wei, the people of which begged for peace. The invaders raised the Kung-taze K'e to the marquisate, carried Pan-sze back with them, and placed him in Loo.'

6. 'The duke had a meeting with the marquis of Ts'e, and made a covenant in Mung. Mang Woo-pih was with the duke as director of the ceremonies. The marquis bowed with his head to the ground, but the duke only bowed, on which the people of Ts'e were angry; but Woo-pih said, "Only to the son of Heaven does our ruler bow with his head to the ground." Woo-pih asked Kaou Ch'ne who held the bull's ear when princes were covenanting, and was answered, "At the affair of Tsang-yen, the Kung-taze Koo-ta'aou of Woo held it (See VII. 3); at the affair of Fah-yang (XII. 4), Shih Tuy of Wei did it." Woo pih said, "Then, I may do it now."

7. 'Keun, the son of Hwang Yuen of Sung, had a friend called T'een Ping, to whom he gave the city of his elder brother Tsan-pan, taking it away from the latter. Tsan-pan wentaway in indignation, and told Tsze-e K'ih, an officer of the marsbal Hwan of it. On this Kih went to Sung, and told the duchess that Keun was going to restore Hwan-she. The dake asked Tsze-chung about the matter.

'Now Tsze-chung had wished, before this, to appoint Fei-go, his son by K'e-sze, his successor, but Keun had said that he must appoint Fei-go's elder brother, as being a man of good ability. Taze-chung was angry, and did not follow the advice; and now he replied to the duke, "The master of the Right is too old for such a thing; but I do not know about Keun." The duke on this seized Keun, and Hwang Yuen fled to Tsin, from which the duke recalled him'.

- in spring, Sung put to death Hwang Yuen. When the duke heard all the circumstances [of the case], he recalled the various members of the Hwang clan, and made Hwang Hwan master of the Right.'
- 2. 'A body of men from Pa invaded Ts'00, and laid siege to Yew. Formerly, when the tortoise-shell was consulted about Tsze-kwoh's being made marshal of the Right, Kwan Chen said, 'He will answer to your wishes;' and he was appointed. Accordingly, when the army of Pa now entered the country, it was proposed to consult the tortoise-shell about a leader to oppose it; but the king said, "It was intimated that Ning would succeed according to our wishes. Why should we divine any further?" He was therefore sent with a force against the invaders. He requested assistant-commanders; and the king said, "The officer of the bed-

Accordingly, in the 8d month, the Kung-sun Ning, Woo Yëw-yu, and Wei Koo defeated the army of Pa at Yëw, in consequence of which Tsze-kwoh was invested with Seih. The superior man will say that king Hwuy knew his mind. In him was an illustration of what is said in one of the Books of Hea (Shoo, II. ii. 18), "The officer of divination, when the mind is made up on a subject, then refers it to the great tortoise." In the History it is said, "A sage does not trouble the tortoise-shell and reeds." So it was with king Hwuy.'
  - 3. 'In summer, Sheh Poo of Wei drove out his ruler K'e, who fled to Ts'e. The marquis Cheh then returned to Wei from Ts'e, drove out Shih Poo, and restored Shih Tuy and T'aeshuh E.'

Nineteenth year.

XIX. 1. 'In the [duke's] 19th year, in spring, a body of men from Yueh made an incursion into Ts'oo, in order to delude Woo.'

2. 'In summer, the Kung-tsze K'ing of Ts'oo and the Kung-sun K'wan pursued the army of Yueh as far as Ming, could not come up with it, and returned.'

3. 'In autumn, Shin Choo-leang of Ts'oo invaded the rude tribes of the east (To punish Yueh). The men and women of 3 tribes covenanted with the army of Ts'oo at Gaou.'

4. 'In winter Shuh Ts'ing (The son of Shuh Seuen) went to the capital, on occasion of the death of king King.'

[This date of the death of king King is very much contested.]

Twentieth year

- XX. 1. In the [duke's] 20th year, in spring, an officer of Ts'e came to call the duke to a meeting, which was held in summer at Lin-k'ëw. It was on account of Ch'ing, to lay plans for the invasion of Tsin. The people of Ch'ing, however, declined the action of the States; and in autumn our army returned.'
- 2. 'The Kung-tsze K'ing-ke of Woo remonstrated frequently with the viscount, telling him that, if he did not change his course, ruin must be the result." The viscount would not listen to him, on which he left and resided in E, going afterwards to Ts'oo. When he heard that Yueh was going to invade Woo, he begged leave to return and try to bring about a peace with Yueh. He then returned, and wished to take off the unfaithful [officers] in order to satisfy Yueh. The people of Woo, however, put him to death.'

3. 'In the 11th month, Yueh laid siege to [the capital of ] Woo. Chaou-mang (Chaou Woo-seuh, or Sëang-tsze, son of Chaou Yang of Tsin, for whom he was now in mourning) diminished the quantity and quality of his mourning diet [in consequence]. Ts'oo Lung said to him, "The three years' mourning is the greatest expression [of grief for the loss] of felatives; and yet you are now going beyond it;—have you not a reason for this?" Chaoumang replied, "At the meeting of Hwang-ch'e (XIII. 8), my father made a covenant with the king of Woo, that [Tsin and Woo] should make common cause in their likings and dislikings. Now Yueh is besieging the capital of Woo. I, as my father's heir, do not make void his engagement, I ought to oppose Yueh, but this is what Tsin is not able to do; and I therefore have diminished my diet." Lung said, "Suppose you should send and make the king of Woo acquainted with the circumstances," Can it be done?" asked the minister. "Allow me to try it," said the other; and he took his way to the scene of strife. First he went to the army of Yueh, and said [to the viscount of that State], "Many have been the attacks and injuries committed by Woo on your superior State, and the people of our [northern] States have all been glad to hear that your lordship is now punishing it in person. I am only afraid that your desire may not get its satisfaction, and beg your leave to enter the city that I may see." Permission was granted to him; and he then said to the king of Woo, "Woo-seuh, the minister of my ruler, has sent me, his servant Lung, to venture to explain and apologize for his not coming to your assistance. His father Che-foo, the former minister of our ruler, undertook the engagement of the covenant at Hwang-ch'e, that Tsin and Woo should make common cause in their likings and dislikings. Your lordship is now in difficulties. Woo-seuh would not dare to shrink from the toil; but Tsin is not able to make the effort, and he has sent me to venture to represent to you his case." The king bowed with his head to the earth, and said, "Through my incapacity I have not been able to serve Yueh, and have thus caused sorrow to your minister. I acknowledge the condescension of his message." He then gave Lung a small basket of pearls which he sent to Chaou-mang, saying, "Kow-tseen will cause me grief while I live; I would die, but death will not come. I would now ask you a question as with the laugh of a drowning man:—how was it that your historiographer Gan (The Mili of the Chuen on X. xxxii. 2), got his reputation of wisdom?" "Gan," said Lung, "when he advanced, incurred no hatred, and when he retired, was followed by no reviling." "His character was deserved," rejoined the king.'

Twenty-first year.

XXI. 1. 'In the [duke's] twenty-first year, an officer from Yueh first came to our court.'

2. 'In autumn, the duke made a covenant with the marquis of Ts'e, and the viscount of Choo in Koo. The people of Ts'e, to express their condemnation [of the duke] for not bewing with his head to the ground (XVII. 6), made the following song about it,

"How slow are they of Lou!
They wake not, though years go,
And make us travel so,
"Tis their scholars with their books,
That thus trouble our two States."

At this time the duke arrived before either of the others at Yang-kuh. Leu-k'ëw Seih of Ts'e said to hin, "You have condescended to direct your steps here, and are now in the army of my ruler. We will send word with the most rapid despatch to him. But will it not be a trial of your patience till the messenger returns? As our workmen have not yet prepared the station [for the meeting], allow us to prepare a lodging-house for you in Chow-taou." The duke declined the offer, saying that he would not presume to treuble their workmen.'

Twenty-second year.

XXII. 1. In the [duke's] 22d year, in summer, in the 4th month, duke Yin of Choo fled from Ts'e to Yueh (Yih, the viscount of Choo, of VIII. 4, and X. 1, see the Chuen on which), and said, 'Woo, in its unprincipled course, made me, the father, a prisoner, and appointed my son in my stead." The people of Yueh restored him to Choo, and his eldest son Kih fled to Yueh.'

'In winter, in the 11th month, on Tingmaou, Yueh extinguished Woo, and proposed to the king of it to reside in Yung-tung. He declined, saying, "I am old; how can I serve your lordship?" And with this he strangled himself. They carried his body back to Yueh.'

Twenty-third year.

XXIII. 1. 'In the [duke's] twenty-third year, | when his horses got frightened, and he galloped in spring, King Ts'aou of Sung died (This King | them forwards saying, "The men of Ts'e k Ts'aou was the wife of duke Yuen of Sung, and mother of the wife of Ke P'ing-tsze, mentioned in the Chuen on X. xxv. 1. She was consequently great grand-mother to Kang-tsze who was now head of the Ke-sun family.) Ke K'ang-tsze sent Jen Yew to Sung on a visit of condolence, and to attend her funeral, with this message, "Our poor State is occupied with affairs of importance, which keep me, Fei, and the other ministers in a State of excitement, so that I am unable to attend and help in drawing the bier; and I have sent K'ëw to follow the others [who perform that office]." There was also this other message [to duke King], "Since I am in the position of the son of your sister's son, I have sent K'ëw to present some poor horses which were bred by my father to the steward of your [deceased] mother. Perhaps they may be allowed to bear the plumes and girths [at her funeral]."'

2. 'In summer, in the 6th month, Seun Yaou of Tsin invaded Ts'e, and was met by Kaou Woo-p'ei at the head of a force. Che Pih (Seun Yaou) had gone to observe the army of Ta'e, my flag. They will say that I return because I am afraid of them." Accordingly he went on to the entrenchments [of Ts'e], and then withdrew.

'When the two armies were about to fight, Ch'ang Woo-taze begged leave to consult the tortoise-shell, but Che Pih said, "Our ruler gave notice [of the expedition] to the son of Heaven, and consulted the tortoise-shell of the State about it in the ancestral temple. The result was fortunate, and why should I divine any further? Moreover, the people of Ts'e took Ying-k'ew. The ruler's commission to me was not for the display of our military prowess, but to deal with that matter of Ying-k'ëw. It is enough that I was charged to punish a crime; —why should I [now] divine?" A battle was fought on Jin-shin at Le-k'ëw, when the army of Ta'e was entirely defeated. Che Pih himself captured Yen Käng.'

3. 'In autumn, in the 8th month, Shuh Ts'ing went to Yueh;—the first complimentary mission to that State. Choo Yang of Yuch, came to Loo on a similar mission, in return for that of Shuh Tsing.'

Twenty-fourth year.

- XXIV. 1. 'In the [duke's] twenty-fourth year, in summer, in the 4th month, the marquis of Tsin, intending to invade Ts'e, sent an officer to ask the aid of an army from us, saying, "Formerly Tsang Wan-chung, with an army of Ts'oo, invaded Ts'e, and took Kuh (See V. xxvi. 5, 7); Seuen-shuh with an army of Tsin, invaded Ts'e, and took Wän-yang (VIII. ii. 4, 7). My ruler [now] wishes to seek the blessing of the duke of Chow, and desires to beg the help of the power of the Tsang family." Tsang Shih [was sent to] join him with a force, when they took Lin-k'ëw. The officers of the army gave orders to make everything ready for advancing; but Lae Chang said, "The ruler is reduced low, and the ministers are oppressive. Last year Tsin vanquished its opponents, and now it has taken a great city. It has received much favour from Heaven; how should it be able to advance further? That is a mistake. The expedition will now withdraw." The army of Tsin did accordingly withdraw. Some oxen were given alive to Tsang Shih, and the grand historiographer [of Tsin] apologized to him, saying, "Because our ruler is on march, this gift of oxen is not according to the rule. I venture to set forth our apologies to you."'
- 2. 'The viscount of Choo again pursued an unressonable course, on which an officer of Yueh seized him, and carried him to that State, appointing his son Ho in his stead. Ho also acted in the same unreasonable way.'
- 'The mother of the duke's son King was his favourite, and he proposed to raise her to the position of his wife. Having told the director of ceremonies Hin Hëa to present those appropriate for such a proceeding, that officer replied that there were none such. The duke said to him in a rage, "You are an officer of the ancestral temple, and the appointment of the ruler's wife is a great ceremony of the State. Why do you say that there are no rules for it?" "The duke of Chow," was the reply, "and duke Woo married daughters of Seeh. Heaou and Hwuy. daughters of Sung; from Hwan downwards, our rulers have married daughters of Ts'e. For such marriages there are the appropriate ceremonies; but for the constituting a concubine the wife there are none." The issue, however, was that the duke carried out his purpose, and declared that King should be his successor. From this time the people began to hate the duke."
- 4. 'In the intercalary month, the duke went to Yueh, and won the friendship of Seih-ying, the heir-apparent, who proposed giving a wife to him, and much territory. Kung-sun Yëw-shan sent word of this to Ke-sun, who was frightened by the prospect, and sent bribes which he got presented through the grand-administrator Pei. The plan was then dropped.'

with Heae the minister of Crime, and said, "To-day I am fortunate that my death is deferred till another day."

When the duke [re-] entered the State, he took sway his city from Nan-she, and his powers from Heae, the minister of Crime. He [also] caused one of his attendants to push the carriage of Kung-wan E-taze into a pond.

'Before this, when the people of Wei deprived the officer Hea Ting of his possessions (See the narrative on XL 7; here should, probably, be 12), his household and property were given to Pang-fung Me-taze, who entertained the duke in consequence, and presented to him the daughter of Hën Mow. She became his favourite, and was put in the position of his wife. Her brother K'e was grandson of the sister of Tae-shuh Tsih, and, when young, had been brought up in the palace. He was afterwards made minister of Instruction; but when the favour of the lady declined, he was made guilty of some offence. The duke kept employing the workmen of the 8 departments for a great length of time. He also made Kënou, a player, covenant with K'euen Me, kept him near to himself, and very much trusted him.

'In consequence of all these things, Pe superintendent of the markets, Kung-sun Me-mow, Kung-wan Yaou, Heae minister of Crime, and K'e minister of Instruction, took advantage of [the dissatisfaction of the] workmen and of Keuen Me, to raise an insurrection. with sharp weapons, and those of them who were not so provided with axes, they sent K'euen Me into the duke's palace; and beginning to make a great noise at the palace of the [late] eldest son, Tsih, they attacked the duke. Keuen Taze-sze asked leave to oppose them; but Me held his hand, and said, "You are bold indeed; but what good can you do to the duke? Do you not see the case of the late ruler? Let the marquis go wherever he pleases. He has, moreover, already been abroad; why should he not return? At present [resistance is of no use]. The anger of the multitude is not to be encountered. Let it pass away, and it will be easy to find an opportunity." The duke accordingly left the city. [At first] he proposed going to P'oo; but Me said, "Tsin is not to be trusted; don't go there." He then proposed going to Keuen, but Me said, "No. Ts'e and Tsin will officers."

be quarrelling about us." Next he proposed going to Ling; but Me said, "Loo is not sufficient to have any dealings with Let us go to Shing-ts'oo, to draw the notice of Yueh, which now has a ruler." Accordingly, the duke went on the way to Shing-ts'oo. Me said, "The robbers of Wei must not get to know [where we are]; let us make haste. I will go first;" and he thus carried the valuables which they had with them in his chariot and returned.

'The duke [by and by] formed his men into separate bands, and, by means of a correspondence with the prayer-maker Hwuy, made incursions into Wei, to the distress of the people. E-taze knew of the circumstance, went to see Taze-che, (The Kung-sun Me-mow) and begged that he would drive out Hwuy. Wan-taze said, "He has committed no offence." E-taze replied, "He loves to monopolize all profit, and is lawless. You would see, if the duke returned to the capital, that he would be the first to lead the way. If you drive him out, he will escape by the south gate, and go where the duke is. Yuch has recently got the control of the States; they will be sure to go there, and ask the assistance of an army." When Hwuy was in the court, an officer was sent to send away all the members of his household. He went out [after them], stopped outside 2 nights without being recalled; and on the 5th day lodged in Wae-le. He then became a favourite [with the duke], and advised him to go to Yuch to ask the help of a force.'

2. 'In the 6th month, the duke arrived from Yueh. Ke K'ang-tsze and Mang Woo-pih met him at Woo-woo. Kwoh Ch'ang drove the duke's carriage; and when he saw the two ministers, he said, "They speak much evil. Let your lordship pay particular attention to them."

'The duke took refreshment at Woo-woo, and Woo-pili presented him with the cup of congratulation. Disliking Kwoh Ch'ung, he said, "How stout he is!" Ke-sun then asked that Woo-pih should be made to drink [a cup of spirits], adding, "In consequence of Loo's being so near its enemies, we were not able to follow your lordship, and so escaped so great a journey; but why should he say that Ch'ung has got fat?" "Can one who eats many of his words," said the duke, "escape getting fat?" They drank [in this way] without any pleasure, and enmity now commenced between the duke and his great officers."

'In the [duke's] twenty-sixth year, in summer, in the 5th month, Shuh-sun Shoo, at the head of a force, joined Kaou Joo and How Yung of Yueh, and Yoh Fei of Sung, in an expedition to restore the marquis of Wei. Wan-tsze wished to receive him; but E-tsze said to him, "The ruler is obstinate and oppressive. Wait a little. He is sure to vent his poison on the people, who will consequently be of one mind with you." [In a little], the [invading] army made an incursion on Wae-chow, [on behalf of the marquis of Wei, and obtained great spoil; and the troops which went forth to resist them were greatly defeated. this, the marquis] dug up the grave of Tingtaze, superintendent of the markets, and burned his body on the top of Ping-chwang. Wan-taze sent Wang-sun Ta'e privately to ask Kaon Joo whether he meant utterly to extingnish Wei, or simply to restore the marquis. Kaou Joo said that his ruler's orders to him were simply that he should restore the ruler; and on this Wan-tsze assembled the people, and put the thing to them, saying, "The ruler has now attacked the city with those wild people of the south and east, till it is nearly destroyed. Let us receive him back." They said, "Don't receive him." He went on, "It will be a benefit to you if I go away. Allow me to go out at the north gate." "You shall not go out," all urged. They then sent great bribes to the officers of Yueh, threw open the gates, manned the parapets, and [offered] to receive the duke. He, however, did not venture to enter the city; and, the armies withdrawing, the people of Wei raised duke Taou to the marquisate. Nan-she (I. q. Wän-tsze) acted as minister to him, and made over Shing-ts'oo to Yueh. The [expelled] duke said, "This is K'e's doing;" and he told all [the ladies] who had any quarrel with his wife (K'e's sister) to vent their spite on her. K'e having been sent on a complimentary mission to Yueh, the duke attacked him, and carried off his offerings. K'e laid the matter before the king, who ordered him to retake the things, which, with the assistance of a large body of men, he did. The duke was angry, put to death the son of K'e's sister whom he had declared his successor, and afterwards died in Yueh.'

'Duke King of Sung had no son, but took Tih and K'é, the sons of Kung-sun Chow, and brought them up in his palace, without appointing either of them, however, to be his successor. At this time Hwang Hwan was master of the Right; Hwang Fei-go, grand marshal; Hwang Hwae, minister of Instruction; Ling Puh-hwan, master of the Left; Yoh Fei, minister of Works; and Yoh Choo-ts'oo, grand-minister of Crime. These 6 ministers belonging to three class conducted the government with harmony. They should have communicated with the duke through Ta-yin; but that minister constantly kept back their representations, and gave them commands according to his pleasure, pretending that they were from the duke. The people hated him, and the minister of Works wanted to take him off; but the master of the Left said, "Let him alone, till he fill up the measure of his iniquity. When he is like a heavy vessel without any foundation, is it possible he should not be overthrown?"

'In winter, in the 10th month, the duke was taking relaxation by the marsh of Kiung; and on Sin-sze, he died in Lëen-chung. Ta-yin raised 1000 men-at-arms from the soldiers near the marsh, and conveyed the duke's [body] from K'ung-t'ung to the capital. Having gone with it to the Yuh palace, he sent to call the six ministers, saying there was a report that there were enemies in the State, and that the ruler wished them to frame measures for the emergency. When they arrived, he made the menat-arms seize them, and said to them, "The ruler is very ill, and asks you to make a covenant;" and accordingly they covenanted in the courtyard of the small chamber, that they would do nothing disadvantageous to the ducal Ta-yin then declared K'e to be the successor to the State, bore the coffin to the ancestral temple, and set it forth there; but it was not till the 3d day that the thing was known in the city. Fei, the minister of Works, spread it abroad through the city, that Ta-yin had deceived the ruler and sought to monopolize all gain to himself; that the duke had now died without any illness; that Ta-yin had concealed his death; and that things could not be accounted for on any other ground but the crime of Ta-yin.

'Tih dreamt that K'e was lying outside the Loo gate with his head to the north, and that he himself was a bird which was settled upon him. His beak reached to the south gate, and his tail to the T'ung gate. "I have dreamt," said he, "a beautiful dream. I shall succeed to the State." Ta-yin then considered that, as he was not in the covenant, and they might drive him out, he had better impose a second covenant on the ministers; and he therefore ordered the priest to prepare the writings. The ministers were then in Tang-yu; and just as the time for the covenant was at hand, the priest Sëang told Hwang Fei-go of the writing, Fei-go consulted with Tsze-loo, Tih the overseer of the gates, and the master of the Left, whether they could not get the people to drive him out for them. They then returned to their houses, and gave out their armour, sending notice round the city to this effect, "Ta-yin keeps the ruler in a State of delusion, and insolently oppresses the ducal House. Those who side with us will be saviours of the ruler." The multitude responded, "Let us side with them." Ta-yin, [on his part], sent round a notice, saying, "The clans of Tae and Hwang (The Yoh were descended from duke Tae) wish to injure the ducal House. Those who side with me need have no trouble about not becoming rich. The multitude said, "It is not different [from a ducal notice]!"

'Tae-she and Hwang-she wished to attack the duke, but Yoh Tih said, "No. He is a criminal because of his violent proceeding with the duke; but if we attack the duke, our conduct will be more violent than his." They then made the people hold Ta-yin as the offender, and that officer fled to Ts'oo, taking K'e with him. They then raised Tih to be duke, with the minister of Works as chief minister. They made a covenant that the members of their three clans should all share in the government and not injure one another.'

8. 'Duke Ch'uh of Wei sent a messenger with a bow from Shing-ts'oo to Tsze-kung, to ask him whether he would re-enter Wei again.

Taze-kung bowed his head to the ground, re-[Afterwards], he said privately to the messenger, "Formerly, duke Ch'ing withdrew to Ch'in (V. xxviii. 7); but, through the covenant of Yuan, pub, hrought about he Ning Weather of Yuen-puh, brought about by Ning Woo-tsze and Sun Chwang-tsze, he entered again. Duke Heen withdrew to Ts'e (IX. xiv. 4); but through the covenant of E-e, brought about by Tsze-seen

State. I have not heard of his having relatives like those of Heen, or ministers like those of Ching;—I do not know by what means he is to re-enter. It is said in the ode (She, IV. i. Pt. i. ode IV. 8), "Nothing gives strength like the employ-ment of right men; All throughout the State obey them."

If he [only] had the men, and the four quarters and Taze-chen, he entered again (IX. xxvi. 3). of the State regarded him as their lord, what Your ruler has now twice withdrawn from his difficulty would there be with the capital?"

XXVII. 1. In the [duke's] 27th year, in spring, the viscount of Yueh sent How Yung on a complimentary mission to Loo, and to speak about the lands of Choo, that the boundary between it and Loo should be Tae-shang. In the 2d month, a covenant was made at P'ing-yang, in which the 3 ministers all followed the envoy. K'ang-tsze was vexed about this, and apoke about Tase-kung, saying, "If he had been here, I should not have come to this." "Why then did you not call him?" asked Woo-pih. "I was indeed going to call him," was the reply. Wän-tase (Shuh-sun) said, "Pray, think of it another time."

2. 'In summer, in the 4th month, on Ke-hae, Ke K'ang-tsre died. The duke went to offer his condolences; but his ceremonies were not what the occasion required.'

8. 'Seun Yaou of Tsin led a force against Ch'ing, and halted at Tung-k'ëw, while in the meantime Sze Hwäng of Ch'ing went to beg assistance from Ts'e. When the army of Ts'e was being raised, Ch'in Ch'ing-tsze assembled the sons of officers who had died in battle for the State, and presented them for 3 days in the court, giving also to each a carriage with two horses, and assigning to him 5 cities (—hamlets). He called to him Tsin, the son of Yen Choh-tseu, and said to him, "In the action at Seih (The Le-k'ëw of XXIII. 2), your father died. In consequence of the many troubles of the State we were not able to think of you before. But now the ruler confers on you these cities, and to appear at court with these robes and this carriage. Do not make void the service of your father."

After this [Ching-taze] proceeded to the relief of Ching. When he arrived at Lew-shoo, and was [only] 7 le from Kuh, the people of that place were not aware of his approach. When he got to the Puh, it had rained so that they could not cross. Tsze-sze said, "[The troops of ] the great State are quite close to our poor capital, and therefore we sent to tell you of our distress. But now your army does not go on, and I am afraid it will not be in time." Ch'ingtaze having on a [rain-] cloak, and leaning on a spear, stood upon the bank, and now helped forward, now whipt on, the horses which were unwilling to proceed. When Che Pih heard of this, he withdrew, saying, "I consulted the tortoise-shell about attacking Ching, and not about fighting with Tate." [At the same time] he sent a message to Ching-tsze, saying, "You Sir, are a son of Chin, sprung from the House of Chin. That Chin has lost its sacrifices (Having been extinguished by Ts'00; see XVII.

4) was owing to the crime of Ching. My ruler therefore sent me to examine into the justice of [the fate of] Chin, thinking that, possibly, you would have a regard for Chin. If you consider that the overthrow of your root is an advantage to you, what is it to me?" Ching-tsze, in a rage, said, "All who have heaped insults on others have [soon] passed away;—can Che Pih continue long?

'Chung-hang Wan-taze (A refugee in Ts'e) told Ch'ing-taze, saying, "One from the army of Tsin informed me that they were going with 1000 light chariots to attack the gate of the army of Ts'e, which might thus be entirely destroyed." Ch'ing-taze replied, "My ruler charged me that I should not fall on a small force, nor fear a large one. Though they come with more than 1000 chariots, I should not avoid them. I will inform my ruler of your communication." Wantsze said, "Now I know the [folly] of my leaving Tsin. A superior man, in forming his plans, considers every thing,—the beginning, the middle and the end,—and then he enters on his course. But now I took mine, without knowing any one of these;—is it not hard?"

4. 'The duke was distressed and annoyed by the arrogance of the three Hwans, and wished for the help of the other princes to take them off. The three Hwans were in like manner distressed and annoyed by the rudeness of the duke, and thus there arose many differences between him and them. The duke had been rambling in Lingfan, and met Mang Woo-pih in the street of Mang-she. "Let me ask you," said he to him, "if I shall [be permitted to] die [a natural death]." Woo-pih replied that he had no means of knowing. Thrice the duke put the question, till the minister declined to give any answer. The duke then wished, with the help of Yueh, to attack Loo, and take off the three Hwans. In autumn, in the 8th month, he went to Kungsun Yëw-hing's, and thence he withdrew to Choo, from which he went on to Yueh. The people attributed the blame of this to Kung-sun Yëwshan (I. q. Yew-hing).'

It may be well to give here a list of the succeeding marquises of Loo.

Gae was succeeded by his son Ning ( ), known as duke Taou ( ), B.c. 466—480.

Taou was succeeded by his son Këa (嘉), known as duke Yuen (元 公), B.C. 429—409.

Yuen was succeeded by his son Hëen ([]), known as duke Muh ([], ], B.C. 408—876.

Muh was succeeded by his sou Fun (奮), known as duke Kung (共 人), B.C. 375—353. Kung was succeeded by his son Shun (世), known as duke K'ang (康公), B.C. 353—343.

K'ang was succeeded by his son Yen (夏), known as duke King (景公), B.C. 342—315.

King was succeeded by his son Shuh (叔), known as duke P'ing (子公), B.C. 314—293.

P'ing was succeeded by his son Kës (豐)

P'ing was succeeded by his son Këa (賈), known as duke Wän (文 公), B.C. 292—270. Wan was succeeded by his son Ch'ow (), known as duke K'ing (), B.C. 269—248. In B.C. 248 Loo was extinguished by king K'aou-lêeh of Ts'oo, and duke K'ing reduced to the position of a private man. Thus from the duke of Chow to duke K'ing there had been thirty-four marquises in Loo, embracing a period of 874 years. The history of the State, however, after duke Gae is almost a blank.

however, after duke Gae is almost a blank.]
After the above year, there is a blank in Tsoshe's chronicles, and he gives only one other narrative under the 4th year of duke Tsou.

"This year, Seun Yaon of Tain led a force to lay siege to [the capital of] Chring. Before he arrived, Sze Hwäng of that Statesaid, "Che Pih is obstinate, and fond of victory. If we tender our submission early, he will take his departure." He therefore in the first place put Nan-le (A place outside the walls) in a state of defence, and waited for the approach of Yaou. He entered Nan-le, and attacked the Keih-tëch gate. On the side of Chring they made prisoner He Kwei-luy, and tried to bribe him by offering him a share in the government. He kept his mouth shut, however, and submitted to death.

"Che Pih said to Chaou-mang, "Do you enter the city;" but that minister replied, "You are here yourself; [do you enter it]." "Ugly and without courage as you are, how were you made chief of the Chaou-mang, "to submit to such a disgrace [from you], perhaps I shall not cause any injury to the House of Chaou." Che Pih made no alteration in his conduct; and from this time he was an object of hatred to Chaou Sēang-tsze, and the issue was his ruin. Che Pih was greedy and self-willed, so that the chiefs of the Han and Wei revolted from him, and [joined in] his destruction.'

[Why Tso-she ended his narratives here it is impossible to say. From the last sentence in the above relation, it is clear he could have continued them for at least ten years more. Too Yu says, 'According to the Historical Records, in the 4th year of duke E ( ) () of Tsin, and the 14th year of duke Taou of Loo, Che Pih led [the chiefs of] Han and Wei to lay siege to Chaou Sëang-tsze in Tsin-yang. There they turned against him, laid their plans with Chaou-she, and put Che Pih to death beneath the walls of Tsin-yang;—27 years after the close of the Ch'un Ts'ëw.'

On the extinction of the Che or Seun family, there remained in Tsin only the three great families of Chaou, Wei, and Han, by which Tsin was ultimately dismembered. In a.o. 402, instead of the great State of Tsin we have the three marquisates of Wei, Chaou, and Han, though the descendants of K'ang-shuh continued to have nominal existence as marquises of Tsin for some years longer.]

A is variously used in Man, men. the Ch'un Ts'ëw in a way which is very perplexing to the student. (1) It is often.

the people, following the name of a State. E. g., I. iv. 6, 7: II. vi. 4; xi. 4;
III. ix. 1, 6: V. xix. 1, 4: VI. vii. 4; xiv.
7, 11, 12; xvi. 7; xviii. 3: IX. xvi. 3. In most of these, and the other instances where I have thus translated A, the meaning is accepted by most commentators. What is predicated belongs to the action, as it were, of the whole State, (2) It is often-a minister or high officer, -also following the name of a State. E.g., I. i. 5: II. xi. 1: III. vi. 1 (王人); xix. 8; xxvi. 4; xxviii. 4: V. i. 7; ii 4; iii. 5; iv. 5, 8; viii. 1 (王人; xix. 2, 7. This usage occurs passim. In many cases the meaning is obvious; in others, the meaning which immediately follows would also be suitable. (3) It often means men, equivalent to a body of men, a small military force, under the command, we may suppose, of an officer of no great distinction;—the name of the State, as before, preceding. E. g, I. ii. 2, 9; iv 4, 5 (perhaps the 2d meaning is here preferable); x. 5, 6: III. viii. 1; xix. 5; xxviii. 1: IV. i. 2; ii. 1: V. ii. 6. (4) 夫人, the wife of the prince of a State. 1. ii. 7: III. xix. 4; xx. 1; et sæpe. (5) 行 🙏, a messenger from one State to another, an envoy. IX. xi. 10; xviii. 2: X. viii. 4; xxiii. 3; et al. (6) In names.

According to the above Index, there are in the Ch'un Te'ëw no more than 952 different characters. Of these there are 181 not found in the Four Books, the Yih, the Shoo, and the She. I should have been glad to embrace in the Index the Tso Chuen as well as the text of the Ch'un Ts'ëw; but the time and labour necessary for such an undertaking were more than I could command. The following list is intended to give, under the different radicals, all the characters formed from them which are found in the Chuen in addition to those in the preceding index.
